Dorothy spoke a few words of careless greeting to him and left him alone with her father. Hardly had the door closed behind her when Stone bounded from his chair and sprang to the side of Mr. Maxwell. There was murder in his eyes.

"Curse you!" he growled. "Where is that book?"

Terror sprang into the eyes of the helpless old man, and then came a fortunate interruption. Voices sounded from outside, and Dorothy and Robert Harding appeared. Stone quickly changed his attitude and was gently stroking Maxwell's hair when the couple entered the room.

"I am going to take your father into the grounds for a little air, Miss Dorothy," he said. Catching up Maxwell's hat, to the girl's dismay, he caught the handle of the wheel chair and pushed it ahead of him.

Stone escorted Maxwell to the edge of the grounds without uttering a word, his mouth set in a hard, grim line. A gang of laborers had been at work on a rail-bridge spanning a high gully, and the bottom of which crashed an angry little torrent. Stone pushed Maxwell's chair out on to the edge of the trestle and glanced about him swiftly, debating as to the best method to force speech from the closed lips.

A man in overalls was occupied in removing some of the old planks preparatory to substituting new and stronger ones. As Stone watched him the man put on his hat and started off whistling, evidently for nails or tools to complete his task, leaving a gaping hole perhaps six feet across.

Hardly was the laborer out of sight when Stone darted toward the opening thus exposed and hastily pulled back into place the old boards, adjusting them in such a way that they would be dislodged with the slightest weight placed upon them. As Stone strolled back to the chair Dorothy and Harding appeared from the house. Stone scowled, and then, turning his back, he dropped Maxwell's hat over the bridge to determine the distance to the water below and ascertain whether the bridge would be fatal.

"I thought you might like to see Mr. Harding for a few minutes, father, before he goes. But where is your hat? You will catch cold."

"I am afraid, Miss Maxwell, that it is up to me to get your father a new hat," broke in Stanford Stone. "I accidentally knocked it off the bridge."

"Will you help me to the rescue, Mr. Harding?" asked Dorothy, pointing to the hat and ignoring Stone. Harding followed the direction of her pointing hand, saw the hat on the farther edge of the chasm-like ravine and offered his arm to the girl to help her across the bridge. She accepted with a little smile, and the two stepped out to the planks, while Stone drew back with a stolid face. If they reached the middle of the bridge the two would plunge to their deaths through the rotten planks he had arranged.

Stone calmly drew out a cigarette and lighted it. And then he dropped the match with an imprecation. Something had made Dorothy Maxwell pause suddenly, wheel squarely about and stare back at her father.

"There is something on your mind, dad!" cried Dorothy. "There is something you are trying to tell me and can't. Oh, what is it?"

For a horrible moment the lips of Maxwell worked convulsively, but no words came from them.

Again the lips of the paralytic worked with frantic eagerness, and now as the girl bent pitiously nearer she heard husky, broken words.

"Don't cross the bridge, daughter—if you—value—your—life!"

Dorothy sprang to her feet and whirled toward the spot where Stanford Stone had been standing. But he was gone.

Harding was aroused by a voice from the direction of the yard. He turned and saw the figure of a man who ordinarily would have passed as a prosperous merchant, but who was now in a plainly disheveled condition.

"My name is Burrows, John Burrows," said the newcomer, advancing and speaking in a thin, nervous voice. "I am the president of the Consolidated Milk Supply company. You are ruining me, Mr. Harding, with your ruinous price reductions in the city milk supply. I have come to ask you what terms you are willing to give and call off your dog!"

"Terms?" snapped Harding, clutching his fists. "Do you think that I would stoop to make terms with a man of your type, Burrows? You are one of the miserable, despicable grifters of the Secret Fifteen. You are a man whom every decent citizen should be ashamed to see at liberty. You are one of the men responsible for the condition of poor Bruce Larnigan and for God knows how many more crimes! I shall tear you and yours limb from limb before I am through!"

Impulsively Harding started toward the other, and quickly Burrows turned, with stark terror in his eyes, and ran straight out over the bridge! Dorothy cried out to him to come back, but the man either did not hear or was afraid to stop. On he dashed until suddenly he reached the rotten planks in the center and plunged with a wild shriek through the opening down into the chasm below.

Dorothy sank back into Harding's arms, sobbing pitiously, with the doomed man's shriek still ringing in her ears. Another of the Fifteen had paid the penalty of the Larnigan vengeance.

With the death of Burrows came the collapse, final and irrevocable, of the graft trust.

Realizing that they plotted and fought in vain against the ever-ready crusaders, Bruce and Tom Larnigan and Robert Harding, ably assisted by Dorothy Maxwell, the survivors of the formerly omnipotent Fifteen sought peace.

The terms were imposed by Bruce Larnigan, now happily recovering, and Robert Harding and were ratified by Tom Larnigan, returning from Brazil. These terms were severe, but just. All nefarious interference with the business of the country was stopped immediately. So far as possible restitution was made to the victims of the graft trust from the private fortunes of Stanford Stone, head and front of the graft trust, and his accomplices.

Naturally all this was not accomplished without much toll, for the ramifications of the graft trust's operations had extended far and wide into American life. But it was done, and then Stanford Stone, with a final imprecation on the Larnigans and all connected with them, sailed for a long vacation in South America.

Dorothy Maxwell found a loving husband in Bruce Larnigan, and the two devoted themselves to making as comfortable as possible the few remaining years of her stricken father, who had, of course, been compelled to sever all connection with business. And Tom Larnigan, returning triumphantly from South America with much important evidence of smuggling for the government's secret service, was made happy by Kitty Hartford's acceptance of his proposal.

"I am afraid, Miss Maxwell, that it is up to me to get your father a new hat," broke in Stanford Stone. "I accidentally knocked it off the bridge."

"Curse you!" he growled. "Where is that book?"

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Played With Live Wire.

During the severe windstorm of Monday of last week one of the electric arc light wires at the corner of Douglas and Lincoln streets, Boyne City, was broken. The loose wire swung back and forth, attracting the attention of two small children living nearby. They conceived the idea of a 'grapevine swing' and immediately constructed one. A neighbor saw the children and notified the Bell telephone manager, who hurried to the scene and placed the wire beyond the reach of the children, notifying the electric company, who immediately repaired it. Often the current is switched on during the daytime for various reasons and should it have been done at the time the children were enjoying their swing it would have snuffed their lives out in a flash. The wires carry a voltage of 2300. Parents should instruct their children in the dangers of live wires, for one is apt to become broken at any time during a severe storm.

Automobile Burns.

A Cadillac 7-passenger automobile valued at $1000, owned by W. T. Hoey and driven by C. A. Reynolds, caught fire and burned when a blacksmith shop in which it was stored over night was destroyed at the Richardson Lumber Company camp No. 1, at Cornwell on Pigeon River, at an early hour Sunday morning of last week while Mr. Reynolds and a number of friends were on a fishing trip on the "Big Black."

LUCIUS H. IVES

Out After the Office of Department Commander.

Lucius H. Ives, well known throughout G. A. R. circles, and now the department inspector, has thrown his hat in the ring for the office of department commander. He is a veteran of high ideals and has an excellent education. He has the endorsement of his post for the office he seeks and is known as well in the state as in his home town and surrounding country he would be immediately chosen to fill the office he seeks.

What the Ingham County Democrat says about Mr. Ives follows in part: "Colonel Ives is in every way worthy and competent for the high position he seeks and will thoroughly appreciate the efforts of his friends in his behalf. The Democrat hopes he may be successful, as it is a laudable ambition to be the head officer of an organization such as the Michigan G. A. R."

The blaze started from a bonfire which had been set early in the evening. The Alpena men retired early, leaving the fire burning. During the night the wind sprang up and the sparks of the bonfire caught in the blacksmith shop. When the sleeping Alpenaite were aroused the car was destroyed.

In the blacksmith shop were all of the company's blacksmith tools, six sets of sleighs, four pair of logging wheels and other equipment. Everything was destroyed.

Taking the Joy Out of Life.

After June 1 Cadillac women will be able to look right into pool rooms and see if their husbands are smashing the "ivories" instead of taking them to the picture show. At a special meeting of the city commission all blinds, curtains and screens in pool rooms were ordered removed, providing a full view of such buildings.

Incorporated Golf Club.

The Petoskey Golf Club has passed resolutions calling for the completion of the organization of the club and its incorporation under the laws of the state. The capital stock will be $25,000.

Put Up Socialist Ticket.

A Socialist party has been organized at Bellaire by D. W. Early of Saginaw and a number of voters have pledged support. It is planned to nominate a full ticket in Antrim county this fall.

Suffrage Notes

It is expected that 40,000 women—one per cent. of the women voters of the country—will be in the great suffrage parade in Chicago, June 7. The Republican party may not need any persuasion to put a suffrage plank in its national platform, but if it does need convincing each woman in the long line of march will count more than many petitions.

The Chicago Herald says: "Chicago learned to respect the political woman. When suffrage came probably only a minority of men approved it. But three years of experience have convinced the city. To-day nobody opposes woman suffrage who hasn't some sound reason for fearing the decency of the woman vote."

The "solid south" is breaking away from tradition on the suffrage question. The Tennessee Republican convention adopted a suffrage plank by a vote of 2 to 1 in favor.

In Arizona, where women vote, public drinking fountains, rest rooms and comfort stations have been established there, the efforts of the women in every city and town in the state. In Pinalco, New York, where woman suffrage was defeated last fall, the women through their improvement association have worked for years to secure simple civic improvements. Seven years they worked to get the town's waste paper cared for. Fifteen years they have urged without success that the city use covered garbage carts, and the women have offered to pay for the carts.

"Old John Burns of Gettysburg."

After serving in the war of 1812 and the Mexican war John Burns of Gettysburg, Pa., was rejected when he tried to enlist for the civil war on the ground that he was too old to fight. He went with the army as a teamster, however, and was constable of Gettysburg when Early's troops occupied the town. Single handed he attempted to drive the Confederates out and was locked up. In the thick of the battle he secured a gun and fought like a demon. He was captured and narrowly escaped execution.

Memorial Day's Lesson.

The power, the divine power, which furrowed the land with battlefields, sowing it deep and broadcast with sorrow, will reap thence for us and for ages a nation of freedom and free men, where tolerance shall walk hand in hand with religion, while civilization points out in patriotism the many open highways to human right and glory.—Watterson

School Commissioner's Notes

At present the big, noisy rush is over and the substitute is a steady grind, looking over 232 sets of 8th grade examination papers. Of course every boy and girl is anxious to know just how he came out, and we are, too, but it will take some time to determine the final outcome. Everything comes to those who wait, even an 8th grade examination mark.

For 8th graders who were ill confined to bed at the time of the regular examination, May 11-12th, a second examination may be arranged. According to a new ruling from the state department, the child who has been unable to attend before may request the privilege of writing at a time set by the commissioner, at the office of the commissioner, this being the only place in the county at which this second examination would be held. This does not apply to any who have already written, may be granted only on special request accompanied by a physician's statement, and cannot be given later than three weeks after the regular examination.

During the past week the following requests for full year diplomas of honor for eight months' perfect attendance without thirty marks were received: From the Hopyard school, 1; from Ironton, 1; from Clarion, 7; from Marion Center, 8; from Springvale, 2; from Chandler No. 1, 9. At the present time Three Bells is in the lead, with Chandler No. 1 second and Marion Center third.

Cream white ceilings, cream or buff walls with woodwork of a deeper shade of brown, have proved most restful to the eye and the best reflector for poor lighting conditions. The department recommends it for all schoolhouses.

Forty-nine school children have been reported to date as deserving of free tickets to the fair.

The canning demonstration by Mrs. Cowles will be held in the Pottersville grange hall June 30th. Everybody come.

THEATRICAL

Thrilling Scenes in "Rule G."

Among the wonderfully realistic scenes in "Rule G" are the wrecking of the first clubhouse with a wild engine and the narrow escape of the occupants of the building, shop accidents involving a journal lathe and a six-ton steam hammer, the demolition of a crossing of a wagon containing a farmer and his wife, the saving of two passenger trains by the automatic action of the block signal, the flight of Myra on the lineman's speeder, and the pursuit by the men on the handcar, who have in close call for their lives, the mob scene, in which hundreds of men are half drowned and driven out of the gates by four determined men using a locomotive in a way that is thrilling and marvellous to behold, and the terrific barehanded fight between Ned and Spike—a battle that is claimed to be the climax of all such struggles ever done for the film.

Realism enters into the lesser as well as the larger scenes. No such insight into a cab, for instance, was ever afforded before. The audience will be able to see with its own eyes the gravity of a trainman's responsibilities, will see how wrecks occur and why wrecks are becoming rare. It is possible to show these things only because the actors actually are railroaders. In the great scene in E. H. Harriman's office the part of Harriman is played by a man who was repeatedly mistaken for the magnate in the closing years of his life. Every detail of this scene is historically correct, and it is a significant chapter in railroad annals.

The machine shop, roundhouse, yard and mob scenes were made at the West Oakland yards of a railroad company, with the untiring aid of Assistant Master Mechanic John Kelker. Most of the road scenes made on the San Jose-Almaden branch, and most of the depot scenes at the West San Jose station. The clubhouse scenes were made at Tracy and Roseville. The interior were done in the Blazan studio at Berkeley.

At the Majestic, Friday evening, May 26th.

The Lessons of '61-5 For the Children of Today.

The children of those days saw their fathers go forth to battle amid the strains of martial music. They joined in the sorrow of those who saw them depart. They shared the anxiety and uncertainty after news of a great battle. They formed part of the group around the reader of the telegram on that terrible Sunday after Gettysburg.

They saw the father as he came home upon his furlough. They heard the bells and saw the bonfire that celebrated Richmond's fall. They saw the sad bronzed veterans return and realized again the presence of a father whom they had almost forgotten. They became burden bearers in taking up the work of one who would never return. Plans for college life were gladly given up. They realized from experience the full measure of devotion which war meant.

Is there danger that their children's children forget? Not while parents and teachers magnify these sacrifices. Teachers of history today must vivify the narrative of history until the children of today feel and resolve with those of '61.—W. H. Cheever.

FARMER NOW SEES BIG IMPROVEMENT

Johnson Tells of Benefits He Has Derived from Use of Tanlac.

Gust. Johnson, a well-known farmer and prominent citizen of Scottville, Michigan, made a very interesting statement a few days ago. He said:

"I have recently used Tanlac, the new medicine, and can endorse it highly. I have suffered from stomach trouble for a number of years and, although I tried many different kinds of medicines, I could never get any real relief. Not long ago I was advised by friends to try this new Tanlac. I got a bottle and had used it but a short time when I could see a big improvement in my condition. I have never used any medicine which did as much good in so short a time. Tanlac is certainly all right."

Tanlac is composed entirely of vegetable ingredients and contains no harmful drugs or minerals. Tanlac has won the endorsement of hundreds of Michigan people. Tanlac is proving the best thing ever known in all cases of stomach, kidney and liver trouble, rheumatism, catarrhal affections, impoverished blood, insomnia, sleep, and is a wonderful tonic and system builder.

Tanlac may be obtained here at the store of B. A. Herman.

This movement has been planned in every community in our nation. You will see it advertised in the newspapers, the schools, the factory, store and office; the moving picture houses and elsewhere. The plan adjusts itself automatically to large and small cities, counties and agricultural communities.

Many people do not always figure on how much they can save but more often figure far in advance, how they can spend their income. The active season in our city is rapidly approaching and the money-making time is coming. We desire to regenerate a great number of New Savings accounts and see the regeneration of countless numbers already opened.

You are urged to participate. If you have not been Saving with any degree of regularity, start in now. $1.00 will open an Account in our Savings Department and you add to it weekly or as often as convenient.

It is more economical to appoint us as your Executor and Trustee. When an Individual buys and sells investments for an Estate he charges the Estate with broker's commissions. DOLLAR DAY WAS A GREAT SUCCESS Streets Thronged with People During Day and Evening.

Dollar Day has come and gone, but it will be an event long to be remembered by both the members of the Charlevoix Commercial Association and the trading public.

The stores were hardly open in the morning before the bargain seekers made their appearance. Those who lived nearest to Charlevoix were the first to take advantage of the great bargains offered and as the crowd grew larger each store drew its share of patronage. During the afternoon and evening Bridge street was thronged with people, carriages and automobiles. People came for miles to obtain the great money-saving offers.

At noon the Boy Scouts gave a drill on Bridge street, which was very interesting. Manager Miles of the Majestic reports that over 700 people took advantage of the free tickets given by the merchants, and attended the afternoon show.

Thus does Dollar Day go down in history as one of the best stunts ever pulled off by Charlevoix merchants. People realized they were in earnest in the offers made and responded liberally. It is the intention of the merchants to pull off similar stunts at various times during the year.

PREVENT SPREAD OF WEEDS.

Seed Readily Carried Everywhere by the Wind—Increase Amazingly.

Farmers striving to keep their lands practically clean need a law compelling each one to take care of the most troublesome weeds. Legislation is especially needed to prevent the growing and spreading of all weeds, the seed of which is readily carried everywhere by the wind. This applies particularly to wild carrot, devil's paint brush, etc. In some localities fields are practically abandoned to weeds. Pastures often produce many noxious plants and fence rows abound with brush and weeds. If such weeds could be kept in check when grown, only a moderate damage would be done, but if they are not destroyed or mowed off the wind often scatters their seed widely. In recent years in many sections weeds have increased amazingly, and it is now impossible for any farmer alone to maintain a clean farm. Many good farmers do not try any longer to keep weeds in check, because others pay no attention to the matter. A law exists in some states and is quite generally enforced, requiring all noxious weeds along the highway to be cut twice annually. If such a law could be extended to the fields it would help matters materially, although a much more stringent law is desired.

Such a law would make it possible for careful farmers to raise clean seed, both for home use and for sale to other farmers. This in grass seed alone would soon result in a great improvement. Less weed seed would be sown, thereby decreasing the abundant crop. Legislation affecting the care of a man's farm and the crops he grows may be difficult to enforce, but it is no more so than some of the existing laws regarding fruit trees, etc. Such laws as can be rigidly enforced regarding weeds will eventually benefit all farmers, making their land more attractive, more productive and decidedly more profitable.

LIME FOR LEGUMES.

How Good Yields of Clover Have Been Secured in a New York County.

"When County Agent Lacy began work in Dutchess county, N. Y., he found the county almost destitute of leguminous crops," reads a recent record in the files of the United States department of agriculture. "Red clover was the only one with which the farmers were familiar, and they had failed so frequently in attempting to grow it that there was much discouragement. Repeated trials with alfalfa had met with almost uniform failure. Protein was purchased in the form of concentrates."

"The obvious need was home grown protein, and to secure it cheap lime and information in regard to growing various legumes were necessary. Ground limestone was being offered for sale in the county as high as $8 a ton, but very little was used at that price."

"The county agent discovered where lime could be bought cheaply enough, but the freight rates were more than the cost of the lime. After some negotiations an adjustment was secured from the railroads so that duly pulverized limestone could be delivered to nearly every station in the county at $2.50 a ton or less."

"As a result, good yields of clover have been secured this year wherever lime has been used. The successful growth of clover and other legumes is a matter of much importance to the farmers of Dutchess county."

Wreaths That Never Fade

Memorial Day Poem

By J. A. EDGERTON
Copyright, 1916, by American Press Association.

AS the May sun, warm and tender,
Shines upon the soldier's tomb,
Where the language of our sorrow
Is translated into bloom,
There, beside the floral tokens,
That may wither in a day,
Nestle garlands unobscured,
But more durable than they,
Woven from a nation's blessings,
And these will not pass away.

FOR the wreaths we fashion vanish
As the breath upon the glass,
As the forms beloved crumble
'Neath their grave roofs brave with grass.
But the deeds they did for freedom
And the things they died to save Shall remain to glorify us
While the starry flag shall wave
And be told our children's children
Till the world is in its grave.

IT is meet that in this season
Of returning sun and showers
We should come to speak their praises

In the eloquence of flowers,
But their gift was of the spirit,
And the years that lie between Render richer, nobler, holier
The heritage unseen

That they left us. This it is that keeps
Their graves forever green.

FOR they gave us of their courage,
Of their hope and of their faith,
Of their visions and their hearts' best love—

Yea, even unto death.
And this truth has been since time began

And evermore will be—
That the man most loved of men is he Who dies to make men free.

These were men of our own flesh and blood,
Who died for you and me.

THEY have wreaths that wither not nor fade,
And until war shall cease, Wherever else the world may bleed,

They gave to us their peace.
And so long as man has gratitude
And while Love has a tongue Shall the valiant fight they fought for truth

Forevermore be sung,
With their glory ever fresh and fair,
Their fame forever young.

School Reports

ECHO, DISTRICT NO. 4.

So many families have moved away that we have an enrollment of only 24.

The sixth and seventh grades have been reviewing in geography for the past week.

Ruth Carpenter spent a pleasant evening at the home of Albert Somerville Wednesday.

School closes June 7 with a picnic and a short program. Everyone is invited to attend.

Mr. Jolliffe delivered our new organ last week and we are very much pleased with it. We have also sold the old organ.

Mrs. M. Somerville has been very ill the past week, but is some improved now. Miss Rebecca Somerville is working for Mrs. Somerville for a short time.

We have finished cleaning our schoolgrounds and making our flower gardens. We set out eight nice nappies and have eight different varieties of flowers on the schoolgrounds.

The second graders have completed their review in their second readers and have begun reading in their third readers. The fourth graders have also begun the next year's work in reading.

Saturday, June 3, there will be a box social held at the Diagonal schoolhouse, the proceeds of which are to be used for the new organ. Everyone is cordially invited to attend and bring someone else with them.

Everyone is much interested in birds and flowers this spring. We have learned the names, songs and habits of four kinds of birds the past week. Friday we watched a pair of Baltimore Orioles and a pair of barn swallows, which are building a nest under the eaves of the schoolhouse.

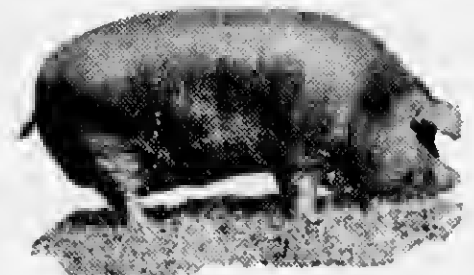

LIVE STOCK HUSBANDRY

CARE OF BROOD SOWS.

Heavy Feeding at Farrowing Time Sure to Result in Loss.

My experience with swine has been obtained largely in the handling of pure breeds, but there is one matter that has been forced upon my attention, and I believe I will pass my experience on to your readers, thinking that perhaps it may benefit some one. writes M. G. Arnold in the Iowa Homestead.

It took us years and years to learn not to overfeed at farrowing time or the first four weeks of the life of the litter. We believe there is much more harm done by overfeeding than underfeeding. There is nothing looks so good to us as a hungry hog. We make much better gains that way than have.

Duroc-Jersey hogs are valued for their constitutions and their ability to make pork cheaply. Characteristics of the Duroc-Jersey are easy feeding, quality, large heart girth. They are good rustlers in the feed lot and on grass, and the sows are prolific and are good mothers. The sow shown is a Duroc-Jersey.

ing a bunch of hogs partially stalled. We feed dry ones once a day the year round.

We had cholera shipped in to us once in thirty years. We feel proud of the fact that no one, not even our nearest neighbors, got cholera from us.

We think that is a conditioner character.

coal and ashes, salt and lime, mixed, is a good thing to keep where hogs can get at it. Copperas and sulphur or kerosene is also good at times. I am going to say we think the hog house is the biggest nuisance there is just now, and it is a sin the way they are handled around. Many farmers don't know about them. We have cleaned our herd with three or four gallons of coal oil applied with a sprinkler in the pen where they sleep. Put in lots of straw, so that what runs off will saturate the bedding. Make them sleep on this straw. Do this before you commence to breed your sows. This is the only thing I ever knew that does the business with one application.

Many a swine breeder has lost an entire crop of little pigs simply because of the mistake of overfeeding at farrowing time. Sows fed too liberally at such a time overfeed the little pigs, and in cold, damp weather this invariably means that the little fellows are scorched, and the end comes in twenty-four or at the outside forty-eight hours. Successful dairymen understand the great importance of withholding milk miking feeds for a time after a cow freshens, and the same policy should be pursued in the handling of brood sows.

ARTICHOKES FOR HOGS.

Excellent Feed For Sows With Litters In the Spring.

All of the artichokes it would eat and an ear of corn fed twice a day made a four-months pig of mine grow rapidly. The pig was penned up. I never saw a pig do so well, writes A. J. Lagg in the Farm and Fireside.

My brother turned a sow and pigs on a field of artichokes so the hogs could harvest the artichokes as they were wanted. The sow was given a moderate ration. There were blue pigs in the litter, very uniform in appearance. When these pigs were four weeks old I weighed one, and it weighed eighteen pounds.

I have used artichokes for sows with young pigs early in the spring, and I think the artichokes have a food value greater than the chemical analysis would indicate. The hogs need something of a succulent nature early in the season before they can get grass.

Sulphur as Hog Like It.

Hogs like a little sulphur, and it is good for them—in fact, they are unthrifty without it. The best ways of giving it to them, also the worst ways, have just been determined by the Iowa experiment station.

Mixing copperas (sulphate of iron) in the feed seemed to be a bad practice. It induced scouring. When pigs had free access to sulphur in different forms they liked flowers of sulphur best of all. Glauber salt (sulphate of soda) was their second choice.

One eighty-pound hog will eat of his own accord about a quarter pound of sulphur a month, and there is no danger of his eating more of it than is good for him. Let them eat what they want, but don't, except under direction of a veterinarian, put it in their food or drink. Even then don't do it unless you know him to be an exceptionally good veterinarian.

How to Drive Horses.

In making a long drive let the horses start out slowly for the first few miles. You can then increase their speed, and the trip will be made in a shorter time than if they had been driven fast at the start.

Many Kinds of Monkeys.

The ordinary reader hardly realizes how many varieties of monkeys exist. We hear of monkeys in the Indies with reddish brown bodies, black heads and faces of a sky blue. There are monkeys with white eyelids and green monkey to be found on the African continent and Cape de Verde Islands. The howlers, which inhabit South America, are large and fierce, and travelers describe their yells as absolutely appalling. So dreadful is the sound of their roarings that one would imagine that all the beasts of the forest had gathered together for a battle. These creatures are so fierce that even the most skillful and adventurous trapper is unwilling to teach them tricks.

Grateful.

"My boy," said the elderly millionaire at the end of a lecture on economy, "when I was your age I carried water for a gang of section hands." "I'm proud of you, dad," answered the spoiled youth. "If it hadn't been for your pluck and perseverance I might have had to do something of the sort myself."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

NEW PAPER PRICE LISTS NEARLY EVERY WEEK

Everything in the Manufacture of Paper Advanced.

Here is a little sample of what is taking place in the paper markets these days: About the first of the year there came to this office a new price list of several well known brands of paper made by a factory down in Massachusetts. The prices were considerably higher than had long prevailed in the old lists. During February another new list was prepared, but the prices changed before it could be mailed out, and a red line was printed across it: "These prices are advanced twenty per cent." But again there came another rise before the mailing was done, and the list that reached the office this week has a new red line changing the increase to thirty per cent.

This is but a sample of what one factory is doing. Similar notices come from other mills and jobbers every few days. The Boston News Bureau issues the following explanation:

"Bleach is scarce and has advanced enormously in price. Before the war it was $28.50 a ton, but now manufacturers of paper are paying as high as 16.5 cents a pound for it, or $330 a ton. Bleach, which is nothing else than chlorine, formerly came to the United States almost entirely from England and Germany. Not only is chlorine used as a bleach for paper and cloth, but it is now in great war demand for the manufacture of high explosives.

"Everything entering into the manufacture of paper, including the pulp itself, has advanced greatly in price. All chemicals have gone up about 50 per cent. since the war broke out. Caustic, which was chiefly imported, is about 100 per cent. higher and dyestuffs have risen 400 to 500 per cent."

One Way to Boost.

What to do to make your town clean:

- Go after the garbage.

Help to make your town healthy, wealthy and happy.

Hitch For Wire Fence.

There are numerous methods of attaching wire fencing to concrete posts. Some makers place staples or wire loops in the green concrete; others make holes in the posts. The former method is not desirable because the fastener cannot be located exactly where the wire of the fencing will come when the post is set in the ground. Then, too, the fastener will eventually rust or break off and will thus injure the looks of the post. On the other hand, holes through the posts weaken them, and therefore this method is in general unsatisfactory.

The simplest, easiest and cheapest way of fastening a wire fence to a concrete post is by encircling the post with a wire one size less than the corresponding wire in the fence proper and by twisting this wire around the strand of the fence. This is done in two ways. The fastening wire is placed around the post, twisted upon itself and then to the fence wire, or one end of the fastening wire is twisted around the fence wire, and the free end is then carried around the post and twisted on the other side to the same wire.

HITCH FOR WIRE FENCE.

crete post is by encircling the post with a wire one size less than the corresponding wire in the fence proper and by twisting this wire around the strand of the fence. This is done in two ways. The fastening wire is placed around the post, twisted upon itself and then to the fence wire, or one end of the fastening wire is twisted around the fence wire, and the free end is then carried around the post and twisted on the other side to the same wire. Either plan is good, but care must be taken to draw the fastening wire tight, or else stock trying to get through the fence may rub or crush down the fastening with their heads. If any trouble is experienced the post should be roughened at the fastening point with a cold chisel.

Expansion and contraction of the fence, due to heat and cold, are cured for by the tension curves or "kinks" in the woven wire fencing, and no fear may be felt in drawing the fastening wires as tight as necessary. Wooden walling strips should never be imbedded in the posts for moisture will swell the wood and crack the concrete.

ONWARD with halting tread and slow.

Weary and gray and glory crowned.

The heroes of our nation go Toward the eternal camping ground.

Strange though it seems, these feeble men

Are giants of a bygone age.

The record of their deeds done then

Is written large on history's page.

THAT tottering wreck up Lookout's side—

Once bore a shot torn battle flag.

This other breasted Shiloh's tide Or felt the death filled hours drag

To darkness in the Wilderness. At Gettysburg another stood.

From that red ridge of deadly stress

He helped roll back the fiery flood.

THEIR ranks are thinning fast. Each year

Time takes from them a heavier toll.

Soon will the last one's name appear Inscribed upon death's muster roll.

In meeting crises of today May we, their sons, be ever leal To cause and country, as were they

Who battled for their nation's weal.

The Debt We Owe

(From Memorial address delivered by George B. Nelson at Amherst, Wis., May 20, 1903.)

DO we today fully realize as we scatter flowers upon the graves of soldiers dead the debt we owe these men who sleep beneath the sod? I trust we do and that in some small way each one of us each year we live may do some service which will make our institutions better and our great republic true.

To the Union soldiers, to the members of the Grand Army of the Republic, is due the credit for carrying our country triumphantly through her greatest crisis. Other trying times have been, but they are all incomparable with the one they saw and met. Secession was the deadliest foe that reared its head above the horizon of our nation. To have permitted separation then would have resulted in our utter annihilation. To have allowed the southern states to go in peace would have been to blast our every national hope and place destruction in our path. Their valor and the lives of their dead comrades preserved to their posterity and the world the manifold blessings of a great free republic. The debt posterity owes them can be paid only by a thousand years of almost sacred devotion to their country.

Robbing or Saving the Soil.

The farmer who robs his soil is sawing off the limb upon which he is sitting. Your deed calls for the subsoil as well as the surface soil, and the subsoil is a mine of fertility and a well of water if properly utilized. Lime is the one thing most needed by the average rundown soil. Phosphorus, next to lime, is the mineral plant food probably most needed by the average unproductive soil. Manure as regularly as you harvest. Stable manure is the best form of fertilizer. Where stable manure is not available green manure must be used. Proper tillage becomes more important as the farm grows older until on "worn out" farms it is a factor of chief importance. Tillage gives the crop more soil surface on which to feed without increasing your taxes, makes existing plant food more available, gives air to the roots, regulates water supply and kills weeds. Where the land lacks natural drainage everything else depends on how thoroughly the soil is stirred.

MIDNIGHT BLAZE.

Two Barns on North Side Burned
With Part of Contents.

Fire originating from an unknown source destroyed a barn used for a summer home and the workshop owned by John Smith and the barn across the alley owned by Eugene Bedwin, located on the alley between Nicholls and Lewis streets, on the north side, about midnight Tuesday.

The fire was first discovered in the Smith workshop and had gained considerable headway before the arrival of the fire department. Houses within a radius of from 300 to 500 feet were set on fire from sparks and burning shingles several times, and kept the fire ladders busy. The blaze was a spectacular one and looked from a distance as if the entire block was on fire.

In the building burned on the Smith property practically all the contents were destroyed. A considerable amount of furniture stored in the Bedwin barn was removed and saved. The property loss was covered by insurance.

It is better to have insurance and not need it than to need it and not have it. See Myrtle Young & Son about it at once.

The higher officers of the Grand Encampment were elevated Wednesday morning. G. Henry Horn of Detroit, Grand High Priest, became Grand Patriarch. Frederick W. Mayne of Charlevoix became Grand High Priest. Isaac G. Reynolds of Ann Arbor, Grand Scribe, and Frank Shepherd of Cheboygan, Grand Treasurer, retained their offices.—Petoskey Evening News.

The Earliest Maps.

It was among the Egyptians that the first maps appeared. They were wooden tablets on which land and sea, roads and rivers, were fairly accurately outlined. The evidence of such maps is not only furnished in the old Egyptian papyrus rolls, but some of the actual maps have been discovered. It was once contended that the Greeks were the inventors of the art of cartography, but it has been proved that the Egyptians and Babylonians antedated them in this respect some 2000 years or more.

PAYS TRIBUTE TO JUDGE MAYNE

HAS DEMONSTRATED HIS ABILITY AS JURIST.

Unbiased in Rendering Decisions and Believes in Giving Prisoners Chance to Make Good.

The American Eagle Bulletin, one of the leading I. O. O. F. publications, pays the following tribute to our fellow citizen, Judge Frederick W. Mayne. There is little comment we can make on the article other than to give it our hearty endorsement, which about covers the sentiment of everyone in this district, as well as where the judge has occupied the bench and handled court matters. The article is as follows:

"The subject of this sketch is one of the many good men who have come to Michigan from New York state. After becoming a resident he graduated from the University of Michigan and began the practice of law in Charlevoix, in which city he has continued to reside until the present time. Frederick W. Mayne, the lawyer, seems to have been on good terms with the people, at least, he was elected to several important offices, including prosecuting attorney and judge of probate. A vacancy occurring in the office of circuit judge, he received the appointment, and later was elected by the people and is now serving his third successive term.

"Judge Mayne commenced his life right by joining Round Lake Lodge, No. 293, I. O. O. F., at the earliest date possible and prior to his graduation. He has been an active Odd Fellow during the entire years of his manhood, has filled practically every office in the Subordinate Lodge and Encampment, and is now Grand Senior Warden of the Grand Encampment of the State of Michigan.

"As a lawyer Judge Mayne was eminently successful. As a judge he demonstrated his ability as a jurist. He is learned in the law and possessed of a judicial temperament. Impressed with the true spirit of Odd Fellowship, into the abstract principles of the law he breathed the breath of life and he became a living vital force and adapted to the wants of society. Following the letter of the law and observing precedent when established, questions open to construction have always been decided upon broad and fundamental principles of universal right and justice. We have heard the criticism that "the higher courts were too far removed from the people." This criticism Judge Mayne has done much to remove. Under his administration of the law the people have come to feel that the court is a place where justice is to be administered and that they can submit their grievances with the assurance that their interests will be duly considered.

"During the past few years a new system of dealing with the law violators has come into existence. We now realize that the penalty provided by statute cannot be automatically applied, that we should consider the offender as well as the offense and that the punishment is intended to do justice to the individual. As might be expected, Judge Mayne was one of the first to take up the work of so administering the law that the reformation of the individual should be considered in every sentence imposed. He believes that, while we must punish the lawbreaker, at the same time the punishment should be with the idea of reforming when possible. Judge Mayne is today recognized as one of the leaders of the great work of criminal reform. Society must be protected. In most cases it can be best protected by reforming the offender. As a result, under the present system of probation, a great many, especially young men, have been saved, rescued from the criminal class and made good citizens. The people of the State of Michigan have been saved thousands of dollars in taxes, and the mothers, the wife and sisters of the often unfortunate, but not criminal, have been spared the disgrace of a prison sentence and the individual convicted restored to a life of usefulness. Under Judge Mayne's administration of the law, of the nearly 200 admitted to probate, less than a score have violated the law after probation. Our present system of probation, as applied in Judge Mayne's court, is in accord with the spirit of fraternity, and therefore in harmony with the teachings of our order. "Judge Mayne is a candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan at the next Republican state convention. Wherever he is known he is receiving the enthusiastic support of the people. His elevation to the bench of the highest court of the state would be a fitting reward for a life spent in the interests of mankind."

PROGRAM CARRIED OUT.

Memorial Day Fittingly Observed and Graves of Dead Decorated.

The program prepared for Decoration Day was carried out and the day generally observed throughout the city. The parade formed on Bridge street at 10:00 o'clock and marched to the cemetery. The old soldiers and members of the W.R.C. went in conveyances and automobiles, and the school children, in charge of various teachers, made the parade a most imposing one.

The Boy Scouts were out in full force and during the services at the cemetery formed a circle in front of the speakers' stand. The usual custom of decorating the graves was followed out and the day proved one of the best in years.

Auction Sale.

CHARLEVOIX TIED FOR FIFTH PLACE

IN NORTHERN MICHIGAN TRACK MEET SATURDAY.

Traverse City Won Meet With 33 Points—Petoskey Second and Harbor Springs Third.

The Charlevoix high school track team tied with East Jordan for fifth place in the Northern Michigan track meet at Boyne City Saturday afternoon of last week.

Traverse City high school won the meet with the best balanced team that school has had in many years, getting 33 points and taking eleven places in the various events. Petoskey was second with 23 points, Harbor Springs third with 20 points, Boyne City fourth with 12 points, Charlevoix and East Jordan tied for fifth with 10 points, and Pellston a zero.

The track was muddy and slow because of the hard rains of Friday night and many of the events had to be held on the grass of the baseball field.

The various teams showed more finished athletes than have been seen at any meet in Northern Michigan in four years and better records were made in the various events.

The shot was put 40 feet, the greatest distance in four years. The pole vault was captured at nine feet and eight inches, which is also the best record in four years in this section.

Events in which members of the Charlevoix track team were winners are as follows:

100 yards dash—Hampton, third. 440 yards run—Hampton, second; Pierce, third.

Pole vault—Butler, first. One half mile relay—Wonby team composed of Hampton, Mason, Kruulik and Taggart. Time, 1:41½.

PLANS FOR BIG CELEBRATION

CHARLEVOIX TO OBSERVE THE FOURTH OF JULY.

Committees Now Hard at Work Planning to Give Visitors Entertainment and Amusement.

Charlevoix will celebrate the 4th of July this year, the first time in the past eight years. In our last issue it was announced that a committee had been named to solicit funds, and to date enough has been pledged to insure the announcement that the day will be observed in this city.

In less than two hours enough money had been pledged to meet the necessary expenses. Practically every business firm and citizen was heartily in favor of the celebration, and have the thanks of the committee for liberally responding in their donations. In obtaining this amount but a small percentage of those who will donate were solicited, the object of the committee being to ascertain whether or not it was the desire of the citizens to have a celebration.

It is the plan of those in charge to have a real live celebration, and not a half-hearted event. While we are not as yet able to name the chief attractions, it is a foregone conclusion that everything possible will be done to make the day one not soon to be forgotten.

The usual street sports, water sports, parade, etc., are planned as features of the celebration. Plenty of music and other entertainment will also be cared for, and other stunts that will be both amusing and entertaining are planned for. At a later date a complete program will be published in these columns.

STREAMS ARE AGAIN RESTOCKED

RAINBOW AND BROOK TROUT FINGERLINGS PLANTED.

Charlevoix Rod and Gun Club Receives Several Shipments of Fish Fry and Fingerlings.

The members of the Charlevoix Rod and Gun Club are to be commended for the work they are doing in the line of restocking the streams and lakes in this vicinity.

On Thursday of last week a consignment of 5,000 rainbow fingerlings and 10,000 brook trout fingerlings were received on the afternoon train. The rainbows were planted in the headwaters of the Paddock creek and the brook trout in the headwaters of McGeagh's creek. This is the second time these streams have been restocked this year, and other shipments may be received later for the other trout streams in this vicinity.

Wednesday morning word was received that a shipment of 15,000 walleyed pike from the United States government and 10,000 from the state hatchery at Northville would arrive in the city on the afternoon train. This batch of fry will be planted in Susan Lake and other lakes nearby. As previously stated in these columns, the object of the club is to restock the lakes and streams adjacent to Charlevoix each year, thus furnishing good fishing water not only for local fishermen but to the many who come to Charlevoix each season to spend the summer.

CONVENTION HAD GOOD ATTENDANCE

CHARLEVOIX CHOSEN FOR THE NEXT MEETING PLACE.

Many Excellent Numbers on Program Rendered—Officers Elected for Ensuing Year.

The 25th annual convention of the Charlevoix County W. C. T. U. was held in the M. E. church at Boyne City on Wednesday and Thursday, May 24 and 25. Mrs. Alcox of Charlevoix, county president, led all the sessions with her usual calmness and sweetness of manner. Mrs. P. J. Howard of Petoskey, district president, was present and rendered most efficient help at all times. The first part of Wednesday afternoon was occupied with preliminary arrangements, business, etc.

Mrs. Sara Wilkinson led the memorial service for three members who have passed on—Mrs. Harriet McCartney of Charlevoix, and Mrs. Demerest and Mrs. Boice of Boyne City. Miss Coltrins gave a fine talk on suffrage, which was greatly appreciated, as she has recently returned from California. Greetings came to us from Mrs. A. M. Burdick of Charlevoix and Mrs. Heston of East Jordan, who were unable to be present. Mrs. Howard, on the topic of "Reminiscences," showed that all things work together for good to them that love God.

The resolutions committee of Mesdames Clemens of East Jordan and Sudman of Boyne City being unable to act, Mesdames Wilkinson of Charlevoix and Burdick of East Jordan were appointed in their places. It was suggested that each member of the convention who was acquainted with Mrs. Grigsby of Morrice, Michigan, send her a card as a token of remembrance.

The evening program—after the singing of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and devotionals led by Rev. Mr. Duffy of Boyne City—consisted of three-minute greetings from Dr. Marshall in behalf of the city, Rev. Mr. Gleason for the churches, Supt. McIntosh for the schools, Mrs. Houghton for the civic league, Mrs. Furman for the federation of women's clubs, Mrs. F. White for the M. E. Women's Club and Mrs. Cory for the local union, all of whom spoke many hopeful and inspiring words of encouragement and welcomed the convention to their hearts and homes.

Mrs. Burdick of East Jordan, in a few well chosen words, responded to the greetings given. Miss May Stewart of East Jordan, school commissioner, gave a very fine address on the reason why, which contained some very remarkable views on "Why We Should Have Prohibition." The only regret we have is that there were so few of the male sex to hear her convincing arguments.

Miss Scott of Boyne City gave a recitation, "Patsy's Three Lost Years." She impersonated the teacher and poor little crippled Patsy who had lost three years on account of the abuse of a drunken father. Miss Scott is a born impersonator and held her audience spellbound during the recitation.

Little Miss Sudman gave a short recitation entitled "The Kitten and the Butterfly."

The customary advance season runs of the "resort special" will be made from Chicago, June 2, 6, 9, 13 and 16, and from Detroit and Toledo, June 16, with practically the same schedules as in 1915. The Chicago, Toledo and Detroit sections consolidate in Grand Rapids, leaving the latter city at 11:55 p. m. and arriving in Traverse City at 5 a. m., at Charlevoix at 7 a. m., at Petoskey at 7:50 a. m., and Bay View at 8 a. m. Returning, the train leaves Bay View at 6:35 p. m., Petoskey 6:40 p. m., Charlevoix 7:10 p. m., and Traverse City 9:30 p. m. The "resort special" will carry a twelve section drawing room sleeping car between Chicago and Traverse City and will extend service to Sutton's Bay, Omena and Northport over the T. C. L. & M., beginning June 19. A new train, No. 5, will run week days from Toledo, Detroit and Grand Rapids for Traverse City.

FARMERS URGED TO ORGANIZE

DAIRY ASSOCIATION DOING A GREAT WORK.

County Agricultural Agents in the State are Helping Organize Associations.

Dean Russell of the College of Agriculture of Wisconsin is authority for the statement that, next to the Babcock test, the greatest help to dairying in Wisconsin has been the dairy association. Anyone who is acquainted with the wonderful work of the Livingston County Holstein Association will admit at once that this statement also applies to Michigan.

Realizing the necessity of such organizations for the highest success in dairying, the county agricultural agent for Saginaw county helped his farmers organize what is known as the Saginaw Valley Holstein-Friesian Association. Although this organization is less than a year old, it already has a large membership and is exercising a powerful influence in the development of dairying in that county.

In August, County Agent Robinson arranged for an excursion of the Saginaw association to Livingston county to visit that famous organization. More than a hundred farmers went from Saginaw county by automobile and by train. The men from these two associations sat down to dinner together, and after dinner the Livingston county farmers took their automobiles and six parties were formed, visiting about twenty herds each. It was a big day for the visiting organization. It taught them the great purpose of organization, such as the stimulus received from others in the same business, the need of a high class, standard product, and the value of associated effort in advertising that product and in being able to supply the best markets in car lots with a product as fine as human skill has yet produced.

HAND TORN OFF BY RUNAWAY TEAM

ARTHUR BEATTIE SERIOUSLY INJURED TUESDAY.

Caught Between Wagon and Train and Sustains Injuries Which May Prove Fatal.

While drawing away brush in his orchard just south of the Vosburg hill when the accident happened. He was driving a team of young horses and drawing away accumulated brush after trimming the trees in the orchard. It was between five and six o'clock and he had loaded the wagon and was about to start for home, when the team became frightened and started to run. Mr. Beattie grabbed the lines, which were lying on the ground, and attempted to stop the team. He was dragged some distance and the team ran into a tree.

As near as can be ascertained, Mr. Beattie received his injuries by being caught between the tree and the wagon. His left arm was broken at the wrist and the hand nearly torn off, and his left leg badly shattered below the knee. It is thought that when the wagon struck the tree his hand was caught between the tree and the wagon, the impact breaking and tearing off the hand, which, when he was found by a hired man who was working a short distance away, hung to the arm by a few shreds of torn flesh. Whether his leg was broken at this time is not known, as he was dragged some distance by the team before coming in contact with the tree.

Medical assistance was immediately summoned and the injured man taken as comfortable as possible and taken to the Petoskey hospital, accompanied by Dr. R.B. Armstrong. Here the hand was amputated and the badly shattered leg placed in a plaster paris cast. Mr. Beattie stated that the accident happened so quickly that he can hardly tell how it occurred. His thought was to stop the team from running away, and the hand in which he held the lines was the one torn off when he came in contact with the tree.

The injuries are of a serious nature and will lay him up for many months. However, it is thought that unless complications set in he will fully recover from the severe shock.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Clarion Pioneer Dead.

Hiram A. Bixby, one of the pioneer homesteaders in this region and who came here from southern Michigan 42 years ago, died Tuesday of last week at the home of his son, Oscar Bixby, on a farm east of Clarion six miles. He was 70 years old.

He was the father of Oscar Bixby, well known farmer, and Clayton Bixby, owner and proprietor of Fern Cottage resort on Walloon Lake. His wife died about six months ago.

Mr. Bixby was born in Maine, November 4, 1846, and came to Michigan when a young man. He was married in Lansing to Miss Rosina Munro 49 years ago and came with his family to this region in 1874.

He was one of the pioneer homesteaders near Clarion and after about twenty years on the farm moved to Walloon Lake. He lived there until about five years ago, when he made his home in Grand Rapids and with his sons. The funeral was held Wednesday from the Methodist church at Clarion.

Claims the Banner Trout.

The M. & N. E. station agent at Grayling landed a rainbow trout recently that he thinks will hold the record for many seasons to come. It weighed seven pounds and six ounces and measured 28 1/2 inches. He only succeeded in landing it after a two hour fight, which he finally accomplished by beaching it. This is a pretty big yarn, but is vouched for by a number of persons who saw the identical fish on exhibition at a local market.

Run Over by Load Roller.

John Brighter of South Milton was seriously hurt last Tuesday morning. While riding a heavy field roller the tongue of the roller broke and he was thrown to the ground in front of the roller and lay with his face buried in the sand for two hours before he was discovered. His shoulder was dislocated, a rib broken and his face and hands bruised. The sand saved his life, yet it is a wonder he was not smothered by it. He is doing well.

Central Lake Lady Dead.

Mrs. Corene Gibson, wife of Arthur J. Gibson of Central Lake, and who went to Petoskey about four weeks ago for surgical and medical treatment, died there late Wednesday from throat trouble.

WHAT'S THE REASON?

Many Charlevoix People in Poor Health Without Knowing the Cause.

There are scores of people who drag out a miserable existence without realizing the cause of their suffering. Day after day they are racked with backache and headache; suffer from nervousness, dizziness, weakness, languor and depression. Perhaps the kidneys have fallen behind in their work of filtering the blood, and that may be the root of the trouble. Look to your kidneys, assist them in their work—give them the help they need. You can use no more highly recommended remedy than Doan's Kidney Pills—endorsed by people all over the country and by your neighbors in Charlevoix.

Mrs. M. Olney, 310 West Huribut street, Charlevoix, says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills a valuable kidney remedy. I have taken them several times for kidney complaint and severe backaches and have been greatly benefited. SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES Picnicking everywhere. A restful vacation to all.

Pleasant Valley buys a new drinking fountain. The old one is out of commission.

The Walker school is going to get there. Plans are under way and motion carried to make their school a "Standard" school.

The Slaughter school picnic was May 26th. Another good time gone by and a treat that couldn't keep.

Teachers having students not absent or tardy for the last three months should send their names in at once to the commissioner or to Mr. Dwight Wilson, secretary of the fair in East Jordan.

Corene Harris was born August 10, 1867, in Wayne county, Indiana, and resided there for some time with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Harris. With her husband she went to Central Lake 17 years ago.

She was an active member of the Methodist church of that place. Her sister-in-law, Mrs. Alice J. Harriman, is a well known resident of Petoskey.

The body was taken to Central Lake Thursday morning and the funeral held from the Methodist church there, Friday.

Compliment to Charlevoix K. P.'s.

Pellston Knights of Pythias, who had been looking forward to a big time, were not disappointed Tuesday night of last week, when a class of fifteen were initiated into the first degree by Grand Chancellor Sharpe of the Soo and Grand Keeper of Records and Seal Will Hampton of Charlevoix, assisted by Knights from Cheboygan and the Charlevoix first degree team, said to be the best in the state. About 35 drove over from Cheboygan and 20 from Charlevoix, besides visitors from around the region.

The ceremonies commenced in the K. of P. hall, and at 9 o'clock all adjourned to the opera house, where the story of Damon and Pythias was presented by the Charlevoix team to an audience of 300, composed of the families and friends of the local members of the order. The flawless performance of the visiting brothers from Charlevoix, attired in beautiful and elaborate robes, drew the most favorable comment and left an impression that will never be forgotten by the witnesses.—Pellston Journal.

Drives Husband to the Woods.

Mrs. Lorina Isham of Pleasantview township was taken to the hospital at Traverse City on Wednesday of last week by Sheriff and Mrs. Will Purple and will receive treatment there.

Mrs. Isham went violently insane a short time ago and is alleged to have driven her husband to the woods with a club. A short time later she noticed a neighbor woman passing and ran out and gave her a bad beating.

She showed no signs of violence while being taken to the hospital, says Sheriff Purple. This is her second trip there.

Miss Ethel Crowell has been engaged to teach in Afton next year.

Mr. Frank Osborne will be principal on the west side in East Jordan.

The Tainter school closed May 19 with a picnic dinner and evening program. There is no doubt but that a very enjoyable time was enjoyed by all. The commissioner regrets that the invitation arrived too late for even an aeroplane to make the grade.

Miss Marcia Goss of the county normal has been secured to teach the Star school the coming year.

Mr. Earnest Howe will return to Heart Lake.

Rock Elm closed Tuesday, May 23, with a program and neighborhood gathering. The social center idea is growing rapidly here.

The new office stationery is headed with the motto "For Our Boys and Girls, the Future of Tomorrow."

Miss Muriel Kerry will teach in Pleasant Valley next year.

GLYCERINE AND BARK PREVENTS APPENDICITIS

The simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler-ika, astonishes Charlevoix people. Because Adler-ika acts on BOTH lower and upper bowel, ONE SPOONFUL relieves almost ANY CASE constipation, sour stomach or gas. It removes such surprising foul matter that a few doses often relieve or prevent appendicitis. A short treatment helps chronic stomach trouble. The INSTANT, easy action of Adler-ika is astonishing. SUFFRAGE NOTES

"Women are the heaviest taxpayers. It is they who do the family marketing, and the beef trust, the oil trust, the coal trust and the ice trust tax them all the time. I firmly believe that when women have the ballot we shall have better laws and better protection for marriage, motherhood and the home."—Mrs. Emmy Evald in Woman's Journal.

"The decision of national issues will be, after the war, in the hands of women as well as men," says Principal Gilbert Slater of Oxford University. Henceforth women will count, and they will count more and more."

Only about one registered voter in ten cast his ballot at the presidential primaries in Vermont. Yet no one argues that because nine-tenths of the men did not vote, were too indifferent to vote, that therefore the ballot should be forbidden to all men. Yet if one woman says she does not care to vote, the conclusion is hastily reached that * * * Women can keep a secret! In fact, according to Prof. Hugo Munsterburg of Harvard University, "men of affairs select women for secretaries because women are more loyal, sink their personalities in their employer's interest and serve his business with devotion which a man's egotism will not permit him to display."

The Minneapolis Journal says: "There goes another popular superstition. As a matter of fact, women are the real receivers of confidence. The secrets are all in their keeping. The proof is not in what they keep, but in the surprisingly few things, out of all they know, that they disclose. Where one man is discommoded or ruined by a woman's reticence a hundred owe to woman's reticence their welfare."

"A housecleaning is needed in politics and it is the hand that has held the broom for generations that best knows how to do it. In Illinois the women closed 1000 saloons at the first election after they got the ballot."—Mrs. Emmy Evald in the Woman's Journal.

Thursday morning was given over to business and the reading of two papers, "Preparedness," by Mrs. O. F. Root of Boyne City, which convinced us that we should prepare for prohibition and some of the best methods of preparedness. Mrs. Hull gave a well written paper on "Purity," which contained many interesting thoughts on that important subject. Good reports were read from the different unions in the county. As this was the silver anniversary of our county organization, Mrs. Howard suggested that we make Mrs. Alcox a life member of the W. C. T. U. by the payment of $10 into the state treasury, and it was so voted by the convention.

The corresponding secretary was requested to send letters of greeting and sympathy to Mesdames Richardson and Cameron of Norwood, also a letter of greeting to Mrs. Heston of East Jordan in appreciation of past services, who were prevented by illness from attending this convention. After noontide prayer by Mrs. Hall of East Jordan, Charlevoix extended an invitation to entertain the convention in 1917 and the gathering adjourned to meet at that place in one year.

Boyer City has the thanks of the delegates for the abundant entertainment given them.

Officers were elected for next year as follows: President, Mrs. Jennie Alcox; vice-president, Mrs. Mable Hall; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Sara Wilkinson; recording secretary, Mrs. Anna Burdick; treasurer, Mrs. Anna Cory.

NEW ROAD LAWS ARE NEEDED NOW

TRAFFIC LAWS SHOULD BE CHANGED AT ONCE.

Introduction of Autos and Trucks Has Revolutionized the Use of the Public Highways.

Nothing is more evident than that the traffic rules of Michigan need radical revision. The development of the auto industry, with the rapidly growing number of machines in use, over 500 in Charlevoix county; the substitution of heavy trucks capable of carrying almost any load; the growing tendency of those hauling loads with horses to put on enormous loads because they think they can haul them over the improved highways; the growing danger due to rapid locomotion with autos—all these and many other reasons call for a complete revision of our traffic rules. Laws and customs which are all right for vehicles moving at the rate of ten miles an hour or wagons carrying a ton are utterly inadequate for autos moving at the rate of 20 to 30 miles an hour carrying several tons.

The Courier understands that the farmers of the entire state are being aroused to the great importance of this question and that the State Granges and the Pomona granges of Michigan are interesting themselves in this matter. A prominent farmer of this county recently called the attention of the Courier to the fact that the passage in wet weather of heavy trucks carrying big loads and heavily loaded wagons drawn by several horses had so cut up a good gravel road past his place that it would be necessary to entirely rebuild it this spring, although last year it was in good condition.

He also furnished the Courier with the new "Traffic Rules and Regulations" of our sister state of Ohio, which went into effect last December, and directed our attention to the following section of the law in reference to heavy traffic:

Section 1—No traction engine or other vehicle whose wheels have tires equipped with lugs, spikes, chains or other projections, seriously destructive to the surface, shall be driven over the road. (13421-12 G. C.)

Section 2—No vehicle or load the total width of which is greater than 12 feet shall be operated or drawn over a road unless said greater width will leave one-half the road free for passing vehicles.

Section 3—Not more than 3400 pounds, including weight of vehicle, shall be transported over a gravel, macadam or stone road in a vehicle having a tire less than three inches in width. (7477 G. C.)

Section 4—For vehicles having tires three inches and over in width the load on any wheel per lineal inch of width of tire on any road shall not exceed 600 pounds and during such time as the road surface is soft because of thawing or because of excess rains, the load per lineal inch of width of tire on any wheel shall not exceed 300 pounds on gravel or macadam roads. Section 5—Trailers used in hauling over the roads shall be so connected that the wheels of no two will follow in the same tracks. Section 6—No vehicle carrying a load in excess of 15 tons shall be moved over the road except under the written permission of the state highway commissioner. We have in the past attempted to revise our traffic laws piecemeal. What we need now is a complete revision and the collection of all traffic laws into a clear, succinct and comprehensive code.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.
(Ruth Chellia)
A number of the normal students have their schools already for next year.

Miss Edna Strigley, a graduate of 1914, made a brief visit to the normal room last Monday.
Rev. Quinton Walker visited the normal class last week and gave a very helpful talk on the benefits of the normal training to young teachers.

June 2 is the last day of school for the normal class this year. The class day and commencement exercises will be held in the Congregational church Wednesday and Thursday evenings at 8 o'clock.

The annual picnic of the normal class and training room was held in the normal room last Friday afternoon owing to the fact that an untimely shower prevented them going to the beach, as had been planned.

The normal class and training room children were greatly honored last Friday by a talk from Mrs. Morris Stockman, the first pioneer school teacher in Charlevoix. Her talk was of the pioneer days and it gave us a picture of the many hardships and also some of the humorous events which took place in the early days.

ASK ONE CENT LETTER POSTAGE

HAS ATTRACTED THE ATTENTION OF CONGRESS.

Publishers of Newspapers in Smaller Towns Do Not Get an Even Break—Change Desired.

One cent letter postage is attracting the attention of congress, fifty bills calling for the inauguration of a one cent rate on local delivery letters having been introduced.

Many newspapers throughout the country are warmly advocating the lower rate and the inauguration of a so-called "zone" system for the transportation of periodical literature of all kinds. At the present time the great bulk of mail being carried distances under second class rates is furnished by the magazine publishers of the large eastern cities. Train load after train load of magazines are sent out to all parts of the country at a cost of one cent a pound, although it has been estimated by postal experts that it costs over eight cents a pound to deliver such literature.

This, it is claimed, is manifestly unfair to the publishers of newspapers in local territories, who are required to pay the same rate for transportation of their products. It is proposed, and will become part of the readjustment of postage rates when such are made, that a zone system be established so that a certain rate shall be charged for all classes of publication for the first 50 miles, another for 50 to 150 miles, another for 150 to 300 miles, and so up to a haul which would extend across the continent. In this way the publishers of big magazines would be required to pay the government what it actually costs to transport their product.

Under the present rate the United States mails transport such magazines as Leslie's at an average of 1000 miles at the same rate they would charge a newspaper for the average haul of 50 miles. This means a large subsidy for Leslie's Weekly, amounting to about $400,000 per annum. Some of the other magazines, having a much larger circulation, benefit to a much greater degree. When it is considered that Leslie's Weekly charges over $1200 per page per single issue for its advertising space, and that one-half or more of the periodical is taken up with advertising, it hardly seems fair to users of letter postage and to newspaper publishers that they should pay the government a profit of 100 per cent when none of it is used to defray general expenses of the department, but goes instead to take care of the deficit created by the loss incurred in distributing these magazines at one cent a pound, a rate which is almost a franking privilege.

Newspapers which should properly represent the territory in which they are published, and carry the advertisements of the nationally advertised products in their territories, are seldom considered nowadays in the distribution of big advertising appropriations. The money goes rather to huge magazine corporations which are growing fabulously rich, and which pay only a fraction of the cost to the government for the service furnished them.

The reason one large magazine business is paying profits may be

Why We Are Opposing A Government Armor Plant

To the People:

Some people say that the very fact that the Bethlehem Steel Company is so aggressively fighting the proposal to build a Government armor plant is conclusive proof that the Company is seeking to assure for itself the "vast profits" derived from private manufacture.

The fact is that armor making is the least profitable feature of steel manufacture.

The reason we oppose a Government plant is very simple. It is this:

Even though there is but little profit in the making of armor, we have invested over $7,000,000 in our armor plant;

That plant is useless for any other purpose; if a Government plant is built the usefulness of our plant is destroyed.

It would be good business for us to make armor for the Government at any price over and above the actual shop cost, RATHER THAN SACRIFICE OUR ENTIRE INVESTMENT.

We do not seek to save big profits; our purpose is very frankly to save our armor plant—itsself built solely for the use of the Government—from going to the scrap heap.

To do that, we are prepared to agree for any period to any terms of manufacture which the Federal Trade Commission shall say absolutely protects the Government of the United States.

ALL SORTS OF MONEY.

The Courier or any other paper in Charlevoix county probably can get all sorts of money from the liquor dealers' association to come out against the prohibition amendment to the constitution. Yes, even easier than that, newspapers are offered free articles, free plate matter, and will be offered all sorts of paid ADVERTISING against prohibition. A big advertising firm in Detroit recently wrote the Courier suggesting that they had something good for us from an organization opposed to prohibition.

The Courier is not alone. It is understood that a $4,000,000 corruption fund has been raised and will be spent liberally to "defeat prohibition." Yet "prohibition does not prohibit," "more liquor is drunk in dry states than in wet," etc., etc., so we suppose the liquor interests would have us infer that by aiding the saloon and brothel for so much per we are really aiding the cause of temperance. Those brewers, distillers and saloon keepers who put up $4,000,000 to defeat prohibition are really trying to stop the sale of the products they themselves produce and handle. Oh, pish, piffle, again piffle. No sane man believes such nonsense.

The Home Rule League is an innocent looking name, but it is only fair that Courier readers should know what it stands for. These words correctly interpreted would be "The Hell Ruled Legion." If not already in circulation, petitions will soon be passed around for signatures for the submission of an amendment to the constitution of the state repealing local option by counties and substituting therefor local option by cities, villages and townships. Reader, if you sign such a petition you are thereby helping the cause of the saloon. Which do you prefer, local option by counties by which we can shut the whole vile business out of a county, or saloons in one township or village while all around it is dry? Do you not see that the whole scheme is to kill local option and by adopting a small unit make all prohibition so onerous as to bring back free whiskey or license? It is the last desperate expedient of the saloon forces. Kill this. Refuse to sign any such petition.

A vote for prohibition would not repeal local option by counties if it lost, but a successful vote for a smaller unit did repeal the local option law in Ohio, and doubtless is designed to have the same effect here.

The liquor cause has all sorts of money to use in this desperate struggle. The temperance cause has little. The Courier is uncompromisingly FOR the cause of temperance and decency, for the happiness of our homes and firesides, for our boys and our girls, uncompromisingly AGAINST the insidious foe which would pollute and degrade both.

FARMERS AND DUDELETS.

"Oh, he's just a farmer out here in the country."

We stood on a street corner the other day and heard that remark passed by one of the "brilliant" young masculine striplings of our town as he "hummed" the makings from a friend.

The farmer, to be sure, was just a farmer "out here in the country." He wore overalls and drove his wagon into town, but at home his automobile rested snugly in the garage. He owns one of the most valuable farms in this whole section of the state. His home life is ideal and his wife and children have everything they desire. His simple word is as good as his check, and his check would be honored for a sum that might stagger you.

He is a man, a real man, a man whom other men acknowledge to be a man among men, even if he is "just a farmer out here in the country."

But what of the stripling, what of the dudelet?

He is just one of the numerous class who always know everything and never do anything, who amount to nothing and are worth less. He is just a dudelet, and it is doubtful if he ever attains to the "dignity" of being a real dude.

Yes, he is "just a farmer out here in the country," but he is our friend, he is everybody's friend, and time may prove him to be the "friend in need" of the poor, vapid, brainless dudelet.

We need a thousand more just like him—this man who is "just a farmer out here in the country" and whom we are proud to know as our friend. Poor, deluded dudelet! May he never be worse!

The so-called "protocol" which Wilson has approved in the Mexican business is one which can be claimed as a victory for both sides. The Mexicans can say that our troops are being withdrawn, while Wilson can say that they are still there. In the end it is Carranza who will have the complete victory, however, for the troops will be out of Mexico very soon. They will come out without Villa "dead or alive," without any reputation for the attack on the town of Columbus and without any tangible or other evidences of success.

Mr. Wilson wants congress to hurry up and adjourn. He neglected to call congress in extra session last summer, even though he knew the "world was on fire," because he wanted the center of the stage for himself. Now he has to divide the attention of the country with congress, and he doesn't relish it. However, congress will adjourn when it gets ready.

In the matter of preparedness we suggest, again, that proper consideration be given to better roads.

Congress cannot hear the eagle scream, but it has open ears for the squeal of pork on the hoof.

Democrats hope to win on the strength of prosperity based on war. It can't be done.

AHEAD OF THE GAME.

When you break even on your beeves you are ahead of the game provided you save the manure, especially if you have kept hogs following the cattle. "Saving the manure" doesn't mean saving merely one-third or one-fourth. It means saving 70 per cent or more, liquid as well as solid. The problem of keeping live stock with profit is largely a matter of making use of sludge, roughage or bedding of stuff that is wasted on the average farm. Weeds and weed seeds, usually counted worse than nothing, may be put on the right side of the ledger by means of a few sheep.

CONTROL INSECT PESTS.

Kansas State Agricultural College Gives Advice to Farmers.
[Prepared by Kansas State Agricultural college.]

While the average Kansan has little idea of where the insect pests spend the winter, yet this knowledge, say the entomologists in the Kansas State Agricultural college, is of utmost importance to the farmer in working out and applying methods of control.

The entomologists explain that most of the insects in the winter season are in a state in which they are readily accessible to control and that generally the best methods of control are conducive to better agriculture regardless of whether the insects are actually present. This is particularly true of means employed in exterminating the staple crop insects.

"The staple crop insects—the field crop pests—spend the winter in all stages," says James W. McCulloch, assistant in entomology in charge of staple crop insect investigation—"that is, one group of insects may live through the winter as adults, another may hibernates as larvae, and still another may exist in the egg stage."

The chinch bug, states Mr. McCulloch, spends the winter as an adult in clump forming grass, such as blue stem and bunch grass. Burning grass is a good practice.

The corn ear worm winters as a pupa in its pupal cell from two to six inches below the surface of the ground. The "daxseed" or Hessian fly pupa may be found in early sown or volunteer wheat or in wheat stubble. They are under the sheaths of the wheat stock.

The grasshopper remains in the egg stage throughout the winter. The eggs are in capsules at a depth of from one-half to one inch below the surface of the ground along the roadside, in alfalfa fields and in almost any uncultivated land.

Corn bill bugs pass the winter as adults in the taproots of corn plants.

"In combating the Hessian fly the most important thing, and the one the experiment station has always placed stress upon, is the destruction of all volunteer wheat," says George A. Dean, professor of entomology. "Four things are emphasized: (1) the thorough preparation of the seed bed, (2) destruction of all volunteer wheat, (3) late sowing and (4) co-operation."

Water Supply Easy Now.

Pumping and carrying water are two of the most time consuming farm tasks. They are done in hundreds of different ways, most of them tedious.

Several ingenious devices have lately appeared that offer relief. One is a galvanized steel standpipe that can be installed in the barn or any building that will protect it from frost in winter. An excellent place is in the middle of the silo where the heat of the silage will keep it warm. This tank is made twenty feet high and from two to three feet in diameter. The two foot size holds fourteen barrels and the three foot holds thirty-three barrels.

This standpipe was originally intended for use with windmills, but a gas engine or any other convenient power can be used.

Another interesting water supply help for use with electric motors is a basement pressure tank filled with a motor operated pump. The starting and stopping of the electric motor is automatically controlled by the air pressure in the tank.—Farm and Fireside.

Making Capital Available.

Keep accounts—find just where your money comes from and just where it goes. Some men's wealth is like a good deal of the fertility in their soil—it is not "available." If the boys and girls are to be kept on the farm the farm must be made not only a financial and economic success, but also a family and civic success. Any reasonable expenditure for making the home place more attractive is as real and profitable an investment as though the money had been spent for limestone and phosphate.

NEW IDEA IN WINDMILLS.

Operating Fans Carried on a Column Instead of a Tower.

A novel windmill manufactured in Portland, Ore., is supported by a tubular column instead of the usual tower, says Popular Mechanics. The fans are arranged in two sections, four in each, and are of galvanized iron, concave, and so adjusted that they quickly receive the full propelling force of the wind, while on the return they are shielded behind a movable screen of canvas. The shield is kept in the correct position by the tail vane moving about as the wind shifts. Ball bearings are used on all wheels.

The steel tubular column is kept in rigidly upright position by guy cables attached to the top of the column, trussed and anchored, and by a secondary set of cables guyed beneath the revolving wheel. Steel spikes set into the column form steps by which the machinery is reached for lubrication and repair.

AMERICANISM AND PREPARED- NESS FOR PEACE

Col. Roosevelt Urges Military Training to Unite Democracy.

ASSAILS PACIFISTS

Regards the Man Who Puts Peace Above Righteousness Not as Serving the Lord But as Serving the Devil.

"I have been very reluctant to make speeches during these weeks immediately preceding the national nominating conventions, because it is very difficult to make people understand that speeches at such a time are not of the ordinary political type made in the interest of some particular individual's candidacy. But I finally determined that I would come here to Michigan to say certain things which I believe should be said at this time. What I have to say to you will not be in the interest of any man, and least of all, of myself.

"It will not refer to the candidacy of any individual. It will not refer to the policy of any party, save as such party policy may, and ought to vitally concern the welfare of the nation. My speech will be devoted exclusively to certain great principles which should be fundamental in this great democratic commonwealth of ours. Wherever I touch on an individual, it will be because I cannot make my meaning clear, save by speaking of individuals who embody, or typify certain movements.

Reasons for Speech.

"I come here to Michigan because of the primary for the selection of delegates to the Republican national convention. Mr. Ford was victorious, and following on his victory here he showed a marked popular strength in Nebraska and Pennsylvania. The result of this showing has been immediately visible upon many of the politicians within and without congress. One of the leading anti-preparedness, or peace-at-any-price papers in New York recently commented with great satisfaction upon the defeat in the lower house of congress of the proposal to increase our regular army to $250,000 men. This paper stated that originally the proposal was defeated by only 22 votes, but when the vote came up again 10 days ago it was defeated by 79 votes.

"It continues (I condense): 'Of these 221 negative votes, 51 were cast by Republicans, 49 being from the central west, what has come to be known as the Henry Ford territory. These included 6 of the 11 from Michigan—a notable change since it was proposed in the house. Since then Mr. Ford's large votes in Michigan and Nebraska have been recorded. All three Republican congressmen from Nebraska were opposed. If this is not a pretty clear indication of prevailing anti-militarist temper in the middle west, what can be? It is as well refreshing proof that there will be strong forces in both party conventions to throw their influence against the militarist planks of Mr. Roosevelt.'

"This situation makes it advisable to speak with courtesy but with entire frankness of what the success of Mr. Ford means; and is taken to mean, and of the forces that have given Mr. Ford his strength. It is in Michigan, Mr. Ford's own state, where the Ford movement began, that I wish to say what I have to say on the subject.

"For Mr. Ford personally, I feel not merely friendliness, but in many respects a very genuine admiration. There is much in the methods and very much in the purposes, with which he has conducted his business, notably in his relations to his working people, than commands my hearty sympathy and respect. Moreover, there is always something attractive to an American in the career of a man who has raised himself from the industrial ranks, until he is one of the captains of industry.

"But all that I have thus said can with truth be said of many, perhaps of most of the Tories of the Revolutionary war and of many or most of the pacifists of the Civil war, the extremists among whom were popularly known as Copperheads. Many of these Tories and Civil war pacifists were men of fine character and upright purpose, who sincerely believed in the cause they advocated. They included all the men who were the pacifists of their day. These pacifists who formed so large a proportion of the old-time Tories and Copperheads abhorred and denounced the militarism of Washington in 1776 and of Lincoln in 1861. They were against all war and all preparedness for war. In the Revolutionary contest they insisted that Washington was the embodiment of anarchic militarism. Their purpose was to get the 'boys' of Bunker Hill and Valley Forge 'out of the trenches' and bring them back to their homes and make them quit fighting. In 1864 they denounced Lincoln as a military dictator.

"They praised peace as the greatest of all earthly blessings. They demanded that the war should cease, and they wished to get the 'boys' of the army or the Potomac out of the trenches before Christmas and bring them back to the farm, the shop and the counting house. If these pacifists of the Revolution and Civil war had had their way they would have put an immediate stop to much suffering and much loss of life. They would have secured immediate peace. They would have averted some years of war. They would have turned men away from military training into the path of ordinary civil occupation. They would have secured the applause of every peace-at-any-price man at home and abroad. And unwittingly they would have utterly ruined this nation.

"They would have prevented its being a nation. They would have made the countrymen of Lincoln objects of scorn and derision, and they would have made of this great republic a hissing and a by-word among the nations of the earth. They would have rendered it certain in each case that, for the one war they averted at the moment, ten were insured for the years to come.

"They would have piled up an immeasurable load of shame and suffering for their children, and their children's children, not merely unto the third and fourth, but unto the ninth and tenth generations that were to come after them. This is what these good, well meaning pacifists, those days would have done if they had achieved their purposes. This is what the pacifists of our day, the neo-Tories, the neo-Copperheads, will do if they achieve their purpose.

"Remember, that the pacifists of today, the peace at any price men, however well meaning, are the spiritual and moral heirs of the men who denounced and opposed Washington; of the men who denounced and voted against Abraham Lincoln. We can only be loyal to the souls of Washington and Lincoln, and to the soul of the great people that caught flame from their teachings if we set our faces like flint against the unworthy spirit which today would teach us that peace stands above righteousness, and that this iniquitous peace can be secured by the refusal to prepare to defend our just rights. Either we must surrender our rights, and at the same time our self-respect, or else we must be ready to defend our rights with a hand trained to exercise the weapons of free men, and with a heart welded to that stern courage for the lack of which the possession of the softer virtues can never atone.

"In any serious crisis there are always men who try to carry water on both shoulders. These men try to escape the hard necessity of choice between two necessarily opposite alternatives, by trying to work up some compromise. In actual practice, this compromise usually proves to combine with exquisite nicety all the defects and none of the advantages of both courses. It is true that in ordinary political matters compromise is essential. It is true that in ordinary times it is essential. But there come great crises when compromise is either impossible or fatal.

"This is one of those crises. There is no use in saying that we will fit ourselves to defend ourselves a little, but not much. Such a position is equivalent to announcing that, if necessary, we shall hit, but that we shall only hit soft. The only right principle is to prepare thoroughly or not at all. The only right principle is to avoid hitting if it is possible to do so, but never under any circumstances to hit soft. To go to war a little, but not much, is the one absolutely certain way to insure disaster. To prepare a little but not much, stands on a par with a city developing a fire department which, after a fire occurs, can put it out a little, but not much.

"Yet at this moment the majority of our political leaders either keep silent on the vital issues before our people, or else engage in conflicts which are almost meaningless because the men ranged on one side advocate total unpreparedness and the men ranged on the other side nervously deny that they desire any real and thoroughgoing preparedness. Such a condition of affairs speaks badly for this nation. I say 'this nation' advisedly. I mean you and me, my fellow countrymen.

People Primarily to Blame.
"The executive and legislative agents of the government at Washington ought, of course, to lead in the right direction. But ultimately, we, the people, have only ourselves to blame if they do not; for it is our fault if we permit them to lead us wrong. Therefore, I wish you to understand that I am putting the blame primarily on us, the people, on us ourselves; although it is necessary, in order to avoid circumspection, that I speak at times of our governmental agents.

"We, through our representatives at Washington, have absolutely refused in the smallest degree to prepare during these 22 months of world cataplexy. We have refused to learn the smallest part of the lesson being written on the scroll of torment in Europe. We have fatuously refused to take the smallest step, either to do our duty to ourselves or to do our duty to others. We have endeavored to deceive ourselves by announcing that in this policy of supreme inaction and of failure to perform duty, we are actuated by the loftiest motives. I doubt whether we have really deceived ourselves, and most certainly we have not deceived others. There is not a nation in the world which believes that our course of conduct has been dictated by anything save timidity, unworthy shrinking from effort and responsibility, and cold and selfish love of money making and of soft ease.

"We first hysterically announced that we would not prepare because we were afraid that preparation might make us lose our vanage ground as a peace-loving people. Then we became frightened and announced loudly that we ought to prepare; that the world was on fire; that our own national structure was in danger of catching flame; and that we must immediately make ready. Then we turned another somersault and abandoned all talk of preparedness; and we never did anything more than talk.

Analyses Strength of Pacifists.
"The net result is that there has been no preparation so far, because of what has happened in the great war. Congress is still in the 'conventional stage on the matter. There is no sign, as far as governmental action goes, that we have any appreciation of our danger, or of the needs of the country. No action has been taken to meet these needs. No action adequately to meet them is even contemplated.

"It has been announced in vindication of the political wisdom of those declining to take such action, that thereby they would favorably impress our home pacifists. This hope has been only partially justified by the result. The ultra-pacifists, as represented by Mr. Ford, have made their great showing precisely because there has been no real and resolute opposition to them. The administration at Washington, backed by the majority of congress, has taken no step for preparedness, and has done nothing efficient to sustain our national rights.

"It has stood for applied pacifism, as far as deeds are concerned. But because, although it has not acted, it has, at intervals, ventured feebly to speak in contradiction of its non-action, the ultra-pacifists and their allies have refused it any whole-hearted support. They object even to make-believe preparedness. They insist on even more thoroughgoing helplessness than that which we had so amply provided at Washington. Although our governmental representatives have been 96 per cent feeble, the ultra-pacifists have demanded a clear 100 per cent of feebleness, and have conducted their campaigns under various banners to achieve this purpose.

"Hitherto most of our prominent political leaders have not ventured to take any thorough-going and clean-cut position in this matter. They have not ventured to expose the essential immorality of the ultra-pacifist or peace-at-any-price position. They stand exactly as 20 years ago the political leaders stood who desired to avoid flat-footedly taking sides for or against either silver or gold. Such a policy is a really futile from the party standpoint.

"It is certainly mischievous from the national standpoint. There is only one way to oppose a policy that is inherently wrong and that is by opposing it with every ounce of earnestness, every ounce of energy the man possesses. The only kind of faith to have in any policy is 100 per cent faith; if the opposition is 96 per cent wrong, very little is to be gained by trying to persuade people that we are only 93 per cent wrong. The difference between being 4 per cent right and 7 per cent right is not enough to arouse much fervor. If we believe that the most certain way for us to insure peace is to be prepared for war, then let us wholeheartedly advocate such a policy, not a little, not with tremors and gaspings, but fully and absolutely.

"There are, at this time, two great issues before us, both inseparably bound together. They are the issues of Americanism and Preparedness. As a people we have to decide whether we are to be in good faith a people and able and ready to take care of ourselves; or whether we do not our national unity and fear to prepare and intend instead to trust partly to a merciful Providence and partly to eloquency in high places. Those in power at Washington have taken the latter position. The followers of Mr. Ford in the Republican primaries have taken what is in reality the same position. What stand do the opponents of this position intend to take? The advocates of unpreparedness, the advocates of sham-preparedness, and the peace-at-any-price men all advocate what is in reality the same policy.

"Those who stand against such a policy are not to be excused if they stand so half-heartedly that the people do not recognize much difference between themselves and their opponents. Why should the people change their government if they are merely to change slightly the degree of unpreparedness? The only sufficient reason would be to inaugurate a policy of real and thoroughgoing preparedness from the top to the bottom, preparedness to do well and justly our normal work of peace.

"We must make this nation as strong as are its convictions in reference to right and wrong. It is little matters what our ideals may be and what achievements we may hope for, if these ideals and achievements cannot be reduced to action. The events of the past, and the events of today, show that the national ideals amount to nothing if the nation lacks the power to maintain them against opposition.

"Therefore, if we are to win at home against those of our fellow-citizens who believe in the policy of unpreparedness, that is, of national weakness and inefficiency, we must have strong and well-reasoned convictions and express them with strength and sincerity. A considerable part of the strength of Mr. Ford in the primaries, and of the strength of the advocates of half-preparedness at Washington, comes from the fact that no real alternative of policy is offered with sincerity and fearlessness.

"Mr. Ford's supporters in the primaries seemingly come chiefly from three classes—the workingmen, who believe that he represents the desire to do justice to them; the pacifists, who think that a policy of helplessness in the face of other nations will insure our national safety; and the German-Americans, some of them in an honest and sincere mood of protest, and the others under the influence of that portion of the professional German-Americans, who have permitted their devotion to Germany finally to make them antagonistic to the welfare of the United States.

"As for the wage workers who support Mr. Ford, I understand entirely their desire to support any man who, in their belief, stands for a more substantial measure of social and industrial justice. But I wish, with all the emphasis in my power, to call their attention to the fact that in order for us to work within our own borders for social and industrial justice, it is necessary to secure to ourselves the power to determine these questions for ourselves.

"If a nation cannot defend itself, then we may rest assured that sooner or later, some stronger outside power will impose an alien will upon it and will deprive it of the say as to how it will determine its own destinies. It is not the slightest consequence at this moment what the business men or the wage workers or the farmers of Belgium think should be done in the way of industrial and agricultural development and justice, because they have to do whatever the Germans tell them to do; and they work and live as they are told by their conquerors.

Belgium a Warning.

"He also advocates our being helpless as a nation to protect him and his workingmen, and he works to keep himself and themselves helpless to aid in such protection. This is precisely the attitude that was taken in Belgium by many business men of the stamp of Mr. Ford. They were successful business men who tried to do justice to their work people. But they were pacifists who did not believe in the thoroughgoing preparedness in military matters. In consequence these Belgian analogues of Mr. Ford now see their business at a standstill; and their work people are in the direst misery, and do only such work under such conditions as their conquerors dictate. Let the business men and workingmen of America who tend to be misled by Mr. Ford's pacifist teachings take warning from what has befallen the business men of Belgium because they actually reduced such teachings to practice.

"Now as to the pacifists. They have told us that if we remain helpless we shall escape all difficulties with other nations and earn their good will. Let them ponder on what has happened in Mexico. Let them ponder our relations at this moment with Germany and the other great powers engaged in the world war. They will then realize the utter futility of their hopes. For nearly five years we have followed the principles of the pacifists as regards Mexico. We have not ourselves prepared, but we have helped the Mexicans to prepare by furnishing them arms and munitions. We have tamely submitted to the murder of our men and the rape of our women. We have permitted foreigners to be plundered in Mexico and our own people to be plundered in Mexico; and murder has been added to plunder. Many of our troops have been shot.

"While we have been nominally at peace with Mexico, the Mexicans have killed more American citizens than the Spaniards killed in the entire Spanish war. Moreover, when the Spanish war was through, it was through; and Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines were started on a career of peace and prosperity such as had never been known in all their history. But in Mexico, after all the bloodshed, the trouble has only begun, and we are no nearer a solution (Continued on page 6)

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

GRIP is a serious disease, and persons affected with it suffer from cold in the head, fever, headache and marked back ache. There are many cases with fever and prostration as the only symptoms.

Although serious, grip is not often fatal, though there may be fatal complications, of which pneumonia is the most frequent. Cold in the head alone is frequently called grip and, although usually only an annoyance to adults, may be serious in young children, causing diseases of the ear and mastoid. Tonsillitis and quinsy sore throat are also erroneously called grip. People catch these diseases by breathing into their noses and mouths the fine spray from the noses and mouths of persons who have the disease. This fine spray is produced by the act of coughing, sneezing and talking and may be carried from the affected person four or five feet through the air.

To avoid grip, colds and tonsillitis (1) keep in good physical condition, (2) get plenty of sleep with windows open, (3) avoid crowded and badly ventilated places, (4) do not get near people who have colds and coughs, (5) do not get close to people while talking, (6) keep your feet dry and (7) don't clothe too warmly and become overheated.

If you get a bad cold, sore throat or have fever (1) send for a reliable physician, (2) turn your head away from people when coughing and sneezing, (3) do not go near children, (4) do not take remedies without competent medical advice and (5) take care of a cold. Many colds develop into bronchitis or pneumonia.

FOR LIGHT HOUSEKEEPING.

How to Run Your Fireless Cooker Without Fueling.

There are a number of things which a housewife must keep carefully in mind if she is to have success with her fireless cooker and make it save her time later and expense. One is that if food is left indefinitely in the cooker it will sour. Soups, stews, vegetables and such things must be removed after twenty-four hours and less in hot weather.

Another thing is that some foods require a longer time on the fire before being put in the cooker than others do. Cereals may require only ten minutes and tough meat half an hour. It is best to find out something about the length of time the different things require before beginning to use the cooker. Generally speaking, all indigestible things require longer cooking than other things. Oatmeal, beef stew, corned beef and beans need more time than steamed puddings, rice and chicken.

A third thing that should never be forgotten is this: Everything that takes a long time to cook is improved and the process hastened if when the time is half up the pall is removed and reheated without opening it and put back again.

How to Make Cutwork, Which is Coming in Again.

You must have at least one piece showing a cutwork design if you wish to be up to date in the needlework field. This type of fancy work is being revived very strongly and is used for cushions, runners, cuffs, etc. The work is very simply done, as it calls for nothing more than the buttonhole stitch.

Either side of the portion of material that is to be cut out is first outlined with a running stitch. It is then buttonholed, the pointed edge facing inward. When you come to a place where a bar is indicated, stitch over to the other side and return on the same thread by wrapping it around and around your needle; then proceed with the over and over stitch until you come to the next bar, when you repeat. Instead of wrapping the thread around the needle many embroiderers make buttonhole stitches across each bridge so that the bridge will be firm.

How to Perfume Handkerchiefs and Linen Without Saturating Them.

A very clever way to perfume handkerchiefs and muslin underwear: Supply your washwoman with a good sized piece of orris root, which she is to throw into the water in which your handkerchiefs are being washed. When they come back to you from ironing they will be redolent of the orris root. Then you can slip them between the folds of a sachet filled with violet powder, and they will not lose their fragrance. Violet and orris scent together make a real violet odor.

During the lesson one afternoon in a public school a thunderstorm arose, and, seeking to lessen the fright of the children, the teacher began an entertaining discourse on the wonder of the elements. "Jimmy," said she, finally turning to a bright little youngster, "can you tell me what lightning is?" "Yes, ma'am," was the ready rejoinder of little Jimmy. "Lightning is streaks of electricity." "That's right," smiled the teacher encouragingly. "Now tell me why it is that lightning never strikes twice in the same place." "Because," answered Jimmy quite easily, "after it hits once the same place ain't there any more."

"You may laugh, but I can truthfully say that my wife and I have not had a single disagreement since we were married." "That's a good deal for any married couple to say. When were you married?" "Yesterday."

"Does your wife husband your resources?" "Not while she's trying to husband our daughters."

"I went to a symphony concert yesterday afternoon." "Did you enjoy it?" "It was the most wonderful experience I ever had. Just think of sitting in the same room with 2,000 women and not one of them saying a word."

SOME FARMS PAY; OTHERS DO NOT PAYING ONES ARE USED AS OBJECT LESSONS.

Demonstrators Point Out the Difference in Results Between Good and Bad Management.

In every community there are a certain number of farmers who have found out for themselves how to make a good profit from their farms. They are now being used by county agents as practical object lessons for their less successful neighbors. Under what is known as the farm-management demonstration plan the county agent analyzes the systems that these men have adopted, compares them with the practice on farms that pay less or not at all, and learns in this way the factors that make for successful farming in a given community. He is then in a position to say: "This is the kind of farming that pays. If you don't believe me, look around you. It's not a theory; it's a fact."

The demonstrations of this kind that the department of agriculture, co-operating with the state colleges of agriculture, has made already afford some striking instances of the difference in results between good and bad farm management. Recently 64 groups of farms in 19 states were studied in order to ascertain what the farmer obtained for his year's work after deducting the interest at five per cent. on the value of his farm and other capital—in other words, to find out his labor income or wages. In each of these groups, which included altogether 4400 farms, the conditions were reasonably similar. In each group the farmers were divided into five numerically equal classes according to their labor incomes.

The Successful Fifth. It was found that although the average labor income for all the groups was only $387, the average for the farmers in the first class—that fifth of the farmers who did best—was $1421. In the second class it was $842. The last class—the fifth of the farmers who were least successful—got nothing for wages, and lost, on the average, $517. That is to say, the interest on the amount of money represented by their farm, stock and equipment would have been $517 more than the farm returned them. It should be borne in mind in this connection that the labor income is merely the farmer's wages, and that the family has in addition, besides interest on investment, the use of the farmhouse and such fuel and food as the farmer supplies free of money cost.

Other demonstrations have produced similar results. In almost any northern community one-fifth of the farmers are making approximately $1000 a year more than the average and $2000 more than the least successful. This is not luck, nor is it altogether, or even chiefly, a question of the skill of the individual farmer. Further analysis will show that the successful men are following certain methods adapted to their conditions and that the unsuccessful are not.

It is the business of the county agents and farm management demonstrators to ascertain what those methods are and to point them out. How this can be done is shown by a study of a farm which, for the sake of convenience, can be called the Baldwin farm. The owner's labor income one year was minus $45—his income was $45 less than the interest on his farm and equipment. That year the average labor income on 193 farms in the same community was $190 and for the 25 more successful farms $750. The amount of capital represented by the Baldwin farm was a little more than the average and a little less than that of the best farms. In neither case, however, was the difference sufficient to account at all for the striking difference in income.

Unprofitable Cows.

There were, however, other differences which did account for it. Baldwin had 51 acres in crops, as compared with an average of 68 and for the best farms of 93. He fed practically all his crops to his 11 cows and 2 horses, but the receipts in butter and milk from each of his cows averaged only $30. On the average farm there were 6 cows, giving average receipts of $44, and on best farms 8 cows, with average receipts from each of $62. The other farmers with their larger crop acreage had a surplus of crops to sell. Baldwin, with as good yield as the others per acre, had practically nothing to sell, and the stock to which he fed his crops was too poor to give him profitable returns.

The important thing for Baldwin, said the demonstrators when they had ascertained these facts, was to weed out his herd, to keep a record of the production of each cow and to get rid of those which were costing him money. The next thing was if possible to rent or buy a little more land, so that the size of his business would be more commensurate with its equipment. He and his horses were capable of farming as much land as his neighbors, and by not doing it he was wasting his time just as his cows were wasting his feed.

Such demonstrations, of course, are valuable only for the community in which they are made. They cannot be taken to mean that it is better to keep 8 cows than 11, to sell crops than to feed them, or to cultivate 90 acres than 50. They show, however, that there are always profitable and unprofitable ways of running a farm in any community, and that if a man is losing money in return for hard work he will pay him to learn from his neighbors who are making it. It is in helping him to do this that the county agents are now finding one of their most useful functions.

PNEUMATIC HAMMERS.

Greatly Superior in Efficiency to the Ordinary Hand Tool.

The hammer is one of the oldest tools used by man in his daily occupation, says the Engineering Magazine. From the atoe hammer of the cave man to this pneumatic hammer, which today rivets together our skyscrapers, office buildings, our battleships and our gigantic bridges, is a long step, but practically all the progress made during that time has been accomplished during the present generation. We read of ships that require a million rivets to hold the plates together. Think of the time saved in driving those rivets when we consider that the pneumatic hammer will strike twenty times as many blows as the hammer in the hands of the most expert iron worker. And riveting is not the only work on which these hammers are time in putting a vessel's plates together. They are useful in more ways than a common hammer in the hands of an expert mechanic. If to riveting a ship's plates together it is found that an edge of one needs chipping it is only necessary to insert a chisel in the pneumatic hammer and the work can be done very quickly and with ease. Here the cost of taking the plate back to the shop to be planed is saved, and this saving in one case alone may amount to the cost of the pneumatic tool.

A Scale Solvent.

When the circulating water of gas engine piston rods, exhaust valve jackets and small piping causes the rapid collection of scale, due to a combination of hardness of the water and suspended matter, the use of commercial muriatic acid is very effective in softening up the scale, which may afterward be washed out. The acid should be introduced in its undiluted strength into the parts where the scale has formed and allowed to stand for four or six hours. Before applying the acid the part to be treated should be separated from the balance of the water apices by disconnecting the piping and plugging the outlets. The spent acid may be allowed to flow to the sewer, together with the loosened scale. The space should be thoroughly washed out with a strong stream of water to get entirely rid of all the scale.

Sticky Valves.

A useful tip for diagnosing sticky valve stems in these engines is as follows: When running downhill with the air valve full open a sticking inlet or exhaust valve is easily noticed by the irregular hiss produced by the entering air, compared with the regular hiss caused by properly acting valves. The difference is much more easily recognized when the car is running slowly, and consequently the beats of the pistons are separated by longer intervals.

Stopping Knots.

A mixture of red lead and a good water paint is effective in stopping knots when other mixtures have failed. Sometimes a knot is so large and troublesome that it is necessary to cut it out and replace it with a neatly fitted piece of straight grained wood.

HALL PACKED TO CAPACITY

STUDENTS COMPLETE WORK OF SCHOOL YEAR.

Graduate a Class of Five—Teaching Staff for Coming Year Hired by Board.

The program given Wednesday evening by the intermediate and primary rooms of our public schools, under the supervision of Miss Patterson and Mrs. Townsend, was unusually good and was commended highly by all parents and patrons of the school. The hall was packed to its capacity and everyone thoroughly enjoyed seeing the little folks do their parts. The manner in which it was carried out showed much endeavor on the part of the teachers.

Thursday evening the commencement exercises of the eighth grade were held in the Blue Hall and were enjoyed by a full house. The graduates were: Blanche Boss, Fred Allan Reeves, Ida VanOrman, Bessie Madill and Savilla Yettaw. Each one of the graduates did credit to themselves and their teacher, Mr. Brall, in the delivering of their parts.

After the class program had been given, Mr. Donald Patterson of the school board gave an interesting talk on the township high school and other things interesting to all connected with school affairs. He was followed by County Commissioner of Schools Belding in a short address.

The music was furnished by Miss Patterson and vocal solos by Miss Effie Larsen and Dewitt Patterson. The teachers for the coming year hired by the board are as follows: High room, Max A. Brall; intermediate room, Maude Best; primary room, Lillian Patterson.

SCHOOL REPORTS.

ROCK ELM SCHOOL NOTES.

Fifteen of our pupils are entitled to certificates for perfect attendance during the month of May and several are entitled to fair tickets.

Our annual school picnic occurred at the schoolgrounds May 23. The schoolroom was tastefully decorated with spring flowers. The mothers provided a bountiful dinner, which was served on tables on the north side of the schoolhouse and was enjoyed by all. After dinner fifteen of the pupils played a game of "all up," which was followed by a three-legged race, won by Kenneth Flagg and Alva Duffey. The traveling men's race came next and afforded plenty of mirth and laughter for the on-lookers. This was followed by the winding of the Maypole. The photographer appeared about this time and took several views of the school and guests arranged on the hillside above the map of Michigan and the Great Lakes, which Mr. Dewey, assisted by some of his pupils, very accurately outlined in pebbles on the lower part of the hillside. A marshmallow roast closed the festivities. The day was all that could be desired and was enjoyed by all.

WATERMELON ANTHRACNOSE.

Troublesome Disease Preventable by Spraying With Bordeaux Mixture. (Prepared by United States department of agriculture.)

Watermelon growers in various sections of the country frequently suffer loss from a disease which blights the foliage and spots the fruit. The leaves are covered with irregular dark, dead spots and may die before the melons are ripe. The trouble develops on the fruit in the form of water soaked and later sunken spots of varying size, which come to have a pink center made up of masses of the fungus spores. As the disease progresses the melons decay. This is anthracnose and is caused by a parasitic fungus related to those which produce the apple bitter rot and pod spot of bean. The fungus causing watermelon anthracnose attacks cucumbers, cantaloupes and squashes, but probably not as a rule, any other cultivated crops. Warm and moist or rainy weather is especially favorable to the spread and development of anthracnose, and for this reason it was more prevalent than usual last season. The losses were particularly severe in some districts where melons are grown on a large scale for earland shipments.

The department of agriculture has found that the disease can be controlled by spraying with bordeaux mixture and trials of this treatment are recommended. The methods to be employed are substantially those in use for potatoes, cucumbers and other truck crops. The following points should be observed to insure success:

Use fresh homemade bordeaux mixture. In preparing it follow directions exactly, as much depends on the way the ingredients are combined. Use a good spray pump, operated at a pressure of 100 pounds or more. Spray thoroughly. The time of application depends on the weather and the development of the crop. The disease usually appears when the fruit is nearly grown. Watch carefully for the leaf spot and spray as soon as any appears. In any case, make an application two weeks before maturity and a second a week later.

Ingredients.—Copper sulphate, four pounds; quicklime, four pounds; water to make fifty gallons.

Prepare the copper sulphate by suspending it in a gunny sack just below the surface of several gallons of water in a clean barrel. When the sulphate is dissolved, which requires three or four hours, remove the sack and stir into the barrel enough additional water to make exactly twenty-five gallons of the copper solution.

Prepare the lime by slaking it slowly and thoroughly in a clean barrel, strain and add enough additional water to make exactly twenty-five gallons of lime milk. Stir thoroughly.

Pour the two ingredients together into another barrel or, better, directly into the spray tank. If it will hold fifty gallons, it is highly important to stir the mixture very thoroughly and to strain both ingredients before they are combined, as otherwise clogging of the spray nozzle might result. Use a copper or bronze wire strainer of eighteen meshes to the inch. Do not put copper sulphate or bordeaux mixture into tin or iron vessels. Use wood or copper containers. Mix the bordeaux as needed and apply at once. It is never so good after it has settled. Every one who uses bordeaux mixture frequently and in quantity will find it convenient to keep concentrated stock solutions on hand, as these keep indefinitely if the water which evaporates is replaced.

Build an elevated platform to hold the barrels. Suspend fifty pounds of copper sulphate to dissolve in a fifty gallon barrel of water. Slake fifty pounds of lime in another barrel. Add water to make fifty gallons of lime milk. When bordeaux mixture is needed stir both stock barrels and take from each as many gallons as the formula calls for in pounds. Dilute the copper sulphate in one barrel and the lime milk in another, each with half the water, and let the two run together into the strainer of the spray tank.

Preparedness.

Preparedness is as important for the farmer as it is for the soldier. The farmer who wastes his leisure time and who fails to utilize rainy days and slack seasons to get his affairs in shape can never hope to catch up during the busy seasons.

Farm Club Movement in Arkansas.

Arkansas has taken up the farm club movement in serious earnest, says the Farm Progress. This is one of the greatest movements in America today and deserves to succeed. We have heard it said that the farmer is belag "clubbed to death." Don't you believe it. It is a fact that the vast majority of American farmers have been neither hurt nor helped by the club movement, for the very good reason that the clubs have never touched them or their work. They have stayed out when they might have come in.

Arkansas advocates of the club idea are hoping that 15,000 boys and girls will have joined the clubs in that state by the end of next year. There are clubs in plenty. It is easy to organize a "corn club" if you are interested in corn, or a "pig" or a "poultry club" if those meet your liking better. There are "cotton clubs," too, in great numbers, and for the farm girls there are "tomato clubs" and "bread clubs," "sewing clubs" and "poultry clubs." Give the boys an acre of corn ground and a pig and the girls two sittings of good eggs and a tenth of an acre for tomatoes. Get into touch with the people at the head of the club work in your state, no matter in what state you live in.

LIVE STOCK NOTES.

Oats are good for breeding sows and shoats, but not for fattening stock. Too much fiber in them. If you can make your lambs weigh fifty pounds when they are four months old you are making a fine profit on them. The transformation of corn into pork brings good money to those who know how to turn the trick. It pays to feed and care for the ewes generously, as it not only insures a good crop of lambs, but it also makes the wool better and heavier.

SIDE LINES AND WOMEN-FOLK.

As long as the average farmer "keeps his garden on the grocery shelf" he sells everything wholesale and buys everything retail. Side lines, such as canning, preserving, making apple butter, are profitable where the farmer is wise enough to see that the women of his household get all necessary help with their work. The price difference between ham, lard and bacon and hog on the hoof shows the money gain for farm butchering and smoking.

8TH SESSION OF SUMMER SCHOOL

CAMP AT DAYHUFF LAKE, NEAR BOON.

Work of Interest to Forest Rangers and Lumbermen—Should Enroll at Once.

The forestry department of the Michigan Agricultural College will begin its eighth session of summer school on June 19th. The location, as during the past three years, will be near Boon, Michigan, on the land of the Cumner-Diggins Lumber Co.

Unlike many other courses of instruction, that in forestry must be given partly where there are stands of timber to work with and actual logging operations going on that can be studied.

The location of the camp on Dayhuff Lake and the logging operations nearby furnish conditions that lack but little of being ideal. The courses of study given are along the lines of forest engineering, mapping, measurement of timber, lumbering, and a study of forest insects. The only costs consist of a matriculation fee of $5, laboratory fees for use of instruments amounting to $5.50, and board, which amounts to about $3.65 per week. The courses given are thorough, although elementary and designed to present clearly some of the principal elements of the subject of forestry.

With instruction which requires strict attention during the hours from 7 a. m. to 4:30 p. m. there are given during other portions of the day various opportunities for recreation and amusement.

Dayhuff Lake presents almost perfect bathing and canoeing facilities, and every precaution is taken to guard the safety of students enjoying these pastimes. The two dances which are given during each summer session have met with much success, although they are rural in every respect. Much baseball rivalry results from the numerous games between students and teams from the surrounding towns.

Students live in tents furnished by the college and take their meals and have their recitations in permanent buildings constructed by the Cumner-Diggins Company. The tents form a half circle on the crest of a hill leading down to Dayhuff Lake.

The very complete equipment for camping and giving instruction and the natural beauty of the location combined furnish conditions under which students may enjoy perfect health and be in position to get the most of their instruction. Any male student with a fair degree of preparation in elementary high school subjects will be admitted to the course.

The work is of particular value to forest rangers and others who may be interested in forestry or lumbering. The number of students is limited by the equipment used in giving instruction. All inquiries and applications for enrollment should be addressed to Al K. Chittenden, Professor of Forestry, East Lansing, Mich.

The college would like to have all young men interested in this work participate in it just as far as the equipment will permit. It is understood that a number of men can still be admitted if application is made promptly, and any men interested are urged to take the matter up at once.

Council Willing to be Shown if Old Contract is a Legal One.

A sudden termination was brought to the contract existing between the City of Charlevoix and Henry Richardi, for furnishing the city with electric current by the council ordering the current shut off at the expiration of the ten year period, which closed with midnight May 31. The current was shut off and the Bellaire end notified that no more current was needed.

In the meantime the city's auxiliary plant had been placed in readiness, and the city was furnished with "juice" from this source until Sunday forenoon, when the Charlevoix Rock Product Company began furnishing current.

The electric situation here is well known by everyone in the city. It is a fact beyond dispute that it has been not only unsatisfactory but high priced. Those depending upon electricity for power and heating have been up against it. At no stage of the game was it possible to be certain of power. Shutdowns were frequent and at times that proved costly to consumers.

Richardi claims his contract is good for ten years more, and the refusal of the council to continue on the old contract may result in a legal battle. However, a great majority of consumers are willing to stand their share of the cost, regardless of the result.

The local lodge will close for the summer season after next Thursday evening and all members are urged to attend, as important business matters must be closed up at that time.

THE SUBSTANTIAL DOVE OF PEACE

$10,000.00 FIRE AT MACKINAW

CAUGHT TUESDAY IN A VAC-ANT BUILDING.

Aged Business Man Drops Dead from Heart Failure Caused by the Excitement.

Mackinaw City came nearly being wiped off the map completely by fire Tuesday forenoon, and only kind Providence, which caused the shifting of the strong wind, saved the village from utter destruction by the flames. As it is, the damage amounted to about $10,000 and four of Mackinaw's best stores were totally destroyed and one life was snuffed out, when S. B. Chamberlain, aged 70 years, one of the pioneer merchants, dropped dead from heart failure, brought on by the excitement and his serious financial loss.

The blaze started in a vacant building on Huron street about nine o'clock. At that time a strong east wind was blowing and the flames were carried to other wooden structures along the street. Mackinaw has little fire protection and a hurried call was sent to Petoskey for help. The Petoskey fire department were ready to start, when word was sent that the fire was under control.

The destroyed business places include the Barrett & Son dry goods store and shoe store, the C. H. Zimmerman furniture store, and the P. H. Coffman drug and jewelry store. There was but little insurance.

Mr. Chamberlain dropped dead while he watched his business place burn.

Deceased was 60 years of age at the time of her death.

DRIGGETT—THORNE

Charlevoix School Graduates Married at East Jordan Thursday.

A very pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Thorne of East Jordan on Thursday evening, June 1, at 7 o'clock, when their daughter, Cleo Belle, was united in marriage to William Driggett of Detroit. Rev. Quinton Walker performed the ceremony.

The bride wore a beautiful gown of white satin and net and was attended by her sister Lillian, while the groom's brother, George, acted as best man. The house was very prettily decorated with plants and cut flowers.

Both the young people are very well and favorably known in Charlevoix. The groom is a son of Wm. T. Driggett of this city, and the bride is a graduate of the county normal. They have the best wishes of a host of friends for success and happiness in their new home.

New Styles for Dime, Quarter and Half Dollar

New kinds of dimes, quarters and half dollars will be minted after July 1, for the first time since 1891.

The half dollar has fallen practically into disuse and a new design was selected in the hope of restoring it to more general circulation.

The half dollar and dime models were made by Adolph A. Weinman, and the quarter dollar by Herman A. MacNeil, sculptors of note.

The face of the new half dollar bears the full length of Liberty, with a background of the American flag flying to the breeze. The Goddess is striding toward the dawn of a new day, carrying laurel and oak branches, symbol of civil and military glory. The reverse side shows an eagle perched high up on a mountain crag, wings unfolded. Growing from a rift in the rock is a sapling of mountain pine, symbol of America.

The design of the twenty-five cent piece is intended to typify the awakening of the country to its own protection. Secretary McAdoo's announcement stated:

Liberty, a full length figure, is shown stepping toward the country's gateway, bearing upraised a shield, from which the covering is being drawn. The right hand bears an olive branch of peace. Above the head is the word "Liberty" and below the feet "1916." The reverse side bears the figure of an eagle in full flight, wings extended, and the inscriptions "United States of America" and "E Pluribus Unum."

Both the half and the quarter bear the phrase "In God We Trust."

The design of the dime is simple. Liberty with a winged cap is shown on the fore side and on the reverse is a design of a bundle of rods and a battle axe, symbolical of unity, "wherein lies the nation's strength."

BE CAREFUL OF YOUR GASOLINE

CANNOT HAVE TANKS IN YOUR YARD.

Must House All Small Tanks and Bury All Large Ones.

Several Charlevoix people have recently purchased gasoline storage tanks for their private use and are having them placed in the yards or buildings at their homes.

These people probably do not realize they are violating one of the state laws and one of the laws which the state fire department is making every effort to enforce.

Tanks of less than 60 gallon capacity must be placed in a building, the door of which must be kept locked. This building must be at least ten feet from any other building. All tanks of over 60 gallon capacity must be buried underground.

Fire Chief Marshall has received orders from Lansing to see that this state law regulating the use of gasoline tanks be strictly enforced in Charlevoix, and if he does not have the law enforced the state will send a man here and make a cleanup of violators.

Mr. Marshall informed the writer that every violation will be prosecuted under the state law.

MICHIGAN TAXES ARE DOUBLED

TIME FOR PEOPLE TO SIT UP AND TAKE NOTICE

Should Make an Investigation and Place Responsibility for Increasing Expenditures.

The people are beginning to realize what special sessions of the legislature, fgd laws and burdensome boards are costing the taxpayers of Michigan. The increase in population, general demands and public improvements have not justified the enormous advance in taxation.

The Michigan State Association has just issued a bulletin which presents some startling figures in regard to the gradual rise of taxation within the past ten years. According to this bulletin, the tax levy of 1915 showed an increase of 130 per cent. over the levy of 1906. The justifiable difference would not exceed 50 per cent., and a great portion of what would have been assigned to a few profit-taking corporations under equitable conditions.

Within the next few years the people will be called upon to stand a portion of the increased taxation for national preparedness (a laudable and necessary movement) and therefore it would be well to carefully scrutinize state expenditures and pare them down wherever possible. Michigan to-day is getting little in return for its vast public expenditures. This is due largely to the fact that the people pay little attention to the new laws which create high-salaried boards and commissions. In the past the proposition has been to frame up something new at each session of the legislature to care for all the deserving henchmen and ward heelers. Every man who has proven himself to be incompetent in professional, mercantile and trade lines has had an opportunity to go on the state's pay roll, and the people have paid the price. What have we had for the money?

The bulletin issued by the State Tax Association says:

"The statistical tables in this bulletin have been published in order that the people of the state might have before them the concrete facts relating to tax levies and government costs.

"Taxes have increased by leaps and bounds in recent years, until today the people are groaning under the heavy burden. The demand is general throughout the state that something be done to check the constantly increasing drain upon the public purse.

"The Michigan State Tax Association cannot at this time definitely point out the cause or causes of the seemingly extraordinary increase in public expenditures during the last decade, neither has it any suggestions to offer other than to urge upon our public servants the necessity of strict economy.

The association will be in a position to draw definite conclusions as the reason for the present heavy tax burden after it has completed its investigation of public expenditures."

The tax levy figures presented in the bulletin follow:

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and the tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

Farm and Garden

THE COUNTY AGENT.

Progress Through Demonstration Made on a Virginia Farm.

[Prepared by United States department of agriculture.]

An interesting instance of the effect which an active county agent, supported by progressive farmers, can have upon the agriculture of a county is afforded by the experience of Culpeper county, Va. An article in the new year book of the United States department of agriculture traces the transformation which has taken place there since the appointment of a county agent in 1911.

The department of agriculture co-operated with the fiscal court of the county in the appointment of this agent. At first the farmers were none too receptive. The agent often had to spend from four to five hours to secure the cooperation of a farmer, while today the unsolicited calls for assistance require all of his time.

The first efforts of the county agent and the men behind him were toward the betterment of the lines of farming that supported the growing of live stock, the greatest agricultural industry of the county. Corn, accordingly, was among the first crops to receive attention. The aim was to secure the introduction of more productive varieties and proper cultivation. The first year twenty-two men co-operated by giving demonstrations on their farms. The demonstrators averaged forty-eight bushels an acre, whereas the average for the county in 1910 had been only 21.01 bushels. The following year more demonstrators were secured, and they averaged 70.6 bushels. The third year the average for the demonstrators fell to 50.7, but in the fourth it rose again to 65.5. For the four years in which demonstrations have been carried on 212 demonstrations on 1,100 acres averaged 58.7 bushels per acre.

Another object lesson was afforded by the Five Acre club, formed in 1914. In this club forty farmers agreed to grow each a five acre field of corn to determine what amount could be raised on that area. The result was an average of seventy-five bushels per acre. As a result of this work the increase in the yield of corn over the entire county has been estimated at 22 1/2 per cent.

In the interest of more and better live stock more forage as well as more grain is necessary, and to this end the county agent has conducted systematic demonstration campaigns for the introduction and increase of alfalfa meadows and pastures. In the fall of 1911 only 100 acres of alfalfa were being grown in the county, and they were partial failures. The next spring two acres on his own farm, and immediately three or four other farmers did the same thing. These plots were visited by farmers from all over the county in order to learn the best practices to follow. As a result 2,000 acres were in alfalfa in 1915. One of the most interesting demonstrations, with this crop took place on a large dairy farm. Last year six acres on this farm were cut five times, and the hay sold at $16 a ton. The gross receipts from the six acres were $784.54, the total amount of hay being 46,784 tons and the average per acre being 7.797 tons.

STALLION LICENSE LAWS

Twenty States Protect Breeders from Fraud and Misrepresentation by Owners and Dealers.

In the past ten years twenty states have enacted laws regulating the public service of stallions and jacks. The principal objects of these laws are to improve the quality of horses and mules raised and to protect the breeders against misrepresentation and fraud on the part of unscrupulous stallion owners and dealers.

In order to accomplish these results these laws require the owners of all stallions and jacks intended for public service to secure a license from the stallion registration board or commission. Licenses are issued for purebreds, grades, crossbreds, and mongrels or scrubs, according to the provisions of the law in the particular state.

Those stallions or jacks offered by their owners as purebred must be recorded in the studbook published by a society recognized by the state as authentic and reliable. The certificate of registration and pedigree issued by one of these societies must be presented to the board with an application for license and an affidavit certifying to the condition of soundness.

In their general provisions all of these laws are similar, but in certain details vary in a greater or lesser degree. In some states, certain diseases or unsoundness disqualify a stallion or jack for public service, while in others the stallion or jack is permitted to stand, but any unsoundness must be mentioned on the license certificate as well as on all posters, circulars, etc., used by the owner for advertising purposes.

The states having laws of this character are California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Utah, Washington and Wisconsin. The last-named state was the first to pass such a law and Oklahoma the latest one. Under the law in the latter state stallion owners are not compelled to secure a state license, but it is safe to say that the holder of a state license has a great advantage over the one who does not.

It is a deplorable fact that hundreds of farmers and mare owners have patronized the inferior stallion with the cheap service fee. These men seem to have failed to appreciate that in paying a higher fee for the service of the sound purebred sire the service fee will be more than offset by the higher price received when the resulting colt is sold. Nor have they appeared to consider the fact that it costs as much to raise a grade or mongrel as it does a purebred.

A lack of consideration in the matters of soundness, breeding and registration has been the cause for much of the patronage secured by the inferior stallion. However, these laws have now made it possible for every farmer and mare owner in these states to know exactly what a stallion or jack is before breeding their mares. They have also benefited the owners of sound purebred sires because they discouraged the use of the unsound, grade, and mongrel stallion.

The results thus far show a gradual increase in the percentage of purebred stallions in service and a decrease in the percentage of grades and mongrels. At the present time there are approximately 58,000 stallions in service in these states; of which more than fifty per cent. are licensed as purebred. This indicates that breeders are becoming more particular in the matters of soundness and breeding, and that the owners of stallions who at first were—in some instances—inclined to oppose are now aiding in the enforcement of the provisions of the laws.

The question may be asked as to what is becoming of the unsound, grade, and mongrel stallions. The reports from the various states show that as the patronage of inferior animals decrease they are either castrated or shipped out, undoubtedly into those states where there is no law to compel them to stand under their true condition of soundness and breeding, thus continuing their destructive work to the horse industry.

It is in these states that breeders should exercise the greatest caution before deciding to which stallion they will breed their mares. They should demand of the stallion owner that they be permitted to examine the certificate of registration and pedigree in order to learn if the animal is properly registered in a reliable studbook, and if the age, color and description agree with the stallion whose service is being considered. If the certificate does not agree with the stallion it is evident that something is wrong, and it will be much wiser to refuse the service of the stallion than to accept it, pay the fee and run the risk of getting a nondescript foal, expensive to raise, and for which there will be a poor market.

If a breeder is not familiar with pedigrees and registration societies he should consult his state agricultural college or experiment station, giving all facts regarding the stallion being considered for service. In this way much information may be secured that will be of value to him in the future when the question of breeding comes up.

BARNARD.

Wm. N. Lewis of Boyne City spent Sunday here with his family. Mrs. Wm. Meggison visited last week at the home of H. Gornell.

Miss Edna Strigley of Hayes township is visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Shapton this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Burns and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Shapton went to Petoskey Tuesday, making the trip in Mr. Burns's car.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Burns visited at the homes of Hugh King and Wm. Williams in Ironton. They made the trip in their fine new Overland car.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gornell, a fine ten-pound baby girl on Sunday. Name, Jane Elizabeth. Mr. and Mrs. Gornell were formerly residents of Barnard, but now live in Charlevoix, where Mr. Gornell has employment on the Waller farm.

The I. T. class attended a party given by the Charlevoix-Epworth League at the Methodist church Monday evening. After the election of officers the evening was spent in the playing of games, etc. The Barnard participants report a very good time.

Donald Bennett went down to Dr. Armstrong's office Monday evening and had the plaster cast taken off his leg and the steel brace attached. The leg came out of the cast in fine shape, it being exactly four months since the operation was performed. The cast still has to be worn at night, the steel brace being only for the day time.

George Willis and Miss Charlotte Hull were quietly married Saturday evening at the Baptist church in Charlevoix by Rev. L. C. Vinyard. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ager. The young couple will make their home for the summer with the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Willis of Barnard. They have the heartfelt congratulations of their many friends in and around Barnard.

The Golden Rule Sunday school class were entertained at a ten-cent tea at the home of their teacher, Mrs. Wm. Burns, last Wednesday afternoon. They voted to give $5.00 toward buying the paint for the church. The Royal Oaks have given $12.00, the I. T. class $5.00, and the Gideons think they will be able to raise $10.00, making a total of $32, which Rev. Mr. Rood thinks will be a sufficient amount. He has kindly offered to do the work himself.

There was a program at Hiltion school Thursday night of last week, the occasion being the last day of school, and it was well attended. After the program frankforts and buns were served and they also had a marshmallow roast.

Napoleon's Power.

General Fox, the French military critic of the time of Napoleon, speaking of Napoleon's strength and his weakness, said: "Only the founders of religion have exercised upon their followers an authority comparable to that which made him the absolute master of his armies. This moral power became to him a fatal gift. He came to believe that he could prevail even against the most powerful material force, and this led him to scorn certain rules, the long continued violation of which could not remain unpunished."

Why We Are Opposing A Government Armor Plant

To the People:

Some people say that the very fact that the Bethlehem Steel Company is so aggressively fighting the proposal to build a Government armor plant is conclusive proof that the Company is seeking to assure for itself the "vast profits" derived from private manufacture.

The fact is that armor making is the least profitable feature of steel manufacture.

The reason we oppose a Government plant is very simple. It is this:

Even though there is but little profit in the making of armor, we have invested over $7,000,000 in our armor plant;

That plant is useless for any other purpose; if a Government plant is built the usefulness of our plant is destroyed.

It would be good business for us to make armor for the Government at any price over and above the actual shop cost, RATHER THAN SACRIFICE OUR ENTIRE INVESTMENT.

We do not seek to save big profits; our purpose is very frankly to save our armor plant—itsself built solely for the use of the Government—from going to the scrap heap.

To do that, we are prepared to agree for any period to any terms of manufacture which the Federal Trade Commission shall say absolutely protects the Government of the United States.

PNEUMATIC HAMMERS.

Greatly Superior in Efficiency to the Ordinary Hand Tool.

The hammer is one of the oldest tools used by man in his daily occupation, says the Engineering Magazine. From the stone hammer of the cave man to the pneumatic hammer, which today rivets together our skyscraping office buildings, our battleships and our gigantic bridges, is a long step, but practically all the progress made during that time has been accomplished during the present generation.

We read of ships that require a million rivets to hold the plates together. Think of the time saved in driving these rivets when we consider that the pneumatic hammer will strike twenty times as many blows as the hammer in the hands of the most expert iron worker. And riveting is not the only work on which these hammers save time in putting a vessel's plates together. They are useful in more ways than a common hammer in the hands of an expert mechanic. In riveting a ship's plates together it is found that an edge of one needs chipping it is only necessary to insert a chisel in the pneumatic hammer and the work can be done very quickly and with ease. Here the cost of taking the plate back to the shop to be planed is saved, and this saving in one case alone may amount to the cost of the pneumatic tool.

A Scale Solvent.

When the circulating water of gas engine piston rods, exhaust valve jackets and small piping causes the rapid collection of scale, due to a combination of hardness of the water and suspended matter, the use of commercial muriatic acid is very effective in soft-teering on the scale, which may afterward be washed out. The acid should be introduced in its undiluted strength into the parts where the scale has formed and allowed to stand for four or six hours. Before applying the acid the part to be treated should be separated from the balance of the water spaces by disconnecting the piping and plugging the outlets. The spent acid may be allowed to flow to the sewer, together with the loosened scale. The space should be thoroughly washed out with a strong stream of water to get entirely rid of all the scale.

Stick Valves.

A useful tip for diagnosing sticky valve stems in those engines fitted with an extra air valve is as follows: When running downhill with the air valve full open a sticking inlet or exhaust valve is easily noticed by the irregular hiss produced by the entering air, compared with the regular hiss caused by properly setting valves. The difference is much more easily recognized when the car is running slowly, and consequently the beats of the pistons are separated by longer intervals.

Stopping Knots.

A mixture of red lead and a good water paint is effective in stopping knots when other mixtures have failed. Sometimes a knot is so large and troublesome that it is necessary to cut it out and replace it with a neatly fitted piece of straight grained wood.

Soma Difference.

"So he did, but it was an oil well."

CUTICLE AND CONSCIOUSNESS.

President Wilson made a speech at a Washington club the other night and from a report of his language as published in a Washington newspaper we are enabled to catch a glimpse of the workings of the Wilsonian mind. Mr. Wilson said that, from his prior experience—evidently referring to his career as a school master—he had learned that the most direct approach to a boy's consciousness lies through his cuticle. In other words, if you want to influence a boy, spank him. This practice the president heartily approves of. He has tried to apply it to congress, with only measurable success, and congress is very tired of it. In some instances congressmen have successfully revolted against the schoolmaster's birch. They did it in the case of the Philippines bill, in the case of Rublee, and they plan to repeat the process with Brandeis.

There are others beside schoolboys and congressmen to whom this practice of birching is likewise applicable. Even presidents are not sacrosanct in regard to it, as Mr. Wilson will learn before long. In the past three years many attempts have been made to approach his consciousness. Reputable business men have gone to Washington, thinking that out of their experience they could tell him something enlightening to his inexperience. They have been met with the assertion that they are corrupt and insidious lobbyists. Senators and representatives have gone to the White House trying to tell the president what congress thinks of different matters. They have gone away with the executive expletives wounding their sensibilities and shattering their ear-drums. These incidents are numerous—and it is now evident that the only approach to the presidential consciousness is by way of his cuticle. Maps are being made for utilizing that approach.

The one feature of the Mexican trouble that Americans cannot overlook is that by his vacillating policy President Wilson has enabled the Mexicans—both defacto rulers and bandits—to secure the arms and ammunition with which they have slaughtered citizens of the United States. Although Villa has a notorious record as a murderer, outlaw and ex-convict, he was for a time a favorite of the administration, and his forces were permitted to secure arms and munitions in this country. It is everywhere recognized that if the embargo on arms had been consistently maintained the Mexican situation would be much better and many American lives would have been saved and much property preserved from destruction. No amount of sophistry can conceal or evade the facts.

The arrangement which General Scott arrived at with Obregon is described at Washington as a "gentleman's agreement." We think there is an error in the grammatical number in this language. So far as Gen. Scott is concerned it is undoubtedly a "gentleman's agreement." But as for the Obregon end of it, well, that is a different story.

"I have to deal with some men who know no more of the modern processes of politics than if they were living in the 18th century," declares President Wilson. That is pretty tough criticism of the president's cabinet.

It is estimated that the annual loss to agriculture in this country from the depredations of insects and rodents alone is $10,000,000,000.—Trenton Weekly Republican.—And the Democratic free trade bugbears first on the list of offenders.

"What is a triple alliance, Tommy?" "It's when pa and ma and the school-teacher agree that I ought to have a lickin'."

A clergyman was being shaved by a barber who had evidently become unnerved by the previous night's dissipation. Finally he cut the clergyman's chin. The latter looked up at the artist reproachfully and said: "You see, my man, what comes of hard drinking. 'Yes, sir,' replied the barber consolingly, 'It makes the skin tender.'"

Evelyn is very cowardly, and her father decided to have a serious talk with his little daughter. At the close of his lecture, Short Stories recounts that Evelyn took the initiative thus: "Father," she said, "when you see a cow ain't you 'fraid?'" "No, certainly not, Evelyn." "When you see a bumblebee, ain't you 'fraid?'" "No!" with scorn. "Ain't you 'fraid when it thunders?" "No," with laughter. "Oh, you silly, silly child!" "Pappa," said Evelyn, solemnly, "ain't you 'fraid of nothing in the world but mama?"

A young couple were engaged to be married. "Mabel, there is something I ought to tell you about myself," said Tom, soberly, as they were strolling in the moonlight.

"What is it, Tom?" asked the girl. "Well, Mabel, I hate to tell you, but I don't think I would be doing right not to," and he glanced anxiously at the pale face of his promised bride. "The fact is," he continued, hesitatingly, "I am a somnambulist."

"Never mind, Tom," cheerfully replied the girl, "I am a Congregationalist, but we'll go to your church one Sunday and mine the next."

For what do you mane by writing me that my Jimmie can't pass into the next grade?" stormed an irate female, bursting into the principal's room. "An' after him doin' such grand work all the year."

"Why, Mrs. Flinerty," replied the teacher, "you must know better than that. I've sent you his report cards every month and you know that his marks have been nearly all D's."

"Indade they hov, and yit you say he can't pass. I don't understand it, mum."

"I am afraid you don't understand our system of marking. 'D' means deficient, you know."

"Sure, I don't know phat that may be, mum, but Jimmie told me all about the letters. Sure 'D' is dandy, 'C' is corking, 'B' is bum, an' 'A' is awful—an' he's got 'C's' and 'D's' every month."

Another Victory for Teddy.

At the league social and business meeting held at the Methodist church Monday evening a straw vote was taken to ascertain the choice of those present for candidate for president of the United States. The result of the ballot was as follows: Roosevelt, 25; Wilson, 2; Taft, 2; Bryana, 2, and Hughes, 1.

TOOLS OF STELLITE.

Produce Better Results Than Steel in Machine Shop Work.

Perhaps no better idea can be gained of the practical value of stellite in the machine shop than by actual illustration. In a certain factory a steel tool had been used for cutting off gear blanks from a three inch round nickel steel bar. The operator by using a soap solution on the tool was able to cut off one blank in eight and one-half minutes. A stellite tool was substituted for the steel one, and he was able to cut off a blank in just a little over four minutes, and in the actual day's run he cut just twice the number that could be cut off with the steel tool.

It should be distinctly remembered that stellite is not a steel, and it is not more logical to call it by the same name than to call brass copper or diamonds steel. Stellite is a compound of iron with other materials, and iron is always the predominating and essential constituent of all steels. Stellite is composed of the metal cobalt alloyed with other substances and contains no iron.

It must not therefore be confused with the so called cobalt steels, which are alloys of iron or steel with cobalt and other metals. The introduction of iron into stellite is always detrimental. The stellite machine tools are neither forged nor hardened. If they were affected by heat they would lose their hardness when raised to a high cutting temperature. If they could be forged it would be necessary for them to soften at a high temperature, which would, of course, destroy their cutting edge; hence they are cast as nearly as possible into the desired form, then finished by grinding.—Ellwood Hayes in Iron Age.

TOWN OF CONCRETE.

Houses Poured in Sections of One Story at a Time.

A small city of concrete houses is being poured at Midland, Pa., by the Pittsburgh Crucible Steel company for its employees. The houses, two stories in height, are of four rooms each and cost complete about $1,000 each. This includes a charge of $25 to cover the expense of the forms, which represent an expenditure of about $3,000.

Clean looking, with white exterior, the houses are plain, but far from unattractive in appearance. Across the front of each house extends a raised concrete porch, from which three steps lead to the lawn. The front door opens directly into the living room 15 by 10½ feet, from which is taken the space which is required for a three foot stairway leading to the upper floor. Back of the living room is a kitchen 15 by 15½ feet. The dividing partition is of solid concrete and contains the chimney, which extends through the roof.

In pouring the house the steel forms for the first floor are set, and that part of the structure is cast as a monolith. When the mixture has set to sufficient strength the molds are removed and used in pouring the second story, which contains two rooms, corresponding in size to those on the lower floor. The great sanitary advantage of the house lies in the fact that it may be washed like a paved street from roof to floors with a hose.

GRADE CROSSING FACTS.

General Elimination Rendered Impossible by Cost Involved.

It would cost about one-half our capitalization to eliminate grade crossings on the Baltimore and Ohio system, about $350,000,000. If we were to start today and finish three years from now, said the chief engineer of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad in a recent speech. The Pennsylvania railroad has published a statement that to eliminate all its grade crossings would cost $900,000,000. That means about $1,000,000,000 for only two railway systems of the many in this country. Think of it! A general elimination is impossible.

This country is too young and in too undeveloped a stage to allow so much of its resources to be so used. Possibly there may be or will be in time a broad economic reason for the elimination of 30 per cent of the grade crossings, but it would be a great waste of the resources of this country to eliminate the other 70 per cent if some method could be found to safeguard human life, such as proper laws thoroughly enforced. Eventually I believe the fairness of the general public will make the division on an equitable basis of the expense of such crossings as may have to be eliminated.—Engineering News.

Irrigation in Hawaii.

"Man's water" is an irrigator's term in common use in Hawaii. It signifies the amount of water that one irrigator can properly handle in the field. It varies greatly, being dependent upon the condition of the furrows, the age of the crop and the skill and individuality of the irrigator. Some measurements indicate that it is about 0.75 second foot. It may be almost any quantity under 1 second foot, which is approximately two-thirds of a million gallons per twenty-four hours.

The Combustion Flame.

The color of the flame of combustion indicates the mixture of gasoline and air that is being used. To see this requires an open priming cock on one cylinder while the engine is running, and it can be best seen where it is moderately dark. An orange colored flame indicates too rich a mixture. A pale yellow flame at low speed, merging into purple and then almost transparent, indicates a proper mixture.—Automobile Dealer and Repairer.

HAD A FINE MEETING.

Ironton Gleaners Entertain Charlevoix Business Men.

Charlevoix business men and members of the Commercial Association, 18 in number, attended, an open meeting of the Ironton Gleaners last Thursday evening.

The meeting was held in the schoolhouse, and the room was filled to capacity. Short speeches were made by both Gleaners and business men, and questions heretofore misunderstood were thrashed out. It could be readily seen that a different feeling existed between those in attendance after matters which had been misunderstood were fully discussed, and the meeting was productive of much good.

After the meeting the visitors were treated to excellent home-made cake and ice cream. A few meetings of this nature will bring the farmer and business man in closer touch with each other, which in a large sense means a successful future to all concerned.

Business Men as Guests.

Members of the Charlevoix Commercial Association and other professional and business men have received an invitation from Marion Center Grange to meet with them on the evening of Friday, June 16. On this evening the grange will hold an open meeting and have extended the hand of welcome to the business men of Charlevoix to meet with them. The meeting should be well attended, both by the grangers and the business men.

CHAPTER I.

In Which the Tide Takes a Hand.

THE ship stole through the darkness with extreme caution, feeling her way past bay and promontory. Around her was none of that phosphorescent glow which lies above the open ocean, even on the darkest night, for the mountains ran down to the channel on either side. In places they overhung, and where they lay upraised against the dim sky it could be seen that they were unaided with heavy timber. All day long the Nebraska had made her way through an endless succession of straits and sounds, now squeezing through an inlet so narrow that the somber spruce trees seemed to be within a short arm's throw, again plowing across some open reach where the pulse of the north Pacific could be felt. Out through the openings in seaward stretched the restless ocean, or across uncounted leagues, to Saghalien and the rim of Russia's prison yard.

Always near at hand was the deep green of the Canadian forests, denser, darker than a tropic jungle, for this was the land of "dense waters." The hillsides were carpeted knee deep with moss, wet to saturation. Out of every gulch came a howling stream whipped to milk white frenzy; snow lay heavy upon the higher levels, while now and then from farther inland peered a glacier, like some dead monster crushed between the granite peaks. There were villages, too, and fishing stations, and mines and quarries. These burst suddenly upon the view, then slipped past with dreamlike swiftness. Other ships swung into sight, rushed by and were swallowed up in the labyrinthine maze afloat.

Those passengers of the Nebraska who had never before traversed the "inside passage" were loud in the praises of its picturesque quality, while those in whom the route was familiar seemed to find an ever fresh fascination in its shifting scenes.

Among the latter was Murray O'Neil. The whole north coast from Flatley to St. Elias was as well mapped in his mind as the face of an old friend, yet he was forever discovering new vistas, surprising panoramas, amazing variations of color and topography. The mysterious rifts and passageways that opened and closed as if to lure the ship astray, the trackless confusion of islets, the strea of the waterfalls, the silent hills and glaciers and snow soaked forests—all appealed to him strongly, for he was at heart a dreamer.

Yet he did not forget that security such as this, lovely as it is by day, may be dangerous at night, for he knew the weakness of steel hulls. On some slides his experience and business training had made him sternly practical and prosaic. Ships, aroused by maneuver of enthusiasm in him except as means to an end. Italian had no glamor of romance in his eyes, for having built a number of them, he had outlived all poetic notions regarding the "iron horse," and once the rails were laid he was apt to lose interest in them. Nevertheless he was almost poetic in his own quiet way, interweaving practical thoughts with fanciful visions, and he loved his dreams. He was dreaming now as he leaned upon the bridge rail of the Nebraska peering into the gloom with watchful eyes. From somewhere to port came the occasional commands of the officer on watch, echoed lustily from the hazy interior of the wheelhouse. Up overside rose the whisper of rushing waters; from underfoot came the rhythmic heat of the engines far below. O'Neil shook off his mood and began to wonder idly how long it would be before Captain Johnny would be ready for his "nightcap."

He always traveled with Johnny Brennan when he could manage it, for the two men were boon companions. O'Neil was wont to live in Johnny's cabin or on the bridge, and their nightly lullaby to friendship had come to be a matter of some ceremony.

The ship's master soon appeared from the shadows—a short, trim man with gray hair.

"Come," he cried, "it's waiting for us."

O'Neil followed into Brennan's luxurious, well lit quarters, where on a mahogany sideboard was a tray holding decanter, siphon and glasses, together with a bottle of ginger ale. The captain, after he had mixed a beverage for his passenger, opened the bottle for himself. They raised their glasses silently.

"Now that you're past the worst of it," remarked O'Neil, "I suppose you'll turn in. You're getting old for a hard run like this, Johnny."

Captain Brennan snorted. "Old? I'm a better man than you, yet. I'm a teetotaler, that's why. I discovered long ago that salt water and whiskey don't mix."

O'Neil stretched himself out in one of Brennan's easy chairs. "Really," he said, "I don't understand why a ship carries a captain. Now, of what earthly use to the line are you, for instance, except for your beauty, which, no doubt, has its value with the women? I'll admit you preside with some grace at the best table in the dining saloon, but your officers know these channels as well as you do. They could make the run from Seattle to Juneau with their eyes shut."

"Indeed they could not, and neither could I."

"Oh, well, of course I have no respect for you as a man, having seen you without your uniform."

The captain grinned in thorough enjoyment of this rally. "I'll say nothing at all of my seamanship," he said, relapsing into the faintest of hedges, "but there's no denying that the master of a ship has many unpleasant and disgusting duties to perform. He has to amuse the prominent passengers who can't amuse themselves, for one thing, and that takes tact and patience. Why, some people make themselves at home on the bridge, in the chart room, and even in my living quarters, to say nothing of consuming my expensive wines, liquors and cigars."

"Meaning me?"

"I'm a brutal seafaring man, and you'll have to make allowances for my well known brusqueness. Maybe I did mean you. But I'll say that next to you Curtis Gordon is the worst grafter I ever saw."

"You don't like Gordon, do you?" O'Neil queried with a change of tone.

"I do not! He went up with me again this spring, and he had his widow with him too."

"His widow?"

"You know who I mean—Mrs. Gerard. They say it's her money he's using in his schemes. Perhaps it's because of her that I don't like him."

"Ah-h! I see."

"You don't see, or you wouldn't grin like an ape. I'm a married man, I'll have you know, and I'm still on good terms with Mrs. Brennan, thank God. But I don't like men who use women's money, and that's just what our friend Gordon is doing. What money the widow didn't put up he's grabbed from the schoolmarm and servant girls and society matrons in the east. What has he got to show them for it?"

"A railroad project, a copper mine, some coal claims."

"Bah! A menagerie of wildcats!"

"You can't prove that. What's your reason for distrusting him?"

"Well, for one thing, he knows too much. Why, he knows everything, he does. Art, literature, politics, law, finance and draw poker have no secrets from him. He's been everywhere—and look how he speaks a dozen different languages. He outargued me on poultry raising, and I know more about that than any man living. He can handle a drill or a conch and four; he can tell all about the art of ancient Babylon, and he beats me playing cribbage, which shows that he ain't on the level. He's the best informed man outside of a university, and he drinks ten of an afternoon, with his legs crossed and the sugar balanced on his heel. Now, it takes years of hard work for an honest man to make a success at one thing, but Gordon never failed at anything. I ask you if a living authority on all the branches of human endeavor and a man who can beat me at 'erit', doesn't make you suspicious?"

"Not at all. I've beaten you myself."

"I was sick," said Captain Brennan.

"The man is brilliant and well educated and wealthy. It's only natural that he should excite the jealousy of a weaker intellect."

Johnny opened his lips for an explosion, then changed his mind and agreed sulkily.

"He's got money, all right, and he knows how to spend it. He and his valet occupied three cabins on this ship. They say his quarters at home are palatial."

"My dear grampus, the mere love of luxury doesn't argue that a person is dishonest."

"Would you let a hired man help you on with your underclothes?" demanded the murmur.

"There's nothing criminal about it."

"Humph! Mrs. Gerard is different. She's all class! You don't mind her having a maid and speaking French when she runs short of English. Her daughter is like her."

"I haven't seen Miss Gerard."

"If you'd stir about the ship instead of wearing out my Morris chair you'd have that pleasure. She was on deck all morning." Captain Brennan fell silent and poked with a stubby forefinger at the fire in his glass.

"Well, out with it," said O'Neil, after a moment.

"I'd like to know the inside story of Curtis Gordon and this girl's mother."

"Why bother your head about some thing that doesn't concern you?" The speaker rose and began to pace the cabin floor, then in an altered tone he said, "Tell me, are you going to land me and my horses at Kynk Bay?"

"That depends on the weather. It's a rotten harbor. You'll have to swim them ashore."

"Suppose it should be rough?"

"Then we'll go on and drop you there coming back. I don't want to be caught on that shore with a southerly wind and that's the way it usually blows."

"I can't wait," O'Neil declared. "A week's delay might ruin me. Rather than go on I'd swim ashore myself, without the horses."

Even as Brennan spoke the Nebraska seemed to halt, to jerk backward under his feet. O'Neil, who was standing, flung out an arm to steady himself; the empty ginger ale bottle fell from the sideboard with a thump. Loose articles hanging against the side walls swung to and fro; the heavy draperies over Captain Johnny's bed swung.

Brennan leaped from his chair; his ruddy face was mottled, his eyes were wide and horror stricken.

"Hannation!" he gasped. The cabin door crashed open ahead of him, and he was on the bridge, with O'Neil at his heels. They saw the first officer clinging limply to the rail; from the pilot house window came an excited burst of Norwegian, then out of the door rushed a quartermaster.

The steady, muffled beating of the machinery ceased, the ship seemed suddenly to lose her life, but it was plain that she was not aground, for she kept moving through the gloom. From down forward came excited voices as the crew poured up out of the forecabin.

Brennan leaped to the telegraph and signalled the engine room. He was calm now, and his voice was sharp and steady.

"Go below, Mr. James, and find the extent of the damage," he directed, and a moment later the bell began to throb once more to the threat of the propeller.

Inside the wheelhouse Swan recovered from his panic and repeated the master's orders mechanically.

"Tell me where and how I can help," Murray offered. His first thought had been of the possible effect of this catastrophe upon his plans, for true was pressing. As for danger, he had looked upon it so often and in so many forms that it had little power to stir him, but a shipwreck, which would halt his northward rush, was another matter.

Brennan stepped into the chart room, but returned in a moment to say:

"There's no place to beach her this side of Hallbut Bay."

"How far is that?"

"Five or six miles."

"You'll have to beach her?"

"I'm afraid so. She feels queer."

Up from the cabin deck came a handful of men passengers to inquire what had happened; behind them a woman began calling shrilly for her husband.

"We touched a rock," the skipper explained briefly. "Kindly go below and stop that spawking. There's no danger."

"The captain rang for full speed, and the decks began to strain as the engine increased its labor. 'Get your passengers out and stand by the boats,' he ordered. 'Take it easy and don't alarm the women. Have them dress warmly, and don't allow any crowding by the men. Mr. Tomlinson, you hold the steering engine in check. Take your revolver with you.' He turned to his silent friend, in whose presence he seemed to feel a cheering sympathy.

"I knew it would come sooner or later, Murray," he said. "But—magnificent! To touch on a clear night with the sea like glass!" He sighed

so long that your conscience will not trouble you, just as you can cultivate a bad habit so long that you cease to think it wrong. Even the best of us, with the most careful management, are bound to waste a certain amount of money. Somehow it gets away from us, try as we will to prevent it. But the man who deliberately throws his money at something he can't hit, whether it be a negro's head or a business proposition, must not complain if the ball goes wide of the mark.

The spendthrift tendency of the American people is one of the chief causes of poverty and want. To overcome this tendency and make the future generation a thrifty and saving one is one of the chief aims of this bank.

Student Burned.

Crawford Faust, a member of the Elk Rapids senior class, was painfully burned with nitric acid Wednesday while working in the laboratory at the high school. In taking from a high shelf a supposedly empty nitric acid bottle, he tipped the bottle carelessly and the liquid poured out upon his throat, burning from chin to chest. The throat of his soft shirt was open and this made it easy for the acid to reach his throat and chest. It was dressed by a doctor and Crawford is doing his school work the same as before he met with the accident.

Murder in Cheboygan County.

Tower, in Maple Grove township, 14 miles west of Oshtemo, was the scene of a murder last Thursday forenoon, when John LaFrance shot and killed Charles Parue when he found the latter in company with his wife.

Becoming enraged at finding his wife and Parue together, LaFrance pulled a gun and shot Parue to death. LaFrance made an effort to get away and was placed under arrest and is being held on a charge of wilful murder, without bail, in the Cheboygan county jail. His examination is set for Wednesday, June 7.

An Arab Legend.

"There is none so poor but there is one poorer."

A poor Arab spent his last denar on a handful of dates and went up on a high cliff to eat them and die. As he threw the stones over a leech hand shot out below and caught them.

"Ho!" said he. "Why do you catch my date stones?"

"Because, O brother," answered a weak voice, "I have not eaten these three days, and Allah has sent these stones to save my life."

"Praise be to Allah," answered the first man, "for he has saved me also, for here is one poorer than I!"

And both men went into the city.

you any farther." He held her off by her shoulders. "I may have to swim with you; you mustn't cling to me!" O'Neill judged that the ship was at least a quarter of a mile from the beach, and his heart sank, for he doubted that either he or his companion could last long in these waters. It occurred to him that Brennan might be classed by, waiting for the Nebraska to sink—it would be unlike the little captain to forsake his trust until the last possible moment—but he reasoned that the cargo of lives in the shipper's boat would induce him to stand well off to avoid accident. He called lustily time after time, but no answer came. Meanwhile the girl stood quietly beside him.

There followed a wait which seemed long, but was in reality of but a few minutes, for the ship was sliding backward and the sea was creeping upward faster and faster. At last they heard a shuddering sigh as she parted from the rocks and the air rushed up through the deck openings with greater force. The Nebraska swung sluggishly with the tide; then, when her upper structure had settled flush with the sea, Murray O'Neill took the woman in his arms and leaped clear of the rail.

The first gasping moment of immersion was fairly paralyzing; after that the reaction came, and the two began to struggle away from the sinking ship. But the effect of the reaction soon wore off. The water was cruelly cold and their bodies ached in every nerve and fiber. O'Neill did his best to encourage his companion. He talked to her through his clattering teeth, and once she had recovered from the mental shock of the first fearful plunge she responded pluckily. He knew that his own heart was normal and strong, but he feared that the girl's might not be equal to the strain.

At length there came through the man's dazed sensibilities a sound different from those he had been hearing. It was a human voice, mingled with the measured hum of oars in their sockets. It roused him like an electric current and gave him strength to cry out hoarsely. Some one answered him. Then out of the darkness to seaward emerged a deeper light, which loomed up bugily, yet proved to be no more than a lifeboat bristling with people. It came to a stop within an oar's length of him. From the bubble of voices he distinguished one that was familiar and cried the name of Johnny Brennan. His brain had cleared now, a great dreamlike sense of thanksgiving warmed him, and he felt equal to any effort. He was vaguely amazed to find that his limbs refused to obey him.

His own name was being pronounced in shocked tones. The splash from an oar filled his face and strangled him, but he managed to lay hold of the blade and was drawn in until outstretched hands seized him.

An oarsman was saying: "Be careful there! We can't take him in without swamping!"

But Brennan's voice shouted, "Make room or I'll bech to your bloody skull!"

Another protest arose, and O'Neill saw that the craft was indeed loaded to the gunwales.

"Take the girl quick!" he implored.

"I'll hang on! You can't tow me."

The lump form was removed from his side and dragged over the thwart while a murmur of excited voices went up.

"Can you hold out for a minute."

Murray asked Brennan.

"Yes—I think so."

"I'd give you my place, but you're too big to be taken in without danger."

"Go ahead," chattered the man in the water. "Look after the girl before it's too late."

The captain's stout hand was in his collar now, and he heard him crying: "Pull, you muscle bound beasts! Everybody sit still! Now away with her, men. Keep up your heart, Murray, my boy. Remember it takes more than water to kill a good Irishman. It's only a foot or two farther, and they've started a fire. Serves you right, you big idiot, for going overboard with all those boats. Man dear, but you're pulling the arm out of me. It's stretched out like a garden hose. Hey! Cover up that girl, and you, lady. (To be continued next week)

WINTERING CATTLE ON SILAGE ALONE

Placing a crop of corn or Kafir in the silo does not change its composition. This process of preserving makes it possible for the animal to utilize a larger proportion of the nutrients, but it will still be an unbalanced feed, says the Kansas Farmer. Mature stock cattle might be wintered on silage alone, but better results will always follow the use of some other feed, and wherever possible this should be some legume roughage, such as alfalfa hay. Silage and alfalfa will winter stock cattle in splendid shape without the feeding of any grain. The Missouri experimental station reports feeding some yearling cattle for 150 days on corn silage and clover hay without grain, the cattle gaining 200 pounds during this period, at a total cost of but 5 1/2 cents a pound for the gain made. A similar lot of cattle fed clover hay as the only roughage and six pounds of shelled corn daily to the animal made similar gains, but the cost was at the rate of 7.3 cents a pound.

At the Kansas station calves have been wintered satisfactorily on corn.

That the Galloway is the oldest of the pure breeds of cattle there is little doubt. Accustomed for centuries to an outdoor life in Scotland, the Galloway is never prone to disease, and he has acquired a thick, mossy coat of hair that enables him to withstand all severities of climate. Active, unexcelled as a rustler, he is capable of converting the products of the farm into beef of the finest quality. The bull pictured is a Galloway.

Kafir or cane silage, with the addition of a pound of cottonseed or linseed meal daily per calf, is one trial other cheap roughages were used most satisfactorily with silage. One lot of thirty calves was fed three and one-half pounds of wheat straw, two and one-third pounds of corn stover, three pounds of damaged alfalfa (containing considerable foxtail and about seven pounds of Kafir silage daily per calf. In addition they were given about four-fifths of a pound of grala and made an average gain through the 144 days the trial continued of forty-one pounds a head, and the daily cost of feed had been only 3.3 cents per calf. The total cost of wintering these calves was but $5.72 a head.

It is always best to use silage in conjunction with other feeds if possible. By limiting the amount of silage somewhat it will go a great deal further and will result in a more economical use of all the cheap feed on the farm. If the cattle are given all the silage they will eat early in the season the supply may be exhausted before spring, and bad results will be sure to follow the change from the silage ration to one of dry roughage during the latter end of the season. For this reason it is always a good plan to estimate as closely as possible the amount of silage on hand and so gauge the feeding as to make it last until the pasture season opens.

Jumbo Hogs.

Three of America's biggest hogs are Jumbo Prince, shown at the Iowa state fair, weighed 1,000 pounds; Loag Chief, at Indiana state fair, 1,010 pounds, and Big Tim, Nebraska state fair, 1,125 pounds.

These hogs were of the big type Poland China breed and were active and not overfat.

The figures given here are actual scale weights.—Farm and Fireside.

WHY YOU ARE NERVOUS

The nervous system is the alarm system of the human body.

In perfect health we hardly realize that we have a network of nerves, but when health is ebbing, when strength is declining, the same nervous system gives the alarm in headaches, dizziness, dreamful sleep, irritability and unless corrected, leads straight to a breakdown.

To correct nervousness, Scott's Emulsion is exactly what you should take; its rich nutrient gets into the blood and rich blood feeds the tiny nerve-cells while the whole system responds to its refreshing tonic force. It is free from alcohol.

THEATRICAL

"Gretna Green."

Marguerite Clark, the dainty and fascinating stage and screen favorite, is certain to add appreciably to her astounding popularity in the Famous Players Film Company's four-part picturization of the celebrated comedy romance "Gretna Green," by Grace Livingston Furniss. This quaint and picturesque play possesses all the varying elements essential to the successful screen drama—love, sacrifice, humor, thrill and mystery—and is laid in the charming period of the early 19th century when daring elopements to Gretna Green, a lovers' haven in the north of Scotland, added a dash of excitement to many true love matches, when hearts reigned over the marts of commerce, just before the prose of business usurped the poetry of romance.

In "Gretna Green" Marguerite Clark bewitchingly portrays the adorable character of Dolly Erskine, a little English belle and a bit of a flirt, who queens it over the beaux of the realm with sovereign sway until she loses her heart under circumstances both humorous and dramatic.

Miss Clark's winsome personality, her piquant beauty and elfin grace assist her in making the role of Dolly one of her greatest character creations. The romance and humor of "Gretna Green" have thrilled and amused countless audiences as a play, and the screen version of this noted subject, with the amplification of the plot and the authentic reproduction of the famous Green, made possible only through the film production, enhance the general interest and appeal of the story, while the striking and unique costumes of the period contribute to the total charm of the picture.

At the Majestic Theatre, Friday, June 9th.

Among the first cities outside of New York, Boston and Chicago to see "Ramona," the most elaborate film production yet made, will be Charlevoix, which, through a fortunate circumstance, will have this brilliant attraction at an early date. "Ramona" is now in its second month in the metropolis and will open an indefinite engagement at the Chicago Auditorium on June 19th.

"Ramona" was made by W. H. Clune, the Pacific Coast film magnate, who was one of the sponsors for "The Birth of a Nation." He has surpassed all previous records in this pictorial transcript of Helen Hunt Jackson's classic romance, and it has such elaborate musical embellishments that it is called a cinema-opera. It required months to make the costumes for "Ramona." Nearly a full year's time was occupied by the entire forces of one of the largest California studios in completing this film masterpiece.

Not only is the story the record of a boiling pot of human emotions, but it has been called "the love story of the ages," with its four distinct romances. Its incidents are set before backgrounds of wondrous scenic beauty. Many of the scenes were enacted on the very spots named in the romance.

More than three million copies of the book "Ramona" have been sold through two generations, which fact alone attests its power as a great human document. The unusual privilege of seeing so great an attraction here, concurrently with its metropolitan showing will doubtless meet with merited appreciation.

GOOD HIGHWAYS ON THE FARM

Should Be Located With Reference to Efficiency of Plant.

PRIVATE AND PUBLIC ROADS

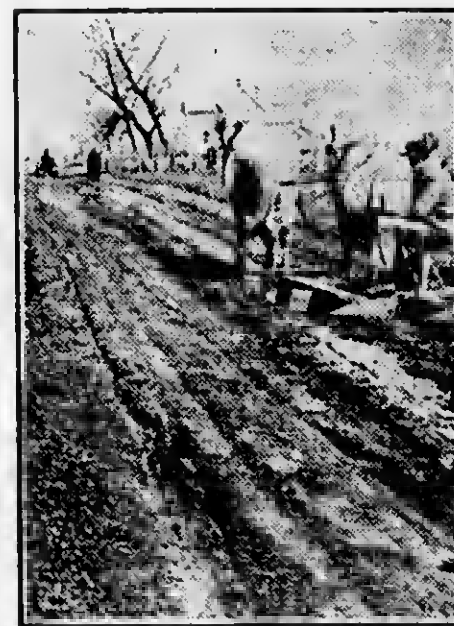

Private Farm Roads Are Called Upon to Bear Less Traffic; Hence Ordinary Methods of Construction and Maintenance Are Modified and the Use of Materials Adapted to Meet Special Requirements.

The private roads on the farm differ in general from the public roads only in the amount and kind of traffic which they carry. The fundamental principles involved in their construction and maintenance are the same. But as the farm road is called on to bear far less traffic the ordinary methods of construction and maintenance are so modified and the use of materials so adapted as to meet the special requirements and reduce the cost. To build the farm roads in the same manner as public thoroughfares, which carry much greater traffic, in general would be a useless waste of money.

The first consideration is the location of the roads and paths about the farm. The roads and paths are a part of the permanent farm plant. Consequently they should be so located as to best serve the purpose for which they are intended, should fit in with the general scheme of the farm and at the same time should avoid as much as possible places which would require difficult and expensive construction or maintenance. The main consideration, however, must be to secure the highest degree of efficiency for the plant.

The earth road is the most common type of farm road and will probably so remain. When properly crowned, drained and maintained with the split log drag or other similar device the earth road on all but a few exceptional soils or in a few places immediately around the farm lots and buildings can be made to answer the requirements fairly well. A little grading will in general give the earth road a crown sloping from the center toward the side ditches at a rate of about one inch to the foot, and side ditches of sufficient size to carry away the storm water can usually be constructed without difficulty. If the ground is springy the side ditches may be made deeper or the ground water may be carried away by tile drains.

The fundamental requirement of an earth road is always good drainage. This involves, first, the removal of the water which reaches the surface of the road from precipitation or otherwise; and, second, in certain places the removal of any ground water which reaches the road from underground seepage. Surface drainage is accomplished by securing a reasonably firm crowned roadway and providing ditches of sufficient size and with ample grade and frequent outlets. Subdrainage to remove the water from beneath the road surface or to prevent its passage into the roadbed is usually accomplished most effectively by so called blind drains or by means of properly located tile drains.

Roads and drives immediately around the farmyards and barns which are used very frequently are usually of sufficient importance to warrant some surface improvement. Very light or extremely sandy soils cut up badly in dry weather, while certain heavy and absorbent soils become very sticky and soft during the rainy season. Where any considerable amount of hauling is necessary roads over soils of this character may require to be surfaced.

Road Engineer Necessary.

James Leland Stamford, a highway engineer, who made a nation wide investigation of road work for the national committee on prisons, which is interested in promoting road building by convicts, says in regard to the lack of efficient supervision of road work generally:

"In forty-four states county road work is carried on under the supervision of county commissioners; in other states it is under the control of the sheriff. These authorities are not trained for their work, and the road work is costly and inefficient. All counties can rying on road work should obtain the services of a county road engineer who is acceptable to the state road authorities and able to work in co-operation with them."

CLOTHES PRESSER.

Machina That Takes the Place of a Tailor's Goose.

The pressing of men's suits and women's tailored garments is made easy by this ironless machine, says Popular Mechanics. The operation is simple. The garment to be pressed is placed in the proper position on the "buck," and then the head, or pressing surface, which is covered with fabric, is pushed down on the garment, and extra pressure is exerted by means of the foot lever.

Inside the pressing head are a number of steam ducts, which moisten and heat the entire pressing surface.

IRONLESS PRESSING MACHINE.

The amount of steam to be used is controlled by means of one of the levers shown at the top of the machine. The steam is furnished by a small gas heated boiler. Live steam is thus brought in direct contact with the material, the garment is pressed uniformly, set, cured and sterilized at one operation. Scorching is impossible, and the garment may be worn immediately after pressing. All irregular surfaces such as shoulders, tops of trousers and skirt, fronts of ladies' jackets and the like are pressed over the rounded end of the buck.

PULVERIZED COAL.

Proves an Economic Fuel in Open Hearth Steel Manufacture.

Officers of the Carnegie Steel company at Sharon, Pa., are greatly elated over the successful culmination of a series of experiments which they have been conducting with pulverized coal in the open hearth furnace recently equipped for that purpose.

The first actual heat with the new form of fuel resulted far beyond expectations. Not only was the quality of the metal higher, but the heat was made in much less time than is required under the old method. The new furnace, according to the officials, will turn out 100 tons of steel daily at less than half the cost of the old method.

Expert steel men declare that the use of the new fuel will revolutionize open hearth steel making. The coal after being pulverized is forced into the big blast furnaces through pipes the same as though it were gas, and the heat obtained is said to be far greater than can be had with the best coke, and the cost is also much less, as the waste from mines and other sources can be utilized.

Age of Forest Trees.

Observations and records as to the general age of trees have shown that the pine tree attains 700 years as a maximum length of life; 425 years is regarded as the allotted span of the silver fir; the larch lives, as a rule, about 275 years, the red beech 245, the aspen 210, the birch 200, the ash 170, the elder 145, the elm 130. The heart of the oak begins to rot at about the age of 300 years. Of the holly it is said that there is a specimen 410 years old near Aschaffenburg, Germany. A count of the annual rings in a gigantic California redwood tree showed that it began to grow in A. D. 550. It was 350 feet high, with a base circumference of ninety feet.

Subway Cars Costly.

The public service commission, first district of New York, serving as a rapid transit commission for New York city, has recently approved contracts for 100 new subway cars. These cars are sixty-seven feet long and ten feet wide, compared with fifty-one and one-half feet and eight and three-quarter feet, respectively, for the existing subway equipment. The car bodies will cost $6,119 each; the motor equipment, $1,110; control apparatus, $975; brake set, $911; each truck, $450; total for each car, $10,000.

Holder For Soldering Fluid.

Soldering fluid can be conveniently kept and carried in a small copper receptacle to which a cover has been soldered. A hole is cut in the center of the top and a three-eighths inch tube soldered to it, the tube being long enough to extend almost to the bottom. Should the holder tip the acid will not be spilled. When carried in a tool bag, where it is liable to be roughly handled, a cork can be put into the tube as an extra precaution.

Billy Sunday's Ten Commandments

I.—Thou Shalt Not Gossip.

There are three ways to spread the news—telephone, telegraph and tell a woman. The devil is so afraid of some of you women he wouldn't get within twenty feet of you.

II.—Thou Shalt Not Covet.

Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's cook, nor his automobile, nor his rubber-tired carriage, nor his private yacht. Many a man would like to have his neighbor's wife. You let her alone.

III.—Thou Shalt Not Tango.

I'm against the rotten, licentious, hell-begotten dance that sends more girls to hell than anything else. I'm in favor of everything that the devil is against, and I'm against everything the devil is in favor of.

IV.—Thou Shalt Not Be Stingy.

Some would-be Christians are so stingy that they would steal flies from a blind spider. There are others so mean that they sing through their noses to save wear and tear on their false teeth.

V.—Thou Shalt Not Have Too Many Beaus.

It's hard to fool a real suitor, and a man doesn't want to marry a girl that's been pawed over by every young buck in the community. The frizzle-headed girl who sits up in a dark parlor until all hours of the morning with one buck after another is on the way to perdition.

VI.—Thou Shalt Not Be Conceited.

A conceited man is like a cheap-skato restaurant, where everything is in the window and nothing on the table but hot air. Self-conceit will always be a millstone around your neck.

VII.—Thou Shalt Not Drink.

The man who says he can drink and let it alone lies. No man ever intended to become a drunkard. Every drunkard started out to be simply a moderate drinker. If you believe you can leave it alone, why don't you?

VIII.—Thou Shalt Not Cuss.

One of the things that show the foundation of a man's character to be rotten is to hear him cuss and vomit-out oaths. I would not trust a profane man any too far in any transaction.

IX.—Thou Shalt Not Dodge Thy Debts.

Some haven't religion enough to pay their debts. Would that I might have a hook, and for every debt that you left unpaid I might jerk off a piece of clothing! If I did, some of you would be left with only a celluloid collar and a pair of socks.

X.—Thou Shalt Not Flirt.

Society takes no note of the flirtation on the street. It waits until the girl has lost her virtue and then slams the door in her face. I wish I could make a girl who flirts see herself as others see her. If you make eyes at a man on the street he will pay you back.

Bonding Issue Defeated.

The proposition to bond the township of Norwood for $13,500 for road building purposes, voted on June 1, was defeated by a vote of 19 for and 36 against. It was the plan of good roads boosters to spend the money in improving the roads in the township other than the amount paid each year for the county road system.

STREET COMMITTEE MAKES A HOLLER

ABOUT CONDITION OF MANY STREETS AND ALLEYS.

General Cleaning Up Needed All Over the City—Alleys in Deplorable Condition.

Do the citizens of Charlevoix want a clean, sanitary community? This is the question that is bothering the street committee and members of the common council more just at the present time than the regular routine business.

There has been few years in the history of the city that as much time and attention has been given to cleaning up the street and alleys as has been given this year. Splendid work has been done—alleys that have remained untouched for years have been slobbered up and put into fine condition. The streets have been cleaned and an effort is being made to keep them clean. But the street committee cannot do this without the co-operation of our citizens.

Take Clinton street for an example. The street has been cleaned several times. For the past day or two a small amount of crushed rock or graveling from the wagons was scattered on the streets. This will be cleaned up as soon as the hauling is over. After the rain Wednesday morning water stood in the street to the depth of several inches. Investigation revealed that residents on the street had thrown the grass cuttings from their lawns in the street along with other small rubbish, and the rush of the waters had carried it into the catch basin, with the result that in a short time it was clogged.

Similar condition exist on other streets, and it will be an utter impossibility for the street committee to keep the public highways in a presentable condition of the residents do not co-operate with them. The committee ask the residents to keep the rubbish off the paved streets. If you have no other place to put it, get a barrel or box and place it in some convenient place on your lot and use it for a dumping place for rubbish and grass cutting.

The street committee also wishes to call particular attention to the deplorable condition of several alleys at the rear of the business houses on Bridge street. Old broken boxes, tin cans, empty barrels, decaying vegetables, and piles of sweepings greet the eye of the on-looker. In many places on the shores of Round lake open sewer outlets, filled to overflowing with sewerage, foul smelling, disease breeding places that should not exist. Even on the river front, parallel with Park avenue, one will find open sewer outlets at the rear of some of our best homes.

What will the result be if the conditions are not remedied? Charlevoix in the past has established a reputation of being a clean, sanitary city, and advertises this fact as an inducement to increase its summer business. What will happen if these facts become generally known to the outside world?

Clean up—get busy at once. Co-operate with the city officials in their effort to make Charlevoix a clean city. Now is the time to do it—not a minute should be lost. Do your part to make "Charlevoix the Beautiful" what it is supposed to be by people who do know the real conditions.

FOUND LYING DEAD ACROSS THE THRESHOLD

Death Takes Mrs. Joseph Seymour
While Doing Morning Work.

Mrs. Joseph Seymour died very suddenly Sunday, June 4, 1916, from heart trouble while engaged in her household duties. She had been under the physician's care for some time before her death, but it was not thought the end would come in the manner that it did. She was alone in the house preparing breakfast, while her husband was at the barn doing the chores. When he returned to the house he found her lying across the threshold dead.

Angeline Supernaw Seymour was born at Ellen-Berg, N. Y., in 1855. In 1870 she was married to Joseph Seymour. To this union seven children were born, three boys and four girls, William, Elmer, Raymond, Mrs. Emma Hebert, Mrs. Minnie Waffle, Mrs. Inez Becket and Mrs. Lillie Yetaw.

She was a resident of Atwood for 37 years, where she made many friends. About four years ago they moved to Charlevoix, also making many friends here.

She was a devoted wife and a loving mother and was thought much of by all who knew her. She leaves to mourn her loss a devoted husband and seven grief stricken children, one sister and four brothers, also a host of friends.

Funeral services were held Tuesday morning, June 6, at 9 a. m., from Catholic church, of which she has been a devoted member all of her life. Interment in Charlevoix cemetery.

Children's Day Exercises.

Children's day exercises in the Methodist church Sunday evening at 7:30. The pastor will baptize a number of children, and 19 will be graduated from the primary department of the Sunday school. Everybody welcome.

DEATH TAKES JUANITA FELTS

ILL LESS THAN TWO WEEKS OF PNEUMONIA

Was Eldest Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Felts—Interment
Today at Rushville, Ind.

The many friends of Miss Juanita Felts were shocked to learn of her death, which occurred Saturday, June 10, at 7:00 a. m. It was known that she was seriously ill with pneumonia, but the news became general that she was on the road to recovery. She was first taken sick Thursday, June 1. The first of the following week she seemed to be better, but on Tuesday a relapse occurred. She made a brave struggle until the end, which occurred as stated above.

Juanita Felts was born March 16, 1883, at Rushville, Indiana. She lived there until in July, 1905, when the family moved to Charlevoix. She was a member of the First Christian church of Rushville. On coming to Charlevoix, her membership was transferred to the Congregational church of this city. She was the eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Felts, and is survived by her parents and two brothers, Clay and Brann, and two sisters, Miss Merle Felts of this city and Mrs. C. J. Herringshaw of Chicago.

Deceased was an active worker in the church, being at the time of her death chairman of the prayer meeting committee of the Christian Endeavor, secretary of the Women's Missionary society, and a willing worker in the Sunday school. She was ever ready to lend a hand in any good cause and was faithful to all her duties.

Funeral services were held from the home Sunday at 4:30, Rev. C. E. Taggart officiating. Her remains were taken the following morning to her former home at Rushville, where interment took place on the 14th.

The floral offerings were beautiful and in a small way testified to the regard all felt for the departed one. She will be greatly missed in the home and the church. The marked passages read from her Bible showed from whence her sweet spirit was fed.

Cracked—But Still Holding

SOMETHING DOING ALL DAY LONG

SUCH IS PLAN OF FOURTH OF JULY COMMITTEE

Fourth of July Celebration in Charlevoix Will Be One Not Soon Forgotten—Three Bonds.

The final plans were completed on Monday of this week for one of the biggest and best Fourth of July celebrations ever held in the city in its history. Various committees were assigned their duties and now all are busy at work, planning amusement and entertainment for the hundreds of people who will be here on this day.

Charlevoix always has a crowd on a Fourth of July celebration or any other occasion of this character. Apparently it makes little difference if neighboring towns celebrate—the crowd comes to Charlevoix where they know they will be entertained and given a good time.

The entertainment will start at 10 o'clock in the forenoon by the big street parade, followed by patriotic exercises in the city park. At the same time there will be a hotly contested ball game between two good teams on the grounds near the golf links. After the dinner hour the street and water sports are booked to occur, besides other free entertainment now under consideration by the committees.

Charlevoix promises something doing every minute of the day. Three bands have been engaged and the merry crowd will be entertained by good music at all times during the day.

The special attractions for the day have not as yet been decided but whatever is booked will be of an entertaining feature. Charlevoix is beyond the air ship and balloon ascension stage, its visitors having been able to see these features at former celebrations. Other features will be provided that have not been seen here before.

HOME TEAM LOSES ITS FIRST BALL GAME

Boys City Proves a Speedy Bunch of Players—Score 21 to 6.

Charlevoix's base ball team lost its first game of the season, Sunday, when Boys City put it over them to the tune of 21 to 6.

Both teams put up a fair sample of ball playing. The visitors excelled in base running and were quick to recover from bad plays and errors. Charlevoix's line up was weak from the start, and the game was lost to the visitors by poor base running in the third and fourth innings.

King, of Charlevoix, was the star attraction of the day, making a home run and a three bagger. Manager Wallace states that in the next game he will spring a new line up and a greatly strengthened team. A game is booked for next Sunday, although the name of the team is not available at the time we go to press.

FARMERS URGED TO PLANT BEANS

PRICE WILL BE HIGH THE COMING SEASON

Estimated 3,500,000 Bushels Will Be Produced in State—Price
$3.00 Per Bushel.

There are many reasons why every farmer in Michigan should include beans in his program of plant- age this year and one reason that stands out far and above all others. Every bushel that is raised will bring more than $3.00 in cash. Even though a total of 10,000,000 bushels were produced in the state during the summer the market would absorb them at that price. It will be absolutely impossible for a grower to lose under such conditions.

Behind this situation there is a reason.

Until two years ago the United States was importing between 1,000,000 and 3,000,000 bushels of beans annually from Europe. Now the process has been reversed. During 1915 3,000,000 bushels were exported. Millions upon millions of cans went to England, France, Greece and other countries and until the present war is over this exportation will increase. This means a demand, a real demand, and, coupled with the known facts that the annual consumption in the United States alone is 10,000,000 bushels, it means that the market never before offered such wonderful advantages to the growers.

The Michigan little pea bean is the pride of the nation. It is the best and it is the easiest of cultivation. It means quick results. The crop is planted up to the 15th of June and is harvested by October 1st. Any rich, well-drained soil will grow beans and good beans may be grown on sand loam, clay or much-mixed clay soil. Thorough preparation is essential, with plenty of dragging and rolling, and uniform seed should be used. Then with fair cultivating care the rest is simple and the profit at the finish will be large.

Last year Michigan produced about 3,500,000 bushels of beans. This year the acreage has been increased so that 10,000,000 bushels will be produced. This means at least $30,000,000 if not more. No single crop could show greater results and farmers realize it. The progressive man in the country knows that, even though he has no munition factory, he may profit by the war. All that he has to do is to put in a crop of beans. The profit is automatic.

Visited Sister Lodge.

Members of Charlevoix Rebekah lodge to the number of 15 visited their sister lodge at Petoskey, Tuesday evening of this week. The trip was made by auto and proved a most enjoyable one. The Petoskey Rebekahs had their regular election of officers and initiation ceremonies, and short talks were given by members of both visiting and home lodge. The affair ended with the usual abundance of refreshments and the Charlevoix Rebekahs reached home in the wee small hours of the morning.

MARRIED AT ESCANABA WEDNESDAY EVENING

Roy M. Babcock United in Marriage to Miss Jean McColl.

Miss Jean McColl, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. McColl, of Escanaba, was united in marriage Wednesday, June 14, at 8:00 p. m., at the home of her parents, to Roy M. Babcock, a well known young business man of this city.

The ceremony was performed by the pastor of the Congregational church of Escanaba, the ring service being used. The bride was dressed in white satin and carried a bouquet of white sweet peas and forget-me-nots. She was attended by her sister, Miss June McColl. Only the immediate family was present.

The bride is well known in Charlevoix, having been engaged by the school board as kindergarten teacher a greater part of the school year. The groom is one of Charlevoix's hustling young business men, connected with the firm of Babcock & Son, florists.

They will be at home to their many friends at 107 E. Upright avenue after June 20.

SUMMER HOMES ARE FILLING UP

ADVANCE GUARD OF SUMMER VISITORS DAILY ARRIVING

Many Well Known Summer Residents Already Here—Outlook is Encouraging.

Summer business is beginning to boom.

Hotels, garages, cafes, soda fountains and divers other local enterprises declare that the advance guard of the resort contingent is arriving. "Filled to the rafters night after night" was the response of the congenial owners of the Hotel Charlevoix, when asked if tourists had begun to arrive in the city. "Have opened the Michigan Inn order to have rooms enough to take care of the increasing crowd," and so on down the line in nearly every line of business. The resort season for 1916 in Charlevoix is on and with in a short time the streets will be crowded with people every hour during the day.

A number of families have already arrived and are occupying their summer homes on the north side, Park avenue, and both the Belvedere and Chicago club resorts.

On Park avenue the cottages of J. L. Crane, W. J. Rachow are now occupied by their summer tenants. The Goldberg family have been here for several days and other cottages will be filled during the present week.

Col. Teasdale, one of our oldest and best known summer residents, has opened his summer home on North Michigan avenue, as well as Col. Shoenberg, Mr. May, and other well known visitors.

Every indication points to a splendid summer business and business men and garage men are rejoicing.

He will also be in attendance at the pageant of "Quakerism in the Central West" and history of Earlham college, to be presented by members of the graduating class.

PATHFINDERS WERE HERE THURSDAY

MARKING ROUTE FOR BIG MOTORCYCLE RACE

Route to Be From Grand Rapids East to Alpena, Thence to Charlevoix and Home.

Six weary and nearly fagged out men on motorcycles came into town Thursday forenoon from Mackinaw City. They were covered with mud from head to foot and were very glad that the hardest part of their trip was over. The six were from Grand Rapids and Detroit. They were pathfinders for the motorcycle race which will be run July 2, 3 and 4 from Grand Rapids, through to Bay City, Roscommon, Alpena, Rogers City, Petoskey, Traverse City and so on around the state back home.

It is expected that over 40 machines will enter this race. They will start at minute intervals from Grand Rapids. At intervals are checking stations where each man must report and have his time taken. Each entrant is given a thousand points to start with and he loses these points in accordance with the number of minutes late at each checking station. If he is ahead of time he cannot leave the checking station until the scheduled time. The pathfinders are choosing just as hard roads as it is possible to find along the trip and it is quite likely that there will be none of the racers ahead of time at Charlevoix.

The pathfinders took the West Michigan Pike out of Charlevoix and then have swung east over the hills in a roundabout way to Traverse City, and from there on south to Grand Rapids.

Each man of the pathfinders rides a fine motorcycle with a cab alongside in which he carries his extra clothes, repair material, etc. The party were here but a short time Thursday forenoon. They had been on the road since June 4. At each turn of the route they mark the road with red paint and their course must be followed by the racers.

An X means straight ahead, R means right and L left. Charlevoix will be one of the checking-in station during the race. All contestants will stop at the business place of Benj. Brown, and their time will be taken. Charlevoix is also a noon stopping place, and the racers will be here for dinner.

The race is being staged by the Grand Rapids Motorcycle club and there are some handsome prizes being hung up. Their coming to Charlevoix will be awaited with considerable interest.

NOTICE

Redical Change in Interest Paid On Bank Deposits.

For some time the banks in Charlevoix county have been paying interest at three percent if left three months, on certificates of deposit. It has been found by the banks that this is too short a time to have funds on deposit and make them earn anything or have any loan value.

In view of this it is agreed by the banks in Charlevoix county, that on and after July 1, 1916, no interest will be paid upon deposits unless the money has been so left for six full months, according to the regular rules of the savings department, which is four percent per annum on all funds left six months or longer. Hereafter this will apply to certificates of deposit likewise.

Many of our customers have expressed themselves to the effect that it is worth as much to them to have a place to leave their funds for a shorter time, as it is worth to a bank to have them. In fairness to all this change is made.

Respectfully,

Charlevoix County Bank,

By A. F. Bridge, cashier.

Charlevoix State Savings Bank,

By W. J. Rachow, cashier.

THRIFT CAMPAIGN 1916

This movement has been planned in every community in our nation. You will see it advertised in the newspapers, the schools, the factory, store and office; the moving picture houses and elsewhere. The plan adjusts itself automatically to large and small cities, counties and agricultural communities.

Many people do not always figure on how much they can save but more often figure far in advance, how they can spend their income. The active season in our city is rapidly approaching and the money-making time is coming. We desire to regenerate a great number of New Savings accounts and see the regeneration of countless numbers already opened.

You are urged to participate. If you have not been saving with any degree of regularity, start in now. $1.00 will open an account in our Savings Department and you add to it weekly or as often as convenient.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Beetles Invade Traverse Region.

Millions of cheery-leaf beetles have suddenly put in an appearance in and around the Traverse region following a strong east wind that lasted nearly 24 hours. So noticeable were the numbers of insects that the teacher of agriculture of the local high school was asked concerning it, and he stated that it was the galleruella cavicollis, heretofore peculiar of the upper peninsula. Orchardists say that a few orchards were slightly infested last year. It is thought that they may breed on the vast wild cheery plains several miles east of the city. The beetle is less than a quarter of an inch in length, oval, and of a dark red color; the antennae and parts of the legs are black. The insects feed on the leaves of the cheery in June, but come again in September. After the adult insects come the larvae, which also do much damage to the foliage of trees.

The state experiment station has spent much time investigating the beetle and its habits, and in Special Bulletin No. 24, published in 1904, discusses the insect and suggests certain remedies. Sticky fly paper or loose cotton is recommended for young trees, as the beetles usually climb instead of fly, when first coming from the ground, after hibernating under the surface. By mixing paris green and lime and using one pound to 175 gallons of water, the beetle may be killed on old trees not in bloom.

Much apprehension is felt here in the sudden introduction of the pest in Grand Traverse county, as the cheery industry is one of the big factors of the region.

House and Contents Burn.

About 12:30 Friday morning Mrs. Fred Warren of East Jordan awoke to find their house on fire and had barely time to get out with their young child. Nothing was saved. The alarm was sent in and the fire company got there as soon as possible but the house was small and the fire had made such headway that it could not be stopped. The company had to string over 1,000 feet of hose from the nearest hydrant to reach the fire. The building was located just east of the Haight Cooperage plant, and the loss will be about $1,000, about half covered by insurance.—Enterprise.

Robbing the Courts

The Vicious Anti-Injunction Proposal

TAKE the protection of the law away from the employer's property! Make it possible to destroy the employer's factory and his goods if he does not accede to any demand made upon him! Tie and gag the circuit judge to prevent him from coming to the assistance of workers upon whom felonious assault is being made! Moli the employer and all his defenders, but do not let the law intervene! These are the preachment and the demands of organized labor in Michigan today.

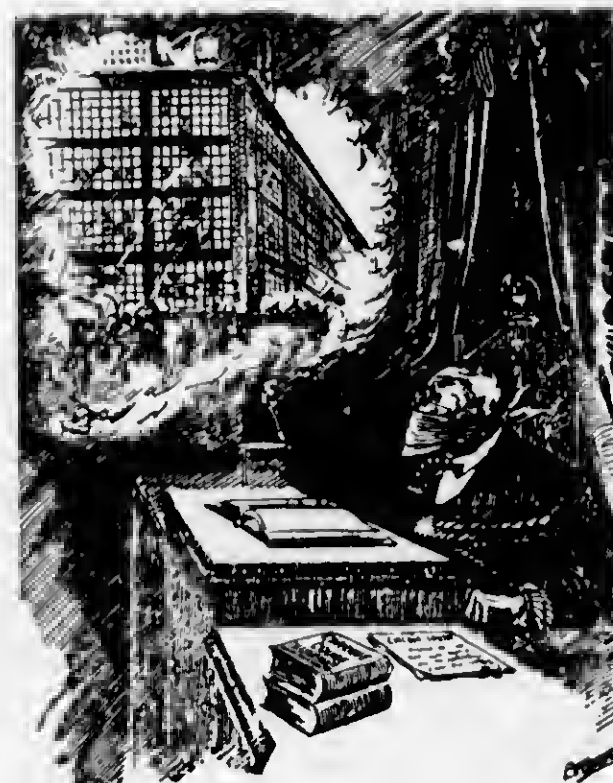

A referendum petition is being circulated throughout the state for a constitutional amendment taking away from the judges the right to issue an injunction in labor disputes. Were this amendment to become part of our constitution, it would be impossible for the employer to appeal to the court for protection, though a mob of strikers were assaulting his workmen, preventing the employment of other help, destroying his property and ruining his goods. The amendment would make it impossible for him to stay the hand of the mob until such time as an amicable agreement could be entered upon or the difficulties adjusted.

Organized labor would have it that a private individual, apprehensive of injury to his property or person, might avail himself of the protection of an injunction; but if an employer, in dispute with his men, no matter how imminent the danger to his life, limb or property, this prohibitory protection should be unavailable.

The injunction, admits organized labor, makes it possible for the employer to hire whom he will; conduct his own business as he deems best; operate his own factory as he thinks it should be operated; exercise his rights as a free-born American citizen. Such is the complaint of organized labor against the law.

Counsel for organized labor even goes so far as to preach the vicious doctrine to the militant union, that in substance the law as administered today compels a man to work for whatever wage an employer wishes to pay him; compels him to work against his will; compels him to submit to any and all conditions his employer may take a notion to impose upon him. Note for instance the statements of one Maurice Sugar, who is a lawyer, according to Detroit Labor News. In a recent address to the Detroit Federation, he said:

Probably 999 out of a thousand men in Michigan today think that the workmen have a right to strike, but he hasn't. The law of Michigan doesn't give him the right to strike. No law taking that right away has been passed, but the courts have made it.

It makes no difference if the picketing done be two or a thousand feet away. If it comes to a show down it will not matter if the picket is five miles away if it is necessary to beat the strike.

In striking labor can only win by violating the law. As a lawyer I'm not supposed to say you should break the law, but I want to see labor win.

Let's assume that violence is used in a strike. Is one not entitled to twelve men or must he sneak up to one man—a judge.

The courts are the law bulwark in this fight and they'll construe laws they are to decide unless we make it absolutely clear that they can't issue injunctions.

Much of the viciousness of this preachment lies in the fact that the lawyer must have known, or at any rate should have known, that he was dangerously misleading his hearers. He must have known that he was falsely interpreting the law. He should have known that he was inciting his hearers to lawlessness and disregard for the very courts that have time and time again conserved the interests of the very men to whom he was preaching.

There is absolutely not a word or suggestion in the laws of the state of Michigan that prevents any man or body of men from quitting work in any shop or plant anywhere in the state. The law does, however, seek to protect the employer against the violence of an aggregation of men who see fit to leave his employ.

There is absolutely nothing in the laws of Michigan that prevents one man from seeking to dissuade another from continuing in a certain man's employ, provided he does so by peaceful and lawful means. The law does, however, prohibit a set of men from intimidating one who wishes to continue his employment, assaulting him and perhaps taking his very life.

The laws of the state of Michigan give the employer the right to hire whom he pleases, just as they give the workman the right to choose his employer and place of employment. The law does not countenance violence during a strike or at any other time, and if organized labor adherents are guilty of using violence, should they have the right to demand that they be exempt from the law on the ground that it is their employer's property at which they are directing such violence?

If a court admonishes a man or body of men to cease using violence, destroying property and assaulting workers, and the injunction is disregarded, should it be necessary for that court to call in a jury of twelve men to pass on the guilt that is admitted? But, says Mr. Sugar, it is not a question of guilt; the guilt is self-evident. The proposition is to so fix the law that such violence cannot be interfered with.

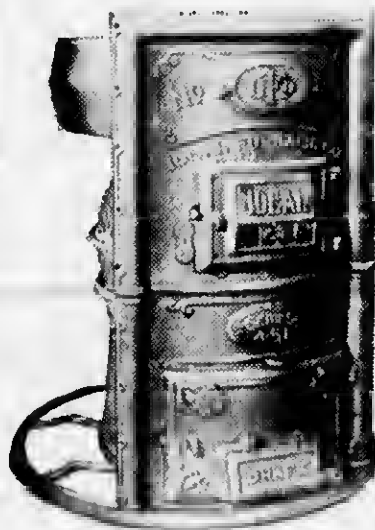

The ranks of organized labor are filled in the main with honest, conscientious, industrious, patriotic workmen. In their very hearts the vast majority of these men have a deep respect for the majesty of the law and for the property rights of an individual, be he an employer or not. The deplorable thing is that they will listen to unscrupulous agitators; that they permit themselves to be led by men who are no respecters of law and order and who preach violence and spread discontent.

In the ranks of organized labor in Michigan today are thousands of men who if the nation issued a call to arms to avenge the wrongs committed against American citizens on American soil by the Mexicans, would lay down their tools and take up arms in defense of their flag. Yet the Labor News deliberately insults their intelligence and belittles their patriotism, and also insults the colored men who have enrolled for service under the stars and stripes, by publishing this statement:

African troops are marching into Mexico. Will this be the beginning of a war of conquest? A cry is already going up for the annexation of part of Mexico. Who wants it? Otis, that "grey wolf," that notorious opium shopkeeper of Los Angeles, and his pet socialist, Candler.

It is time that organized labor threw off the galling yoke.

Time to Think About that New Heating Plant

Right now is the time to settle all details regarding that new heating plant. It's a bad time just at the beginning of the cool weather in the fall. Do it now, while there is plenty of time for installation and obtaining the proper material. I handle the

Bell Hot Air Furnaces

These furnaces are designed and constructed expressly to heat by piping to separate rooms. They have capacity sufficient to heat comfortably from 7 to 9 medium sized rooms. Last season I sold and installed 87 of these furnaces in Charlevoix and vicinity. This year I expect to sell over 100. They give satisfaction. That's the reason I can sell them. We guarantee them to give perfect satisfaction, and so far they have not failed to do so. In fact we have that confidence in the Bell Furnaces that we install them without asking for a dollar in payment until you are satisfied they are all that we represent them to be. I also handle the Ideal Hot Air and Steam Heating Plants. Some prefer these—you can have your choice. Just drop me a card if you are interested in Furnaces.

ITS MANY EXCELLENT PROVISIONS SHOULD BE STUDIED

Seems to Cover Almost Every Possible Condition Which Should Be Needed.

Three weeks ago the Courier published some laws of the state of Ohio in reference to loads of autos. Below we continue these interesting and for the most part sensible laws. This division deals with speeds, signs, horns, etc., right of way and lights.

Article V—Speeds.

Sec. 1.—No motor vehicle shall operate on a road at a greater speed than:

8 miles per hour in the business or closely built up portions of a municipality;

15 miles per hour in other portions of a municipality;

20 miles per hour, outside of municipalities. (12604 G. C.)

Sec. 2.—No vehicle shall operate on a road at a speed greater than is reasonable or proper or so as to endanger the property, life or limb of any person. (12603 G. C.)

Sec. 3.—No motor or other power vehicle carrying a weight in excess of four tons including the vehicle operated upon any road at a speed greater than 15 miles per hour and no such vehicle carrying a weight in excess of eight tons including the vehicle shall be operated at a speed greater than 6 miles per hour when such vehicle is equipped with iron or steel tires, or greater than 12 miles per hour when the vehicle is equipped with tires of rubber or other similar substance.

Sec. 4.—No vehicle shall cross a road or make any turn at a dangerous speed.

Sec. 5.—Where "Danger" and "Go Slow" signs appear, the speed of any vehicle shall not exceed twelve miles per hour.

Sec. 6.—Trucks and heavy wagons shall not be driven recklessly so as to endanger the public.

Sec. 7.—No vehicle shall emerge from an alley, stable, garage, or any private drive or entrance faster than a walk or six miles per hour.

Sec. 8.—A vehicle upon approaching a crossroad shall slow down sufficiently to prevent any danger from meeting other vehicles on the crossroad.

Sec. 9.—No person shall race any horse or motor vehicle on a road whether the running, racing or trotting be for trial or speed or for the purpose of passing another horse or vehicle.

Sec. 10.—A motor vehicle, road roller or traction engine shall slow down when approaching a horse, if the horse appears to be frightened, and if the driver of the horse shall signal the driver of the vehicle the latter shall be brought to a stop, and if the circumstances require it, the engine shall be stopped, provided such signal be given in good faith and under circumstances of necessity. Such vehicle shall remain stationary so long as may be reasonable to allow such horse to pass. (12605 G. C.)

Sec. 11.—In case of injury or damage to person or property, due to the operation of a vehicle, the operator or driver of said vehicle shall stop, and, upon request of the person, give his name and address and that of the owner of the vehicle. (12606 G. C.)

ANNOUNCEMENT

I wish to announce to the voters of Charlevoix County that I will be a candidate for nomination for the office of Register of Deeds at the Primary Election to be held August 29, 1916, and ask your support and if nominated and later elected will administer the duties of the office to the best of my ability.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

No notes last week because of the content of the following:

Of the 12 county normal graduates more than half have been placed in good schools for the coming year.

Norwood No. 2 and Marion No. 3 have not yet received the report of the state official visit to their schools. This delay is due to the fact that these two schools were visited by the city instead of the rural inspector. The plans must go through the rural department before being returned but will be better for a second revision.

Miss Grace Gallagher returns to the Garden Island school for another year.

The Hopyard school, Hayes No. 3, was visited by Mr. Coffey on May 29th while he was enroute to Petoskey. The return report of the visit was mailed to the director this week.

The Board of Examiners met Saturday, June 3rd, to determine the outcome of the state eighth grade examination. Two hundred and thirty-four students had written the complete test. Sixty-nine seventh grade students had written the physiology and geography test. A few wrote on several other subjects of their choice. This made a total of 2,540 examination papers to look over. Each paper contained from two to 10 pages of composition to be judged and graded according to state standards.

One hundred and fourteen diplomas were granted, and 114 credits were allowed in physiology and geography to be carried over to the 1917 examination. The members of the Board of Examiners sincerely hope that every holder of an eighth grade diploma will enroll in high school work in September, and that all whose work failed in any respect will prove their pluck by appearing again in 1917 with more determination than ever before.

The winner in the special examination and the highest average in the county will be determined in the near future.

The departure of Miss Himes caused a vacancy in the Board. Saturday, June 10th, Superintendent Craig of Charlevoix was appointed to this position.

Miss Grace Howard will teach in the Slaughter school, Boyne Valley 7th. next year.

The Knapp, Bay Shore and Murray schools closed with picnics during the past week.

Miss Marion Worth will teach the Nowland school next year.

Miss Phyllis Sheppard will teach in the Howard school, Melrose No. 3.

Blanks of acceptance for district officers and oaths of office to be filed with the senior member of the board will be mailed to every director before the annual meeting.

Has your district established a district library by a vote at a district meeting? Well, why don't you do it? It doesn't cost you a cent. Just vote that you would like to receive your share of the county fund, and that you will spend this money on books for the school library. This is so your teacher will have something to work with. If you don't do this, why the other districts get your share, that's all.

Mr. Lindeman, state agent for club work, spent Wednesday the 7th in and around East Jordan. A few of our club members have fallen by the wayside, but a number have already planted their corn and started a report of the cost of labor in the preparation of the soil.

The canning demonstration program is something new under the sun. It will be printed next week.

Flag Day

Proclamation

In 1777 congress appointed a committee consisting of Gen. Washington, Robert Morris and Col. Ross "to designate a suitable flag for the nation." This committee conferred with Miss Betsy Ross and afterward reported on June 14, 1777. Congress adopted the following resolution: "Resolved, That the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation, the stars to be arranged in a circle."

Realizing that there must be a limit to the stripes, a recommendation was adopted April 4, 1818, that the flag be permanently thirteen stripes, representing the thirteen original states, and that a new star be added for each state as admitted. It was at this time that the stars were arranged in rows.

Notwithstanding the fact that the United States is one of the youngest nations in the world, the Stars and Stripes is the oldest national flag in existence. This flag symbolizes the birth and progress of the greatest nation in the world. A nation is great in proportion as its ideals are great and universal. The Stars and Stripes represent the highest hopes and aspirations relating to human liberty. This flag floats for all of the American people regardless of race, color or previous servitude. Absolute loyalty to this flag will ultimately command the admiration and respect of all the nations of the earth. Because the Stars and Stripes symbolize human justice, the humblest American citizen, regardless of his nationality, will gladly give his last drop of blood for this full protection.

May the time speedily come when our United States will demand that every man who seeks a permanent home in this country get under this flag in the shortest possible time as a full-fledged American citizen, or else return to the land from whence he came. Enduring patriotism demands this form of loyalty.

"But the flag of the American union, now as ever before, tells of tolerance and of good will, of education and of industry. It has welcomed millions from all nations of the world and it has held out the equal chance to all who come under its folds. Every new star added to its blue field has told of a new state, and every new state tells of more farms cleared, more factories opened, more churches and schools set in motion, and more laws and courts to regulate them all and to assure the equal rights of everyone."

Therefore, I Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of Michigan, do issue this proclamation and enthusiastically urge the observance of Wednesday, the 14th day of June, 1916, as Flag Day.

Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor

By the Governor:

Coleman C. Vaughan, Secretary of State.

Why Not Face the Facts About Armor Competition?

To the People:

The policy of the United States Government for many years has made real competition in armor-making ineffective.

The Government might have asked the three armor plants for bids and let the entire tonnage to the lowest bidder. That would have made competition effective.

The result of such a course would have been to drive two of the three manufacturers out of business, and leave the country with facilities of only one plant in time of need.

The Government in fact has always asked for bids from the three manufacturers; but no matter what the price quoted, each year's business was divided among them.

Armor makers serve but one customer—the Government, just as a public utility serves but one customer—a community.

The solution of the public utility problem is regulation of rates.

The solution of the armor problem is for the Government to fix the price.

We voluntarily agree to accept any price fixed by the Federal Trade Commission. Isn't acceptance of that offer better than the destruction of an industry built solely to serve the Government?

WHY not give your lad the same training?

"When I was a growing lad, and came upon many words in my reading that I did not understand, my mother, instead of giving me the definition when I applied to her, uniformly sent me to the dictionary to learn it, and in this way I gradually learned many things besides the meaning of the individual word in question—among other things, how to use a dictionary, and the great pleasure and advantage there might be in the use of the dictionary. Afterwards, when I went to the village school, my chief diversion, after lessons were learned and before they were recited, was in turning over the pages of the 'Unabridged' of those days. Now the most modern Unabridged—the NEW INTERNATIONAL—gives me a pleasure of the same sort. So far as my knowledge extends, it is at present the best of the one-volume dictionaries, and quite sufficient for all ordinary uses. Even those who possess the splendid dictionaries in several volumes will yet find it a great convenience to have this, which is so compact, so full, and so trustworthy as to leave, in most cases, little to be desired."—Albert S. WAR BROUGHT BIG DEMAND FOR AUTOS

One hundred and sixty-five million dollars worth of automobiles and parts, engines and tires, were exported from this country during the first 19 months of the European war, August, 1914, to February, 1916, inclusive, easily 80 percent of which went to the belligerents. Our normal exports of these articles run about $35,000,000 annually, although there was a falling off in their value just prior to the outbreak of the war. During the calendar year 1915 England took more than our total normal export of these products. A large percentage of the total consisted of commercial automobiles, or trucks, etc.

No single factor is of more importance in conducting modern warfare than that of sufficient and quick transportation. How many defeats have been directly attributable to the fact that supplies were delayed for lack of carriage facilities? No sooner was the European war declared than every motor car available was commandeered, the owner given a receipt, and his car pressed into service. An American army officer who returned from Europe some time ago estimated the average life of a car operated behind the lines at from 10 to 20 days. The first three products sought by the belligerents from the United States were breadstuffs, horses and automobiles, and a steady stream of those commodities has been flowing to Europe since the war began.

But the prosperity which war orders for automobiles has brought to Detroit, for instance, is by no means confined to that city. It is distributed in countless ways. From the man who works out the ore in the ground to the boy who packs the grease in the clutch, every employee engaged in turning out the finished product, or part, reaps a benefit from Europe's unfortunate quarrel. Steel, leather, rubber, copper, glass—a score of products go into the manufacture of these cars, and all supply a profit to someone. And the profits and the wages are invested, or hoarded, or spun on the counters of the merchant. Charlie Chaplin gets a chunk of it; Billy Sunday gets a bit. Consider the number of times a dollar changes hands, and multiply that by 165,000,000. And then you have considered but one commodity which is going to Europe from this country, though we have sent billions of dollars worth of goods there to be used in conducting the war.

This is the sort of "unexampled prosperity" of which the democratic party boasts, and on which it will go to the country in the coming campaign. But the people of the United States have a high contempt for a party whose chief argument for a continuance in power is bed-rocked on the murder of millions of mankind.

SUPER-PORCINITY

The $45,000,000 appropriated by the House ostensibly for flood control along the southern part of the Mississippi, but in reality to reclaim 16,000,000 acres of private-owned land with federal money, would have built the two super-dreadnoughts, recommended by the navy department and thrown out by the congressional committee on naval affairs. The demand for preparedness has presented the best opportunity ever accorded the democrats to stow their cellars full of pork for the hard winter which is to come. When the republicans appropriated money for the irrigation of arid lands in the west, the settlers, and not the general public, paid for it.

WHY NOT?

We have city ordinances telling us how automobiles, motorcycles, bicycles, wagons, buggies, etc., shall be driven on the public streets. And it is very proper that we have such ordinances, too. But it occurs to us that it would be a timely movement, to pass an ordinance to regulate how and where foot pedestrians shall walk on the streets. Should people be prohibited from crossing streets except on street crossings? Shouldn't there be an ordinance that will help protect the people from their own carelessness and foolishness, and at the same time, give the drivers a little more consideration?

President Wilson says he gets less partisan every day. But we notice he goes right on appointing Democratic partisans to office and tries to force confirmation upon the senate. And he is every few days making an order appointing some good democrat to office in disregard of the merit provisions of the Civil Service law. And just a few days ago he made an order sweeping into the classified service several hundred temporary employees in the state department who were appointed without competitive examination. His non-partisanship evidently extends only to the acceptance of all the republican votes he can get.

That was an awful slam upon the democratic party when the New York World, professedly democratic, said that Bryan never did and never could appeal to the sober sense and sober judgment of the American people. On three different occasions, Bryan polled more votes than Wilson did, and at a time when the population of the country was much less than it was when Wilson ran.

Again President Wilson discredits his cabinet. He wants a "council of executive information" composed of seven specialists who will serve without pay and aid his cabinet. But why didn't he get some specialists when he was making up his cabinet? Why does he give one set of men the honors and the money and ask another set of men to furnish the ability and the experience?

The New York World says that Woodrow Wilson has done a great deal to re-establish the habit of political thinking. Surest thing you know. Some 4,000,000 idle workmen in 1913-14 had time of time to think, and they are still remembering the conclusions they reached.

When President Wilson said that a lot of his appointees swell instead of grow, there were quite likely a few of them who felt like resorting to the language of boyhood by replying, "You're another."

The Sibley, Iowa, Gazette, carries the following advertisement: "On account of the war, my charges for the use of pasture will be $11 per cow for the season." More democratic prosperity.

AUTO DRIVERS MUST NOT TURN IN STREET

All Vehicles Must Make Turn at Street Intersections Says Council.

Charlevoix's traffic ordinance was made more stringent at the meeting of the common council Monday night, when the former ordinance was amended to more fully regulate automobiles and vehicles from turning around on the streets. In the future all autos and vehicles must make their turns at street intersections or on other streets other than Bridge street. When making a turn on Bridge street it must be made at a street intersection, not at places where the driver happens to be. Traffic during the summer time on this street is congested and at times it is hardly safe to cross. On this account the change in the ordinance is made effective from June 1 to October 1.

The watering trough at the foot of Antrim has also been a source of trouble by teams blocking the street. The trough will be moved to the north side of the street, eight feet east of the sidewalk line. The watering trough on Bridge street will also be moved in the near future.

A four inch water main was ordered laid on Lewis street as well as a fire hydrant. Compensation insurance for city employees was awarded to Bridge, Butters & Mohrman. The session was a lengthy one and considerable business transacted.

NEW FERRY LINE

Sears Bros. to Operate Line Between Belvedere, Inn and Downtown.

Commencing with June 20, Sears Bros. will operate a ferry line between the Sears dock, the Belvedere and the Inn. The boat will leave every 15 minutes during the day and evening. The new launch Enchantress and the Harry L. will be on the line, giving the public service of two of the best boats in the city.

It has been several years since a ferry line between these points has been operated, and it is hoped that the young men who are about to conduct the ferry line will receive the patronage they deserve.

The service given by Sears Bros., not only in the boat line but also by automobile, has been very satisfactory in the past and is growing in popularity each season. They make a specialty of fishing parties and pleasure trip on both Pine lake and Lake Michigan. Here's to success to the new ferry line.

EARLY MORNING WEDDING

Miss Alida Whiting and Wm. L. Dibble Married Early Today.

Miss Alida Whiting and Mr. William L. Dibble were united in marriage at 7:00 this morning, (Wednesday), at the home of Mrs. Lucy Hon, a niece of the groom.

Rev. Quinton Walker spoke the words that made them man and wife, using the impressive ring ceremony. The house was decorated with purple and white lilacs. The bride carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley. Only near relatives of the contracting parties were present.

The bride is well and favorably known in the city, having been employed as critic teacher in the public school for several years. The groom is one of the leading business men of Shepherd, Michigan.

After the wedding breakfast the newly weds left on the morning train for their home in Shepherd. Their many friends extend their hearty congratulations.

Early Story of Bermuda.

Discovered in 1515 by Juan de Bermudez, whose name was given to the delightful Bermuda Islands, they lay for nearly a century in obscurity, until Admiral Sir George Somers and a party of Virginia colonists were wrecked on the islands, remaining there several months, while they built two small cedar pinnaces. In these vessels the voyagers to the coast was continued, the colonists arriving at Jamestown only to find the people there without food and on the verge of starvation. Somers volunteered to return to Bermuda to obtain a cargo of wild hogs, which were plentiful, but his mission ended in his death. In 1612 the Virginia company sent out the first party of colonists to Bermuda and hosted the English flag over the islands, which now rank as Britain's oldest colony. The Virginia company sold its rights to the Bermuda company, which sent out other colonists from time to time and endeavored to build up a profitable community for its shareholders.

The IRON TRAIL

BY

Copyright, 1913, by Harper & Brothers.

The captain rang for full speed, and the decks began to strain as the engine increased its labor. "Get your passengers out and stand by the boats," he ordered. "Take it easy and don't alarm the women. Have them dress warmly, and don't allow any crowding by the men. Mr. Tullison, you hold the steering gear in check. Take your revolver with you." He turned to his silent friend, in whose presence he seemed to feel a cheering sympathy. "I knew it would come sooner or later, Murray," he said. "But—magnificent mammals! To touch on a clear night with the sea like glass! He sighed dolefully. "I'll be tough on my mis-
"O'Neil laid a hand upon his shoulder. "It wasn't your fault, and there will be room in the last boat for you. Understand? Breunna desisted, and the other continued roughly: "No nonsense, now! Don't make a dashed fool of yourself by sticking to the bridge. Promise?"
"I promise."
"Now, what do you want me to do?"
"Keep those dear passengers quiet. I'll run for Hallbut bay, where there's a sandy beach. If she won't make it I'll turn her late the rocks. Tell 'em they won't wet a foot if they keep their heads."

"Good! I'll be back to see that you behave yourself." The speaker laughed lightly and descended to the deck, where he found an incipient panic. Stewards were pounding on stateroom doors, half clad men were rushing about aimlessly, pallid faces peered forth from windows, and there was the sound of running feet, of slamming doors, of shrill, hysterical voices.
O'Neil saw a waiter thumping lustily upon a door and heard him shout hoarsely:
"Everybody out! The ship is sinking!" As he turned away Murray seized him roughly by the arm and, thrusting his face close to the other's, said harshly:
"If you yell again like that I'll toss you overboard."
"God help us, we're going!"
O'Neil shook the fellow until his teeth rattled; his own countenance, ordinarily so quiet, was blazing.
"There's no danger. Act like a man and don't start a stampede!"
The steward pulled himself together and answered in a calmer tone:
"Very well, sir. I—I'm sorry, sir."
Murray O'Neil was known to most of the passengers, for his name had gone up and down the coast, and there were few places from San Francisco to Nome where his word did not carry weight. As he went among his fellow travelers now, smiling, self-contained, unruffled, his presence had its effect. Women ceased their shrilling, men stopped their senseless questions and listened to his directions with some comprehension. In a short time the lated body before the thrush of waters drowned her fires. That the race was close even the dullest understood, for the Nebraska was settling forward and plowed into the night head down, like a thing maddened with pain. She was becoming unmanageable, too, and O'Neil thought with pity of that little ironhearted skipper on the bridge who was fighting her so furiously.

There was little confusion, little talking, upon the upper deck now. Only a child whimpered or a woman sobbed hysterically. But down forward among the steering passengers the case was different. These were mainly Montenegrins, Poles, or Slavs bound for the construction camps to the westward, and they surged from side to side like cattle, requiring Tullison's best efforts to keep them from rushing aft.

In these circumstances the wait became almost unbearable. The race seemed hours long, the miles stretched into leagues, and with every moment of suspense the ship sank lower. The end came unexpectedly. There was a sudden startled outcry as the Nebraska struck for a second time that night. She rose slightly, rolled and bumped, grated briefly, then came to rest.
Captain Breunna shouted from the bridge:
"Fill your lifeboats, Mr. James, and lower away carefully!"
A cheer rose from the huddled passengers.

The huller room was still dry, it seemed, for the incandescent lights burned without a flicker, even after the gray others and stokers had come pouring up on deck.
CHAPTER II.
A Girl Out of the Night.

O'NEIL climbed to the bridge. "Ta this Hallbut bay?" he asked Captain Johnny.
"It is. But we're piled up on the reef outside. She may hold fast, I hope so, for there's deep water astern, and if she slips off she's gone down."
"I'd like to save my horses," said the younger man wistfully. Through all the straits of the past half hour or more his appermost thought had been for them. But Breunna had no sympathy for such sentiments.
"Hell's bells!" he exclaimed. "Don't talk of horses while we've got women and children aboard." He hastened away to assist in transferring his passengers.

Instead of following, O'Neil turned and went below. His appearance, the sound of his voice, were the signals for a chorus of eager whistles and a great stamping of hoofs. Heads were thrust toward him from the stalls, alert ears were pricked forward, snuff muzzles rubbed against him as he calmed their terror. This kind trust made the man's throat tighten aching. He loved animals as he loved children, and above all he cared for horses.
He cursed aloud and made his way down the sloping deck to the square iron door or port through which he had landed them. But he found that it was jammed, or held fast by the pressure outside, and after a few moments' work in water above his knees he climbed to the starboard side. Here the entrance was obstructed by a huge pile of baled hay and grain in sacks. It would be no easy task to clear it away, and he fell to work with desperate energy, for the ship was slowly changing her level. He was perspiring furiously; the commotion around him was horrible. Then abruptly the lights went out, leaving him in utter blackness; the last fading yellow gleam was photographed briefly upon his retina.

After scrambling to the cabin deck O'Neil felt the little bracket lamp on the wall of his stateroom and lit it. He dragged a life preserver from the rack overhead and slipped the tapes about his shoulders, reflecting that Alaskan waters are disagreeably cold. Then he opened his traveling bags and dumped their contents upon the white counterpane of his berth, selecting out of the confusion certain documents and trinkets. The latter he thrust into his pockets as he found them, the former he wrapped in handkerchiefs before stowing them away.
All at once he whirled and faced the door with an exclamation of astonishment, for a voice had addressed him.
There, clinging to the casing, stood a woman—a girl—evidently drawn out of the darkness by the light which streamed down across the sloping deck from his stateroom. Plainly she had but just awakened, for she was clothed in a silken nightgown which failed to conceal the outlines of her body. She had flung a quilted dressing gown of some sort over her shoulders and with one bare arm and hand strove to hold it in place. He saw that her pink feet were thrust into soft, bedless slippers, that her hair, black in this light, cascaded down to her waist, and that her eyes, which were very dark and very large, were fixed upon him with a stare like that of a sleepwalker.

"It is so dark—so strange—so still!" she murmured. "What has happened?" "God! Didn't they awaken you?" he cried in sharp surprise.
"Is the ship—sinking?" Her odd bewilderment of voice and gaze puzzled him.

He nodded. "We struck a rock. The passengers have been taken off. We're the only ones left. In heaven's name, where have you been?"
"I was asleep."

He shook his head in astonishment. "How you failed to hear that hull-bul!"

"I heard something, but I was ill. My head—I took something to ease the pain."

"Ah! Medicine! It hasn't worn off yet, I see. You shouldn't have taken it. Drugs are nothing but poison to young people. Now, at my age there might be some excuse for resorting to them, but you!"—He was talking to cover the panic of his thoughts, for his own predicament had been serious enough, and her presence rendered it doubly embarrassing. What in the world to do with her he scarcely knew. His lips were smiling, but his eyes were grave as they roved over the cabin and out into the blackness of the night.

"Are we going to drown?" she asked dully.

"Nonsense!" He laughed in apparent amusement, showing his large, strong teeth.

"I'm wretchedly afraid," she whispered through white lips.

"None of that!" he said brusquely. "I'll see that nothing happens to you."

He slipped out of his life preserver and adjusted it over her shoulders, first drawing her arms through the sleeves of her dressing gown and knotting the cord snugly around her waist. "Just as a matter of precaution," he explained her. "We may get wet. Can you swim?"

She shook her head.

"Never mind; I can." He found another life belt, fitted it to his own form and led her out upon the deck. The scuppers were awash now, and she gasped as the sea licked her bare feet.

Slipping his arm about her, he bore her to the door of the main cabin and entered. She had clasped his neck so tightly that he could scarcely breathe; but, lowering her until her feet were on the dry carpet, he gently loosened her arms.

"Now, my dear child," he told her, "you must do exactly as I tell you. 'Come! Calm yourself or I won't take you any farther.' He held her off by her shoulders. "I may have to swim with you; you mustn't cling to me so!"

O'Neil judged that the ship was at least a quarter of a mile from the beach, and his heart sank, for he doubted that either he or his companion could last long in these waters. He occurred to him that Breunna might be close by, waiting for the Nebraska to sink—it would be unlike the little captain to forsake his trust until the last possible moment—but he reasoned that the cargo of lives in the skipper's boat would induce him to stand well off to avoid accident. He called lustily time after time, but no answer came.

Meanwhile the girl stood quietly beside him.

There followed a wait which seemed long, but was in reality of but a few minutes, for the ship was sliding backward and the sea was creeping up—ward faster and faster. At last they heard a shuddering sigh as she parted from the rocks and the air rushed up through the deck openings with greater force. The Nebraska swung sluggishly with the tide; then, when her upper structure had settled flush with the sea, Murray O'Neil took the woman in his arms and leaped clear of the rail.

The first gasping moment of immersion was fairly paralyzing; after that the reaction came, and the two began to struggle away from the sinking ship. But the effect of the reaction soon wore off. The water was cruelly cold and their bodies ached in every nerve and fiber. O'Neil did his best to re-

Light of the Future. Professor Ulric Dahlgren of Princeton university predicts that the time will come when the lustrous substance of chemical composition carried by fireless, certain fish and other animals will be used for illuminating houses and other purposes. He believes that this will come about when the nature and proportions of the chemical constituents of these substances are discovered and says they will give a light having an efficiency of 99 per cent instead of the 15 per cent produced by lights now in use.

Play of Steering Gear. There should be no play in the steering gear of a motorcar, but all cars have a little. The ideal condition has not yet been reached. Often a new owner, is worried by the slight play, realizing intuitively that this is wrong.

About Motorcar Doors. One of the commonest practices that is, nevertheless, a bad habit, is that of slamming the door of the car. This practice tends to rack the hinges and loosen the door until it becomes wobbly and unsightly.

Light of the Future.

Professor Ulric Dahlgren of Princeton university predicts that the time will come when the lustrous substance of chemical composition carried by fireless, certain fish and other animals will be used for illuminating houses and other purposes. He believes that this will come about when the nature and proportions of the chemical constituents of these substances are discovered and says they will give a light having an efficiency of 99 per cent instead of the 15 per cent produced by lights now in use.

Play of Steering Gear. There should be no play in the steering gear of a motorcar, but all cars have a little. The ideal condition has not yet been reached. Often a new owner, is worried by the slight play, realizing intuitively that this is wrong.

About Motorcar Doors. One of the commonest practices that is, nevertheless, a bad habit, is that of slamming the door of the car. This practice tends to rack the hinges and loosen the door until it becomes wobbly and unsightly.

courage his companion. He talked to her through his chattering teeth, and once she had recovered from the mental shock of the first fearful plunge she responded pluckily. He knew that his own heart was normal and strong, but he feared that the girl's might not be equal to the strain.

At length there came through the men's dazed sensibilities a sound different from those he had been hearing. It was a human voice, mingled with the measured thud of oars in their sockets. It roused him like an electric current and gave him strength to cry out hoarsely. Some one answered him. Then out of the darkness to seaward emerged a deeper blot, which loomed up hugely, yet proved to be no more than a lifeboat banked full of people. It came to a stop within an oar's length of him. From the hubbub of voices he distinguished one that was familiar and cried the name of Johnny Brennan. His brain had cleared now, a great dreamlike sense of thanksgiving warmed him, and he felt equal to any effort. He was vaguely amazed to find that his limbs refused to obey him.

His own name was being pronounced in shocked tones. The splash from a oar filled his face and strangled him, but he managed to lay hold of the blade and was drawn in until outstretched hands seized him.

Aa ohamaa was saying: "Be careful there! We can't take him in without swamping."

But Brennan's voice shouted, "Make room or I'll bash in your bloody skull." Another protest arose, and O'Neill saw that the craft was indeed loaded to the gunwales.

"Take the girl—quick!" he implored. "I'll hang on. You can—tow me."

The limp form was removed from his side and dragged over the thwart while a murmur of excited voices went up.

"Can you hold out for a minute, Murray?" asked Brennan.

"Yes—I think so."

"I'd give you my place, but you're too big to be taken in without danger."

"Go ahead," chattered the man in the water. "Look after the girl before it's too late."

The captain's stout hand was in his collar now, and he heard him cry: "Pull, you muscle bound heathen! Everybody sit still! Now away with her, men. Keep up your heart, Murray, my boy. Remember it takes more than water to kill a good Irishman. It's only a foot or two farther, and they've started a fire. Serve you right, you big idiot, for going overboard with all those boats. Aaa deet, but you're pulling the arm out of me. It's stretched out like a garden hose. Hey! Cover up that girl, and you, lady, rub her feet and hands. Good! Move over please so the men can bail."

The next O'Neill knew he was feeling very miserable and very cold notwithstanding the fact that he was wrapped in dry clothing and lay so close to a roaring furnace fire that its heat blistered him.

Brennan was bending over him with eyes wet. He was wearing, too, in a weak, faltering way, calling upon all the talents to witness that the prostrate man was the embodiment of every virtue and that his death would be a national calamity. Others were gathered about, men and women, and among them O'Neill saw the doctor from Sitka whom he had met on shipboard.

As soon as he was able to speak he inquired for the safety of the girl he had helped to rescue. Johnny promptly reassured him.

"Maa, dear, she's doing fine. A jigger of brandy brought her to, gasping like a blessed mermaid."

As dawn broke the cannery tender from the station near by nosed her way up to the gravelly shore where the castaways were gathered and blew a cheerful toot-toot on her whistle. She was a fat bottomed, wet sterned craft, and the passengers of the Nebraska trooped to her deck over a gangplank. As Captain Brown had predicted, not one of them had wet a foot, with the exception of the two who had been left aboard through their own carelessness.

The reaction following a sleepless night of anxiety had replaced the first feeling of thankfulness at deliverance, and it was not a happy cargo of humanity which the resending boat bore with her as the sun peeped over the hills.

Many of the ship's passengers were but half dressed, all were exhausted and hungry, each one had lost something in the catastrophe. The men were silent, the women hysterical, the children fretful.

It was O'Neill's turn to comfort Captain Johnny Brown, who had yielded to the blackest despair once his responsibility was over.

"It's kind of you to cheer me up," said Brennan, "especially after the way I abandoned you to drown, but the missus won't allow me in the house at all when she hears I left you

In pickle. Thank God the girl didn't die anyway! I've got that to be thankful for. Curly Gordon would have broken me!"

"Gordon!"

"Sure! Man dear, don't you know who you went bathing with? She's the daughter of that widow Gerard and the most prominent passenger aboard, outside of your blessed self. Ain't that luck? If I was a Jap I'd split myself open with a bread knife."

"But fortunately you're a sensible harp of old Ireland. I'll see that the papers get the right story, so huck up."

A south bound steamer was due the next afternoon. It was learned, and plans were made for her to pick up the castaways and return them to Seattle.

At the same time O'Neill discovered that a freighter for the "westward" was expected some time that night, and as she did not call at this port he arranged for a launch to take him out to the channel where he could intercept her. The loss of his horses had been a serious blow. It was all the more imperative now that he should go on, since he would have to hire men to do horses' work.

During the afternoon Miss Gerard sent for him, and he went to the house of the cannery superintendent, where she had been received. The superintendent's wife had clothed her, and she seemed to have recovered her poise of body and mind. O'Neill was surprised to find her quite a different person from the frightened and disheveled girl he had seen in the yellow lamplight of his stateroom on the night before. She was attractive, certainly, despite the disadvantage of the borrowed garments, and though she struck him as being possibly a little proud and cold, there was no lack of warmth in her greeting.

For her part she beheld a man of perhaps forty, of commanding height and heavy build. He was gray about the temples; his eyes were gray too. She was vaguely disappointed, having pictured him as being in the first flush of vigorous youth, but the feeling soon disappeared under the charm of his manner. The ideal figure she had imagined began to seem silly and schoolgirlish, unworthy of the man himself. She was pleased, too, by his faint though manifest embarrassment at her thanks, for she had feared a lack of tact.

"I was terribly frightened," she confessed, "but I felt that I could rely upon you. That's what every one does, isn't it? You see, you have a reputation. They told me how you refused to be taken into the boat for fear of capsizing it. That was fine."

"Oh, there was nothing brave about that. I wanted to get in badly enough, but there wasn't room. Jove! It was cold, wasn't it?" His ready smile played whimsically about his lips, and the girl felt herself curiously drawn to him.

Since he chose to make light of himself, she determined to allow nothing of the sort.

"They have told me how you bought out this whole funny little place," she said, "and turned it over to us. Is it because you have such a royal way of dispensing favors that they call you the Irish prince?"

"That's only a silly nickname."

"I don't think so. You give people food and clothes with a careless wave of the hand; you give me my life with a shrug and a smile; you offer to give up your own to a host of strangers without a moment's hesitation. I—I think you are a—well—a person."

Layering Grapes. Grapes may be propagated by means of layering more easily than in many other ways. The best plan is to dig a trench from two to three inches deep, lay the vine in this and cover it over. Leave the tip sticking out. The vine that is covered will throw out roots and send stems up at the joints. These may be separated and planted separately. A raspberry vine may be made to produce new plants by bending over the tip of a cane and covering it with dirt at the end. Farm Progress.

Bad Accident Near St. Ignace.

At least two persons are dying, half a dozen are maimed for life and eighteen occupants of two gasoline railroad cars, which collided near Moran, 15 miles north of St. Ignace are seriously injured.

Walter Turpen and 14 friends were returning to Moran after visiting a circus on Wednesday of last week. There were no lights on the car and the merry-makers had no warning of danger when the two cars met head on.

The second car was driven by William Wurtla, who with two friends, was coming from a point north of Moran. He suffered a crushed skull as did Alma Kallio of the other party. Both may die.

Settle Beulah Home Affairs.

There now seems a good chance of settling the affairs of the old Beulah Home association, at Boyne City, closed up as there will be a meeting of the board of directors in Detroit Monday, June 19, at which every effort to clean the slate will be made.

The property at Boyne City was traded some time ago for Detroit real estate and this has increased steadily in value until that which has been sold has brought enough money to pay off all the debt of the institution.

The remaining property will be sold and the money will be made a part of the Herman Swift estate and will go to Mrs. Swift and son.

Many of the members of the board of directors have died and the first work of the board will be to hold an election. Then the other business can be looked after and the board dissolved.

Asks for Automatic Phones.

The city council of Potoskey has adopted unanimously a resolution directing City Manager Caldwell to ascertain the attitude of the Michigan State Telephone company on the matter of giving Potoskey in the very near future the new automatic phone system.

Councilman Galster, in introducing the resolution, read a newspaper clipping telling that Ludington is to have this automatic system, and stated that Potoskey people would welcome a change in the policy of the local management along same lines, one in particular being that which forbids the operators from giving out any information in case of fires, and like occurrences. The attitude of the other councilmen indicated that Mr. Galster expressed the united sentiment of the council.

Deafness Cannot be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

IN MEMORY

Of Mrs. Joe Seymour who died June 4 at her home in Charlevoix:

We have lost our darling mother, She has bid us all adieu; She has gone to live in heaven, And her person is lost to view.

Oh, that dear one, how we loved her! Oh, how hard to give her up! But an angel came down for her, And removed her from our flock.

We miss thee from our home dear mother, We miss thee from thy place; A shadow o'er our life is cast, We miss the sunshine of thy face.

We miss thy kind and willing hand, Thy fond and earnest care; Our home is dark without thee, We miss thee every where.

Farewell, dear mother, sweet thy rest, Weary with years and worn with pain, Farewell, till in some happy place We shall behold thy face again.

'Tis ours to miss thee, all our years, And tender memories of the keep; Thine in the Lord to rest, for so, He giveth His beloved sleep.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord When love has bound the heart, 'Tis hard, so hard, to speak the words, "We must forever part."

Dearest loved one we must lay thee In the peaceful grave's embrace, But thy memory will be cherished Till we see thy heavenly face.

STACKS MAKES GOOD WITH ARMOUR & CO.

Choice Among 28 Applicants to Represent Company in West.

There is no question concerning the high esteem in which E. S. Stacks, a well known former Charlevoix citizen, is held by Armour & Company, as he was their choice among 28 applicants for the position as representative of the company in a big educational propaganda about to be instituted in a number of western states.

Armour & Company have been called upon by the state board of agriculture of several western states to send a representative to work in conjunction with members of the state board during the educational propaganda. The object of this feature is to instruct farmers in the practical uses and benefits of properly applying commercial fertilizers. Since he has been in the employ of the company, Mr. Stacks has made a special study of this line of work, and his "preparedness" as we might say, landed him the position to represent the company.

His first work will be in Kansas, leaving Michigan on July 5. From Kansas he will travel through other states, completing his work about the first of November.

Out for Representative.

Supervisor Jacob E. Chew of South Arm township has about decided to enter the race for the republican nomination for representative in the Charlevoix district. Mr. Chew is a well-known dependable man who certainly does not favor graft. His announcements will probably be made next week.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

Amateur gardeners and farmers who wish to diversify their crops will find cucumbers a fairly safe and profitable product. The sale for this class of commodities is steady in all stages of growth. There is no rush about picking or marketing.

Cucumbers ought to return a net profit of $200 an acre. A Michigan grower reports $250 an acre. Grocers, pickle factories and town families will take the output, but the marketing should be arranged for in advance. It is also an easy matter for growers to put up pickles, and this system adds to the profits.

The soil needs to be light, warm and full of vegetable matter. Land that has borne clover is good. It must not be soggy. In drought periods the vines should be watered daily, but this applies to garden products generally as well as to cucumbers. If the ground is not considered just right it is advisable to use well rotted manure in the hills before planting. The best way is to use well fertilized land that was plowed in the fall, adding a little barnyard manure to the cucumber hills as they are formed. Have the soil worked down fine with harrow or rake and mark out in checks at least four feet each way. Many prefer five or six feet. It is easier to cultivate check rows than single rows. The hill system is preferred because it gives plants more leaf surface. Better drainage is also secured in case of excessive rains.

Four to six seeds should be dropped in each hill and lightly covered with soil. In case of unfavorable weather or uneven growth additional plantings may be made. Second and third plantings can also be made for prolonging the marketing of cucumbers and for raising pickle stock. In order to get an early start seeds may be planted in a hotbed of moderate temperature or in window pots in the dwelling. Planting in the open ground is to be deferred until the soil is in nice order and danger from frost is over. Whatever transplanting is necessary should be done in the evening.

Those who are engaged in this line of gardening on an extensive scale should consult the owners of pickle factories as to prices and time of marketing. The pickle companies sometimes prefer to furnish the seed. When a large crop is to be raised the cultivation can be with an ordinary two horse corn cultivator. Planting in drills seems to be the easier method, in the opinion of some, but the majority of experts think that results are better with the hill system. A corn planter may be used if desired, and the plants may be thinned out as they develop.

Seed is generally used at the rate of one ounce to fifty hills.

Insects are often troublesome in cucumber growing. For cutworms use poisoned bran about four inches from where the plants are coming through. For striped beetle dust frequently with plaster, which acts as a repellent. Heliothrips powder in water is also effective in destroying the striped hoppers. During the picking season the vines are gone over regularly at short intervals and the cucumbers removed as soon as they attain marketable size. This will prevent any check in the growth of vines and increase the number of cucumbers that can be secured.

One of the most delicious vegetables is watercress, and yet few farmers or gardeners are trying to utilize the delicacy. No other product grows into money easier or with less trouble. It grows wild in running brooks, in ditches or around fresh ponds. All that is demanded for the raising of cress is pure water. Plant seeds in the soft earth at the edge of the water. The plants will soon fill the bed of the stream or pond. After establishing the growth of watercress it is available for use in March and through out the season. A large sale can be worked up in any town.

Corn salad is a paying winter product, the small leaves being served like lettuce during the cool fall and early winter months. It is used for garnishing meat dishes and is in good demand. Plant late in the summer for fall and winter use. It is quite hardy and a little protection with leaves will carry it safely through the winter.

For Representative.

I desire to announce to the voters of Antrim county that I am a candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative from Antrim district. If nominated and elected, you will find me on the job, furthering your interests at all times and under all circumstances. Your votes are respectfully solicited.

TALISMAN OF THE CELTS.

Romance of the Lia Fail, a Curious Piece of Stone

In every strongly Irish newspaper, either in America or in Ireland, there is the oft repeated story: "Wait until we recover the Lia Fail. Then Ireland will become a republic." And the readers have asked again and again: "What is the Lia Fail? Where is it, and what is its magic power?" Those who remember the Fenian fiasco, some years ago, will recall the battalions of the troops, "Ho, for the Lia Fail!" The recovery of this Celtic talisman, however, would involve something more than a victory over some outlying province of Great Britain, for it is a part of the coronation chair in Westminster Abbey. It is a curious piece of stone, a little more than two feet long, and is said to be the identical stone on which Jacob rested his head when he had his marvelous dream. It was taken to Ireland, according to tradition, before the Christian era, and its removal from that island meant the death of liberty and independence to the Celt.

After a century of possession it was conveyed to the Ionian islands, to be used in a coronation ceremony, and was never recovered. The kings of Scotland seized and held it as their mascot. By Edward I. it was carried to London among the spoils of war when the Scottish kingdom began to totter. The son of Edward attempted to restore the stone to the Scotch, but already it had taken such hold on the superstition of the English that they feared for their country, and a mob prevented its restoration.—Exchange.

COLORS OF METEORS.

Three Stages Through Which They Pass to Reach the Earth.

An article by Alfred Wegener in the Scientific American offers an explanation of the marked difference of color observed in meteors. Up to an altitude of about forty-five miles the principal constituent of the earth's atmosphere is nitrogen. A second stratum of the atmosphere, extending up to about 125 miles, consists mainly of hydrogen. Still higher, Wegener himself has sought to prove the existence of a stratum consisting of an excessively light gas which he calls "geocorolium."

When entering the atmosphere from outer space meteors do not become luminous in the very tenuous "geocorolium sphere," but only when they enter the "hydrogen sphere," and most of them are dissipated before reaching the nitrogen atmosphere. The largest fireballs, however, penetrate deeper and may reach the earth or explode not far above it.

Dr. Wegener finds that the meteors that penetrate deep enough pass through three color stages—viz. yellow-white, green and deep red. The great majority exhibit only the first stage. In which the color (white, yellow, sometimes reddish) is that of the incandescent meteor itself. The green stage, Wegener believes to be due to the incandescence of the hydrogen through which the meteor is passing, while the deep red stage is due to the incandescence of nitrogen in the lower atmosphere.

Thrill of Being Wet.

There is something rudimentary and fundamental about having water splashed down upon one and getting completely and deliciously wet—not damp, not moist, but wet, wringing wet. You yourself when a child never enjoyed anything so much as your first drenching in an unforeseen and unavoidable rainstorm—the thrill of being wet, the cool drive of the water on your neck, into your sleeves and down your back, and the joyous splash of soaked, waterlogged boots. Even the feeling of being rubbed with alcohol, bunched up and warmed you would not catch your death did not diminish the event. You voted it better than the time you fell off the boat dock; it lasted longer.—Atlantic.

Criticism Implied.

"He doesn't like my cooking," sobbed the three months bride, a tear on her long lashes. "I just know he doesn't. So there?"

"What makes you think so?" her mother asked. "Has he said he doesn't like your cooking?"

"No-no-o," stammered the bride.

"Nonsense, child. It's just your imagination. I felt there was no basis."

"There is a basis," the bride insisted tearfully. "I had been cooking the loveliest things for him for about two weeks, and then he told me he had decided to become a raw food faddist. Bo-hoo-o-o!"—Judge.

Dr. Johnson's Homeliness.

Samuel Johnson was himself—and this is a quality rarely found in "platin" men—under no illusion as to his personal appearance. Dr. Burney tells us that on one occasion while Miss Burney was examining his portrait he peeped over her shoulder and, with a ludicrous half laugh, exclaimed: "Ah, ha, Sam Johnson! I see thee—and an ugly dog thou art!"—London Times

Force of Habit.

STREET IMPROVEMENT

Center Street Being Graveled From Gutter to Gutter.

During the past week the Main street in town known as Center street has been improved by graveling. The work is in charge of Road Commissioner Essenberg, who has been appointed as such to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of W. P. Smith. The work consists of graveling the entire width of the street from gutter to gutter, and when finished and packed will make a vast improvement in the town.

Heretofore the street was considerably lower than the gutters and so poorly graded that the water from heavy rains or snow followed the center and side of the road rather than washing down the gutters. The center of the street, 16 feet in width, is gravelled by the township and the expense of graveling the sides is borne by citizens, who made up a purse for the work, which makes a light expense for the township and speaks well for the enterprise of our citizens.

We have money to loan on improved farms in Banks township and adjacent territory. Reasonable rates and easy terms. See us before going elsewhere.—Citizens' Bank. Adv.11tf

GROW BUCKWHEAT

Puts Soil in Fine Mellow Condition and Destroys Weeds.

Buckwheat is at present grown in this country almost wholly in the states east of the Mississippi River and north of the cotton belt. About seven-tenths of the crop is sown in the two states New York and Pennsylvania, but it is important in several other states, principal among which are Michigan, West Virginia, Virginia, Wisconsin and Ohio. In the more northern states buckwheat can be sown over practically the entire area without reference to elevation, but further south it is confined to the uplands and mountainous sections.

Buckwheat should be sown on land prepared as for corn. It is an excellent crop to sow where corn has been planted but where a stand has not been secured. Best results are obtained where the land is plowed early and is well prepared, but fairly good results can be obtained by sowing immediately after plowing and harrowing.

Buckwheat should generally be seeded at the rate of three to four pecks per acre. If the soil is fertile and a drill is used and the seed is of good vitality, as little as two pecks may be sufficient. As much as five pecks are sometimes sown. It is best to use a grain drill, but this is not essential, as the seed can be broadcasted and harrowed in with satisfactory results. It should be sown from one-fifth of an inch to two inches deep, depending on the condition of the soil.

Best Crop for Poor Land.

There is probably no other crop that will produce better on infertile, poorly tilled lands than will buckwheat. It is well suited to light well drained soils, such as sandy loams, and to the silt loam soils. It needs but little lime, growing well in acid soils without lime, where alfalfa and red clover would not succeed. When the soil is poor it is profitable to use fertilizer, but where good wheat or corn crops can be produced without fertilizer it is unnecessary for the buckwheat crop. On the poorest hill land a small application of nitrogen and phosphorus is advisable, but generally nitrogen is not needed. The plant responds very readily to applications of phosphates, however. Low grade fertilizers containing phosphorus and a small amount of potassium can be used to advantage on the crop where the land is poor.

Three varieties of buckwheat are commonly grown in the United States—Japanese, Silver Hull and Common Grey, the first two being most generally used. Japanese has a large dark-colored seed, while the Silver Hull has a smaller seed, glossy or silvery in appearance. These two varieties are of about equal value when yields are considered.

Buckwheat is very sensitive too. A Cool-Weather Crop. cold and is killed by the first heavy frost. It fills best in cool weather, however, and so the sowings are deferred to allow only time for the crop to mature before frost occurs. Under the most favorable conditions a buckwheat crop will mature in ten weeks, but the average time is about twelve weeks. When seeded the last week in June or first week in July in New York and Pennsylvania and about a week earlier in Michigan and Wisconsin it is most likely to escape injury from hot weather, which, with drying winds and hot nights, causes the flowers to blast and fail to produce seed. The seeding time for any locality is determined fairly accurately by allowing it a period of 12 weeks for growth before the first killing frost is expected.

The farmer does not need expensive machinery for harvesting the crop. An old-fashioned cradle, although it requires hard labor, does the harvesting well. The drop reaper, however, is one of the most satisfactory machines for harvesting. Many farmers use the ordinary binder, which practice is advisable where it can be followed. Cutting is begun as soon as the first lot of blossoms have disappeared, or often just before the first frost is expected. Buckwheat mature its seed in a few days, if, after cutting, the crop is left in loose bundles where they are dropped from the cradle or reaper. It should then be set up in small shocks and tied near the top with some strands of the straw bent upward from the sides of the shock. The cut buckwheat is usually left in the field in the shocks until threshing time, when it is drawn in and threshed either with the flail or by machinery.

The farmer need generally have no fear of this crop being damaged by either insect enemies or fungous diseases, as the buckwheat plant is but little affected by either of these. It is an excellent crop for destroying weeds and for renovating and putting the soil in fine mellow condition.

BIG GAIN IN BUSINESS

Horrenga and Boes Have More Than Doubled Business This Spring.

The local creamery, which on January 1st, 1916, changed hands, the firm of Horrenga and Boes taking charge thereof, has made large gains in the way of amount of butter manufactured.

During the past week a total of 4,050 pounds of butter was turned out. Taking into consideration the fact that there is considerable opposition in cream buying in this section, the Blue Valley Creamery company of Grand Rapids, formerly being well patronized at this place and a good creamery with capable manager at Atwood, only six miles distant, speaks well for the new management of the Ellsworth creamery.

The price paid for cream has been as much as the outside markets were paying, and under such conditions the farmers of Bank township should co-operate with the new owners in selling their cream at home, which not only benefits the owners of the creamery but makes a better business in the town and benefits the farmer himself indirectly if not directly. Let's all boost for local industries.

Lakes.	Feet above mean sea level.
Superior	603.00

Ontario	247.13

Lake Superior is 0.62 foot higher than last month, 1.39 feet higher than a year ago, 1.14 feet above the average stage of May of the last 10 years, 0.05 foot below the high stage of May, 1861, and 2.18 feet below the low stage of May, 1911. During the last 10 years the May level has averaged 0.3 foot lower than the June level.

Lakes Michigan-Huron are 0.57 foot higher than last month, 0.08 foot below the average stage of May of the last 10 years, 3.03 foot above the low stage of May, 1896. During the last 10 years the May level has averaged 0.3 foot lower than the June level.

Hot Weather Rules

- 1 Load lightly and drive slowly.
- 2 Stop in the shade if possible.
- 3 Water your horse as often as possible. So long as a horse is working, water in moderate quantities will not hurt him. But let him drink only a few swallows if he is going to stand still. Do not fail to water him at night after he has eaten his hay.
- 4 When he comes in after work sponge off the harness marks and sweat, his eyes, his nose and mouth, and the dock. Wash his feet, but not his legs.
- 5 If the thermometer is 75 degrees or higher wipe him all over with a wet sponge. Use vinegar water if possible. Do not turn the hose on him.
- 6 Saturday night give a bran mash, cold, and add a tablespoon of saltpetre.
- 7 Do not use a horse hat, unless it is a canopy-top hat. The ordinary bell-shaped hat does more harm than good.
- 8 A sponge on the top of the head, or even a cloth, is good if kept wet. If dry it is worse than nothing.
- 9 If the horse is overcome by heat get him into the shade, remove harness and bridle, wash out his mouth, sponge him all over, shower his legs, and give him four ounces of aromatic spirits of ammonia or two ounces of sweet spirits of nitre in a pint of water, or give him a pint of coffee warm. Cool his head at once, using cold water, or, if necessary, chopped ice, wrapped in a cloth.
- 10 If the horse is off his feed try him with two quarts of oats mixed with bran and a little water, and add a little salt or sugar. Or give him oatmeal gruel or barley water to drink.
- 11 Watch your horse. If he stops sweating suddenly or if he breathes short and quick, or if his ears droop, or if he stands with his legs braced sideways, he is in danger of a heat or sun stroke and needs attention at once.
- 12 If it is so hot that the horse sweats in the stable at night, tie him outside. Unless he cools off during the night he cannot well stand the next day's heat.
- 13 Do not feed a full ration of grain over Sunday.

GREAT CHANGE IS SEEN BY SMITH

Grand Rapids Men Heartily in Favor of Great Tanlac.

Arthur Smith, a well known carpenter who lives at 919 Ottawa avenue, north Grand Rapids, makes this statement:

"I have suffered from rheumatism for the past two years and, at times, the pain was so bad that I could hardly stand it. I would have severe, darting pains in my back and sides and these would often keep me awake at nights. In damp weather these pains would be worse and I would be all crippled up, making it unsafe for me to climb around at my work. I lost my appetite and became nervous. My system was all run down.

"I decided to try Tanlac because I had heard so many people say it had helped them. I was agreeably pleased at the quick and beneficial results I got from a few doses of Tanlac. It improved my condition at once. I am now feeling better every day. My rheumatism is much better and my whole system has been built up in every way. I sleep well. I am full of life and energy all the time."

Tanlac may be obtained here at the store of B. A. Herman.

ROOM HERE FOR MORE PEOPLE

MICHIGAN COULD USE MORE POPULATION

Three Times Its Present Number Could Find Plenty of Room in Fine Farm Lands.

"The main thing we have accomplished," said J. I. Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, "is to get almost the entire population of Western Michigan pulling together. We have a splendid law which enables us to raise a reasonable sum for publicity purposes, but even without such a law when citizens are united in an effort to present their advantages to the general public much good must result. As it is now we not only have unity of purpose but we have a ready means of raising funds for carrying on the necessary advertising.

"Michigan has ample room for three times its present population. We could place a million more farmers and not exhaust all the low-priced land that is available. It is really astonishing to see how much choice farm land there is to be had in our state, convenient to transportation, at prices ranging from $25 to $75 an acre. We claim that when it comes to land which has a high earning capacity in a good climate and among the best class of people our state is inferior to none and is only equalled by a few.

"In Western Michigan we are raising the greatest of crops, and in an astonishing variety. Our territory is noted for its fine fruits, including apples, peaches, cherries, plums, pears and grapes. Then it is equally famous for its successful dairies, the high quality of its meat animals and the abundant yield of truck crops of all kinds. In such things as beans, onions, potatoes and other staple commodities we lead nearly all other states. This is because of the soil fertility and the intelligent system of farming which is now in force. Some of those crops are record breakers and the quality is peculiarly good. We have no hesitation in claiming for Western Michigan that its fruit flavors are distinctive and place it in a class by itself. No part of the country can beat us on cherries, apples, peaches, berries and such things."

It is one of the claims of Western Michigan people that on their low-priced lands almost any ambitious farmer can pay for his place in a single season after he has become fairly established and got his work organized. The onion farms there frequently return a net profit of $200 to $300 an acre, which is far beyond the selling price of the land. It is also set forth in the claims of people who are posted on the country that in establishing orchards it is a paying policy to grow bush fruits and vegetables among the trees for the first few years. It may not be good policy to follow this plan after the orchards have come to bearing, but the extra cultivation in the first year or two is good for the land, the trees and the various garden crops.

THEATRICAL

"The Commanding Officer."

One of the strongest feature photoplays of recent times is the Famous Players Film company's four-part film version of the noted military play, "The Commanding Officer." This subject, with the popular ingenue, Alice Dovey, as the central character, is the attraction at the Majestic theatre, Friday, June 16, on the Paramount program.

The film version of this popular subject bears all the thumb-marks of as great a success as was attained by the original play, and the carefully selected cast covers itself with unassuming but interesting honors. Donald Crisp portrays the Colonel in the title role with a manly, courteous and definite bearing which gives the part weight and elegance. "The Commanding Officer" is the kind of photoplay that nine-tenths of the town will be wild to see two or three times, and the other tenth at least once. There is so much tense story, and so much fine, balanced acting and such delightful personalities in the superb cast that it cannot but be a tremendous success.

Produced in California, under the direction of Allan Dwan, the photoplay is further enriched by broad, sweeping backgrounds that are both charming and utterly appropriate to Describing Camp Life—Per-

(Special to The Courier.)

Grayling, June 26.—Co. I, of Charlevoix county, left East Jordan Saturday morning, after having been there five days. Friday night a banquet and farewell dance was tendered the boys by the town people, who think, as well as the members of the company, that Co. I, M. N. G., is the best company in camp.

Nearly all of the town was at the train Saturday morning to see the company depart, and the reception given shows that the people are proud of their boys. Flowers were presented by the W. R. C., and a hearty good-bye given every individual member.

At Frederick, Co. I stopped for dinner and here met the boys from Cheboygan, Houghton and the Soo. Camp Ferris was reached about six o'clock Saturday night, and the members soon had tents up and everything ready for night.

There are about 6,000 men encamped at Grayling at the present time, and more are coming every day. The three miles of tents present an imposing sight. Stiff drilling and maneuvering is carried on each day and all army discipline enforced. The boys are happy and contented and are anxiously awaiting the day when they leave for the Mexican border.

To interest Courier readers it might be said that there are men from Charlevoix, Ellsworth and Norwood who will leave camp the first of the week for Charlevoix as recruiting officers, in an effort to get men to enlist, thus putting Co. I up to its maximum number. The present personnel of the company is as follows:

Officers.

Henry L. Winters, captain.
Leon G. Balch, second lieutenant.

ITS PROVISIONS

Cannot Legally Sell Blank Cartridges, Toy Pistols, Etc.— Violations Are Serious.

The Courier has been requested to publish the following provisions of the state law in reference to the sale of certain explosives, guns, etc. It seems to us an important subject and we gladly comply with the request.

An act to prohibit the sale of certain pistols and explosives and the making of regulations relative to fireworks and firecrackers.

It shall be unlawful for any person to sell or keep for sale any blank cartridge, toy pistol, toy gun or toy cannon that can be used to fire a blank cartridge; or to sell or keep for sale, or to fire, explode or cause to explode any blank cartridge or bomb or to sell or keep for sale, or to set off or cause to explode any fireworks containing picric acid or picrates, or substances of like nature, or any firecracker exceeding two inches in length and three-eighths of an inch in diameter or of greater explosive power than a firecracker of such size containing black powder only.

Any person violating any of the provisions of the foregoing section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten dollars, nor more than fifty dollars, and costs of prosecution, or imprisonment in the county jail not less than ten days nor more than ninety days, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

It shall be unlawful for any person under the age of thirteen years, to have in possession, or use any of the articles named in section one of this act.

Manitou Arrives Saturday.

The steel steamship Manitou of the Northern Michigan Transportation company made her first trip out of Chicago Friday of last week, arriving here about noon Saturday. The welcome sound of the big boat's whistle signifies that the resort business is open in earnest, and from now on will make three trips a week to this port.

Smashed His Finger.

William Cowan is on the retired list at present with a badly smashed finger, received Monday while assisting in placing a barrel of tar in the steam vat, at the city's mixing station at the rear of the Hotel Charlevoix. Billy got the little finger of his left hand between the barrel and the edge of the vat, with the result that it was broken and badly jammed.

BUSY MAN, IS HE? THE COUNTY AGENT

WORK ONE SHOULD BE DOING IN THIS COUNTY

Farmers Do Not Realize the Great Help an Agent Would Be to Them.

If there is any individual who has the impression that the county agricultural agent's work is confined almost entirely to the planning and conducting of campaigns of one sort or another connected with agricultural enterprises, to the making of addresses at stated intervals to school children and farmers' gatherings and to the boosting of corn shows, horse shows, and similar contests, he should spend a day with R. W. Imel, Boone county, Indiana, in his office at the court house. The experience would prove an eye-opener and enlighten him as to the scope of that official's duties.

The office work of the county agent in many respects constitutes one of the most interesting as well as helpful phases of his work. He conducts a sort of general bureau of information and is consulted on almost every conceivable subject pertaining to farming interests. The extent and variety of inquiries made are surprising. Possibly no better idea as to the branch of the county agent's work could be had than a review of just one day's experience along this line.

On the particular day this record was made, 17 persons made inquiries or requests of some sort or discussed different matters with the agent. To show the scope of these inquiries and the character of the subjects discussed the record is here set out in the order made and the individuals are designated by numbers:

No. 1 brought in a branch from an apple tree, affected with the scale. This was identified as the San Jose scale and the owner was told that the lime sulphur treatment was the proper treatment.

No. 2 wanted to know what proportions to use in the preparation of lime sulphur for application. He was told to use it in the proportion of one gallon of lime sulphur to seven gallons of water, or if the hydrometer is used, to have it test 5 degree Baume.

No. 3 inquired about seeding alfalfa in the spring and after talking it over, decided to sow as soon as the field could be put in condition.

No. 4 asked for a blank card to send for inoculation for alfalfa. A card from the United States department of agriculture was furnished him with instructions how to fill it out. This made a saving of $8 to the buyer over buying the commercial preparation.

No. 5 reported his success at milk testing. He had received instructions previously from the county agent.

No. 6 wished to know how to obtain inspection of weights and measures in Lebanon and was referred to the state officials.

No. 7 wanted to know the state regulations for printing posters to advertise his stallion. He was given a copy of the regulations as adopted by the 1913 legislature.

No. 8 was a member of the committee on the county horse show and wished to talk over some of the arrangements for the show.

No. 9 asked for information on treating seed oats to prevent smut. The method was explained to him and a card with the printed directions prepared by the county agent was given the caller so that it could be referred to when the work was done.

No. 10 inquired as to the advisability of using two-year-old seed corn. He was told that if the corn had been properly cared for that it would grow as high a percentage as the first year but that it would be slower coming on.

No. 11 wished to get inoculation for his soybean seed and was given a card for the same, as a supply of these is kept in the office at all times.

No. 12 was another one wanting directions for treating seed oats with the formaldehyde treatment to prevent smut.

No. 13 wished to look over a book of house plans that the county agent has in his office.

No. 14 was furnished with a card to procure government inoculation for Canada field peas. This was furnished him at a saving of several dollars.

No. 15 asked for and was given a copy of the rules for the Anti-Hog Cholera club.

No. 16 wished to know how to apply inoculation culture to alfalfa seed and was told to place a bushel of the seed in a tub and apply the culture a small quantity at a time, mixing it thoroughly through the seed. Spread in the shade to dry, never exposing to direct sunlight.

No. 17 was a boy who inquired if there would be a Potato club in Boone county and was told that there was a Corn club and a Pig club but no Potato club.—Lebanon, Indiana, Reporter.

HUNDREDS OF VISITORS EXPECTED

FOURTH OF JULY WILL BE A BIG DAY HERE

Plans for Entertainment of Throng About Completed by Various Committees.

It has taken some hustling on the part of the Fourth of July committees to prepare for the entertainment of the hundreds of visitors expected here on July 4. Word comes from every direction and neighboring city and towns that a majority of their inhabitants are coming to Charlevoix to celebrate.

The events of the day will start at 10:00 a. m. The first will be a big parade consisting of the boy scouts, led by a martial band, lodges, fraternal orders, with numerous amusing features. At the same time this parade is being formed, the Industrial parade will also form, consisting wholly of automobiles and floats, representing practically every business house in the city. This parade will circle the entire town. Each parade will be led by a band, and other special features not yet completed will take place at this time.

Every visiting automobile is urgently requested to take part in the parade. Be in place on Michigan avenue, north of the bridge promptly at 10:30. The committee will make an effort to make this parade the biggest and best ever held in this section.

Prizes of $10.00 and $5.00 are offered to the farmer bringing in the largest loads of children. Contestants for these prizes must have their load here not later than 10:15, and also be in readiness to take their places in the first parade.

Directly after the dinner hour the street sports will take place, followed by water sports. Free street attractions are also booked to take place in the afternoon, as well as a ball game. Special program of the day will be available early in the forenoon that the visitors will know all that is to take place and also the actual time. Harbor Springs, East Jordan and Ellsworth bands will furnish music all day, and there will not be a dull minute.

Merchants are requested to get busy with their floats, etc., and be on time to the minute. Watch for the programs. Spend the day with us.

J. H. Cook, who is occupying the Meech cottage this season, drove his Hudson through from Detroit, Thursday.

MANY VISIT GRAYLING CAMP

SUNDAY VISITORS RUN INTO THE THOUSANDS

Companies Are Recruited to Full War Strength and Men Expect to See Real Service.

More than a hundred cars went from this section of the state Sunday to the encampment of the state militia at Grayling, where 6,000 men are awaiting the word to go to the Mexican border. If the troops are still there next Sunday an even larger exodus of cars is predicted.

From reports brought back by people the entire state is showing a keen interest in the boys in khaki and more than 2,000 cars from all parts of Michigan went to the camp grounds, cities as far away as Bay City, Grand Rapids and Detroit being represented by motor parties. From the northern region, Cadillac, Traverse City, East Jordan, Petoskey, together with many small towns, each contributed their share. On the whole the reports are that the roads were good and that the trip coming and going is well worth while. Of course there is a large variety of routes to select and any number of them are said to be the best ones; depending upon whether the element of distance or condition of roads is considered as the essential feature. The 17 or 18-mile trip through the prairies caused many to forego the trip, but the fear proved groundless. The motorists declare that the going was good, though of course the so-called road is but away on track going zig-zag and in serpentine fashion between bushes, woods and stumps. There was a procession of cars a mile long winding its way through the plains, yet often the sudden turns caused cars a few rods ahead or behind to disappear suddenly. While all were bound in a general easterly direction for Grayling occupants of one car frequently saw others darting in and out among the bushes, apparently going aimlessly in all directions, but in the end were all on the same road and heading for the same point.

At the camp an air of seriousness was noticeable that was never evident in annual state encampments. The fact that a call to enjoin for active service might come at any time had a sobering effect. Commenting upon this, one man said that he visited all the companies in the entire camp, yet during this time he did not hear an oath or swear word from one of the thousands of enlisted men. The visitors, too, were impressed at what they saw and given a hint of what real war means. Nearly all the companies were recruited to full strength and among them were some of the finest, cleanest and most intelligent of the young men of the companies' home cities. Many were city officials and heads of big business houses, others were the main support of parents or families who depended upon their weekly earnings for the ordinary necessities and comforts of the working man. Yet all are liable to be ordered into conflict with foreign troops, many of whom are nothing but cutthroats and bandits.

Men experienced in state military affairs declare that East Jordan sent out the finest company of state troops they had ever seen. There were 141 men in the company, strong, athletic, clear-eyed, many fellows, among them many prominent business men and officials who willingly dropped their affairs and duties to answer the call to the colors.

Some of the visitors relate humorous incidents of the trip, and in one of these a local Spanish war veteran playing the leading role. This veteran, seeing a sergeant drilling a squad of recruits, became impatient at the lack of pep and impetuously stepped in, took the sergeant's gun and began to put the rookies through a stiff course of sprouts. He was a Traverse City man, long out of service, but was surprisingly well versed in the modern tactics and opened the eyes and pores of the squad at the strenuous work he gave them. He was going along finely, lost to his surroundings and unaware that some of his friends were watching him. But when he began to get "about face" and "reverse English" mixed up in his orders they gave him three cheers and a ha-ha, which caused him to give himself an immediate leave of absence from further duty.

THEATRICAL

Paramount Fiction Pictures, Inc., presents Betty Bellairs in "The Spanish Jade," by Maurice Hewlett. Dramatized for the screen by Louis Joseph Vance. A fascinating Spanish tale of love and tragedy with unique costumes and scenes of that quaint country. At the Majestic Friday, June 30.

Mr. Victor Moore, who is one of the most distinguished comedy stars in America and whose name is most intimately associated with the most important George M. Cohan productions, makes his photodramatic debut in this offering, which also has the distinction of having been offered at the Strand theatre in New York for the first anniversary week of that world-renowned institution. The play on which the photodrama is founded is commonly regarded as the most laughable satire ever produced on Broadway, where it ran for an entire season, and did much to make the fame of its author, Mr. George Branson-Howard.

In "Snobs" Mr. Victor Moore has the convulsingly laughable role of a milkman of the most ordinary variety who suddenly inherits the title and vast wealth of an English duke. This milkman, though his instincts are perfectly good, has something of a natural taste for the "high spots" of life and immediately upon getting an advance installment of his inheritance proceeds to purchase most extreme garments, the longest cigars and all the other equipment necessary in his eyes for a noble multi-millionaire. Before long, however, the Duke discovers that the very people who pretend to be most impressed by him are really ridiculing him behind his back, and endeavors to renounce both title and money. However, a genuine, whole-hearted girl, who has not been spoiled by society, comes to his rescue. This brings the romantic element into the story as the solution of all the duke's difficulties. At the Majestic Tuesday, July 4.

Curious Old English Law.

It is interesting to recall in connection with railway accidents that only a few years back any instrument which by accident was the immediate cause of loss of human life became in English law "deadland"—that is, he came forfeit to the crown, to be devoted to pious purposes. This law applies to locomotives, but in course of time coroners' juries, instead of claiming the forfeit, inflicted a fine. In the year 1838 a locomotive on the Liverpool and Manchester line which by exploding caused the death of its engineer and fireman was fined £20, while the following year another engine on the same line was fined £1,400.—London Mail.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

That long delayed shipment of certificates for four months of perfect attendance has finally arrived from Chicago. These are the ones with the red roses on that the boys and girls like so well. 241 of them were sent this week to deserving students all over the county.

Had we put in the paper before that Mr. Joseph Whiteford, Mr. DeWitt Patterson and Mr. Clarence Dewey were each hired again in their respective districts with substantial increases in salary?

At the picnic in East Chandler the students dramatized the "Birds of Killingworth." It was well done and will teach the participants to love our songsters.

The Forest Hill school, which is Chandler No. 6 and commonly called Camp 23, has just received word that the plans for remodeling the cloak rooms in their school building are approved by the state department. They have also signed a contract for indoor chemical toilets of the Kaustine order.

Walloon Lake expects to complete the two necessary changes for the receiving of a "standard school" plate at once. An extra plate has been on hand for some time. The rule is that a plate is never sent out from Lansing except upon special word from the commissioner that a school is all ready. The extra plate was sent last November after Miss Becker's visit because she reported that Norwood lacked only the remodeling of their light arrangements. The plate was to be withheld until all the requirements were met. We are now wondering which school will win this plate.

The additional diplomas to eighth grade students were mailed this week. They are by this time in the hands of their owners.

A set of affidavits for use in district elections were mailed to 69 school officers on Wednesday.

Blanks for triplicate reports of township clerks are stamped and ready for mailing to the 15 townships. They will be held in the office until July 1st.

Eveline No. 5 has submitted plans to the department and I have received return recommendations on the same.

South Arm No. 3 is awaiting an order for extra high window frames.

Sadie Metz, Miss Agatha Kenny, Jessie Barkley, Eunice Liskum and Miss Norma Johnson, of East Jordan, will be in Mount Pleasant this summer. Miss Vivin Keller will be home one night after returning from her school in Boyne Valley, then takes the train for Mount Pleasant to attend the Normal. She will return to her school in Boyne Valley this fall. They will be joined on the Normal campus by the following Boyne City girls: Misses Phyllis Sheppard, Alta Vogt, Muriel Kerry, Golda Jensen and Miss Sola Rothemberger, and Miss Gladys Greenhoe, of Clarion.

The Chapel roll call in Ypsilanti will include the following Charlevoix county girls: Misses Ruth Dell, Myra Poole and Mabel Thayer of Boyne City; Misses Mina and Leden Stewart, Ethel Crowell, Fae Worden, Mildred Dreseher, Ada Coleman and Ruth Durfee, of East Jordan.

Miss Lola Rothenberger will teach the Robinson school next year.

FRANK B. LELAND

Republican Candidate for Governor from Wayne county, represents prominently the idea of party harmony, not only in Detroit and Wayne county, but throughout the state.

Mr. Leland has twice been nominated for regent of the University of Michigan, one of the greatest educational institutions in America, by republican state conventions, the last time without a vote from his own county of Wayne which had no part in the proceedings for reasons with which Mr. Leland had nothing to do. This was a most unusual if not entirely unique honor and shows what the state at large thinks of him. Mr. Leland was supported for renomination last spring by every member of the Board of Regents, of which body he had been a member for eight years, which shows what his associates think of him and his ability. He has been chairman of the finance committee of the university for several years, in this position and disciplined in the handling of many millions of dollars of state funds, and as is well known, has had much experience in the handling of large business and financial enterprises, always with marked success. He has a record of no failures against him and his large and varied business experience especially fits the appeal going up all over Michigan today for an administration of state affairs by a business man drilled and disciplined in the handling of the big problems. Mr. Leland will bring to the office all these elements which are in reality qualifications.

Mr. Leland was born on a farm in the township of Rose, Oakland county, and for a number of years has owned and conducted the farm on which his boyhood was spent. Mr. Leland did not permit the use of his name in this connection until he had been urged to do so by hundreds of people, not only in Detroit

It is more economical to appoint us as your Executor and Trustee. When an individual buys and sells investments for an Estate he charges the Estate with broker's commissions. and Wayne county, but from all sections of the state. The following excerpts from Detroit papers, which include every English daily in the city, bear testimony of the esteem in which he is held in his home city of Detroit.

DETROIT PRESS COMMENTS ON MR. LELAND'S CANDIDACY

(Detroit News, Jan. 18, 1915.)

We are also reminded that next year the republican candidate for governor will be nominated by the people in a primary election and not by politicians in a manipulated convention. We are told that there is an appeal in the record of Mr. Leland, who as a farmer boy worked his way through college, came to the city and achieved success, and for years has been known as one of the foremost workers of the country in the fight against tuberculosis.

(Detroit Times, Feb. 22, 1916.)

Frank B. Leland, president of the United Savings bank, and a regent of the University of Michigan, announced his candidacy for the republican nomination for governor of Michigan in a statement issued Tuesday.

This announcement is taken to mean that Mr. Leland has been selected by the warring factions in the local G. O. P. camp as a compromise candidate, and that F. C. Martindale, Alex. J. Groesbeck and others in whose ears the gubernatorial bee has buzzed for years, will smother their ambitions, for the present at least. It is figured that if Mr. Leland can get the solid support of the party in Wayne county he has an excellent chance of landing the nomination.

(Detroit Journal, Feb. 22, 1916.)

Frank B. Leland, regent of the University of Michigan, and president of the Detroit United bank, made formal announcement Tuesday in a prepared statement that he will be a candidate in the primaries next August for the Republican nomination for governor.

"I have considered the matter for some time," said Mr. Leland, "in fact, for several months, as it was that long ago that friends began to urge me to become a candidate this year. These requests that I enter the race became so insistent that I informed some of my friends I believed I would make an announcement. Had I still any hesitation left it was swept away by the replies I received from all parts of the state, offering me much strong support in the campaign."

(Detroit News, Feb. 22, 1916.)

Frank B. Leland today announces his candidacy for the republican nomination for governor of Michigan.

Mr. Leland has served eight years as regent of the University of Michigan and five years as a member of the Board of Michigan State Sanatorium, being president of the board the first year.

Mr. Leland's friends are hopeful that his candidacy will result in an elimination of the factional fights in Detroit and are working to that end.

Mr. Leland is president and organizer of the United Savings bank of this city, and has an exceptional record as a business man.

In Detroit and Michigan he is known as one of the first to take up the fight against tuberculosis and has done much to aid in the crusade against that disease, at present being president of the Detroit Tuberculosis Sanatorium.

(Detroit Saturday Night, Feb. 26, 1916.)

Frank B. Leland, regent of the University of Michigan and president of the United Savings bank of Detroit, has announced his candidacy for governor of Michigan. "In our state affairs matters in the last three years have been allowed to drift to a point where our state taxes have been just about doubled, and it has seemed to me that much of this great increase in our taxes might have been saved by a more careful guard on the public treasury," Mr. Leland said in his announcement. He also declared for enforcement of laws now "notoriously not enforced in certain parts of the state."

Mr. Leland's Candidacy.

(Free Press, Feb. 23, 1916.)
Mr. Frank B. Leland's candidacy for governor brings into the state campaign a man of a type highly desirable in politics. Experienced and signally successful in business, possessing the culture that is represented by two degrees from the state university, of which institution he is also a regent, conspicuously identified with the anti-tuberculosis campaign, one of the most prominent endeavors of our time toward humanity's betterment, he combines in a rare degree the qualifications that should best equip an American for responsible public office.

Michigan might deem itself fortunate if its officials were all of the Leland type, and the candidacy of any such men is very welcome. If it should do no more than to furnish indication that what has been loosely called the "better class" of our citizenship can overcome the reluctance to enter politics that has often been charged, it would be beneficial for the progressive tendency of politics to pass into control of small caliber men is one of the ominous signs of our recent history.

As a candidate, Mr. Leland seems to offer a strong appeal to his party. Both as a candidate and as an official, Mr. Leland looks like a strong personality and his entry into the campaign is one of the most interesting incidents that have yet occurred.

(Detroit Free Press, Feb. 23, 1916.)
Principal interest in the formal statement of Mr. Leland attaches to his declaration of views regarding state administration and the enforcement of law. Eight years as regent of the University of Michigan, a state institution spending millions, gave Mr. Leland opportunity for studying state business methods and kept him in touch with many state officials.

He is president and organizer of the United Savings bank, of Detroit, and is also president of the Detroit Tuberculosis sanatorium, being a leader in the anti-tuberculosis fight.

Mr. Groesbeck, Who Carried Wayne County Two Years Ago by 20,000, Withdraws in Favor of Mr. Leland.
(Detroit News, March 14, 1916.)
Alex. J. Groesbeck will not be a candidate for governor. Mr. Groesbeck carried Wayne county for the republican nomination two years ago by nearly 20,000 over Chase S. Osborn and Frederick C. Martindale, Wayne county's other candidate.

"Wayne county with its large population and great industries has had no representation in the United States senate for years, and has practically no voice in the executive or legislative branches of the state government," said Mr. Groesbeck.

"This unfortunate condition will continue just as long as the republicans of Detroit and Wayne stand for it and no longer."

"As things stand now there are five or six candidates seeking the republican nomination for governor. Wayne has one candidate—Mr. Frank B. Leland. The entry of another from this county would simply destroy any chance he may have."

"Believing as I do that we are entitled to and should have the representation I speak of, and that the entry of other candidates from here would seriously jeopardize all our chances, I have determined not to make the run."

MR. LELAND'S CANDIDACY.

(Detroit Free Press, March 18, 1916.)
Mr. Groesbeck has set a good example to his party in Michigan by announcing his determination not to enter the race for governor this year and to support Mr. Leland's candidacy for the office. The multitude of aspirants for the position would do well to give the Detroit man's course their individual consideration.

From Wayne county's point of view union in behalf of one candidate is imperative. We are sadly deficient down here in our share of public honors; we have had no United States senator or governor from Wayne for years, and have not now even a single state officer. A county that pays a full quarter of the state taxes and is wholly unrepresented in offices needs to do something to restore itself, and the first thing to be done in this case is to end the internal wrangling that has disrupted local republicanism and get the party together harmoniously behind one man.

For the republican party in the state generally, too, the example of Mr. Groesbeck is salutary. The prospect is that the primaries are going to bring confusion and friction, out of which will emerge some plurality victor who will be weakened by the rancors of the struggle and will go into the campaign almost hopelessly handicapped. Voluntary withdrawal of other candidates for the governorship is in order.

Excerpts from Mr. Leland's Announcement.

"After consultation with many personal and political friends throughout the state, I have decided to become a candidate for the republican nomination for governor at the coming primaries. I have reached this conclusion after carefully considering what to me seem to be matters of paramount interest to the people of this state. Of the reasons which have induced me to become a candidate for this office I will at this time mention only a few."

"In my view, our electorate are entitled to know the views of candidates for office upon such questions as may come up for consideration and decision, and I shall find it to be not only a duty, but a pleasure as well, to give the views I honestly hold upon such matters of public interest as may from time to time require an expression of opinion."

Republican Triumph First.
"Of course importance in the coming campaign will be the triumph of those republican principles which for many decades secured for our people a measure of prosperity and happiness heretofore unknown in the history of nations."

"A tariff for the protection of American industries throughout the country is a cardinal abrogation of this policy in the present national administration has resulted in bringing the financial affairs of our government to so low an ebb that it is only by heroic and unusual measures that the credit of our nation is maintained upon the high plane to which it was raised by laws enacted and enforced by successive republican administrations. When the present terrible European struggle has been ended and peace once more is established among the warring nations across the sea, there will be more necessity than ever for a protective tariff in this country if we are to maintain the present prosperity, which so largely has been brought about by demands arising out of the war and with which we in this country have really had little to do."

Would Reduce State Expenses.
"In our own state affairs matters in the last three or four years have been allowed to drift to a point where our state taxes have been just about doubled, and it has seemed to me that much of this great increase in our taxes might have been saved by a more careful guard upon the public treasury. I believe it is the duty of the governor of the state to watch closely all appropriations asked for state expenditures, and that during the legislative session he should look carefully into every measure for appropriating public funds before it has been passed by the legislature. While such measures are under consideration, he should at all times hold himself ready to consult with the members of the legislature in regard to them. Indeed I think he should go further and should permit his carefully considered views upon the expenditure of public funds to be known in all cases where he believes this knowledge would be of value to the state, to the end that the taxes of our people may be kept to the least amount consistent with legitimate requirements."

Time to Think About that New Heating Plant

Right now is the time to settle all details regarding that new heating plant. Its a bad time just at the beginning of the cool weather in the fall. Do it now, while there is plenty of time for installation and obtaining the proper material. I handle the

These furnaces are designed and constructed expressly to heat by piping to separate rooms. They have capacity sufficient to heat comfortably from 7 to 9 medium sized rooms. Last season I sold and installed 87 of these furnaces in Charlevoix and vicinity. This year I expect to sell over 100. They give satisfaction. That's the reason I can sell them. We guarantee them to give perfect satisfaction, and so far they have not failed to do so. In fact we have that confidence in the Bell Furnaces that we install them without asking for a dollar in payment until you are satisfied they are all that we represent them to be. I also handle the Ideal Hot Air and Steam Heating Plants. Some prefer these—you can have your choice. Just drop me a card if you are interested in Furnaces.

Why She Was Pleased.
"Do you mean to tell me that you actually overcame that ancient antipathy of yours for Mrs. Muggsy and called on her this afternoon?" said his wife's husband.
"That's about the size of it," replied her husband's wife.
"And she was glad to see you?"
"There isn't any doubt about it."
"Why do you think that?"
"Well, I had on that old dress I've worn three seasons and a hat that is entitled to a prominent place in some museum for antiquities, while she had on a new gown just from Paris. Oh, yes, I'm sure she was tickled to death, figuratively speaking, when I called!"

McADOO IN CONFLICT WITH FACTS

Secretary McAdoo will have achieved just one distinction when he retires from office March 4th, next. He will go down in the history as the greatest financial juggler and truth teller in the annals of America. With a curlicue of the pen this wizard of finance made the net balance in the general fund of the treasury jump from $41,000,000, September 30, 1915, to $128,000,000 on the following day—with a simple twist of the wrist he produced $87-000,000 out of the thin air, and he has tried to hallucinate the public ever since.

Recently, in an address to the Raleigh chamber of commerce, he said:
"In the face of the greatest prosperity ever known in the history of the iron and steel industry, the prosperity brought about under the democratic tariff law enacted in 1913, and with the coffers of every iron and steel industry in the country overflowing with plenty, Judge Gary seriously asks the people of this country to restore the high protection policy and subsidy system of the republican party." The war does not get even honorable mention.

What do the latest available statistics in regard to our exports of iron and steel manufacturers show?
Take the monthly summary for March, 1916: During the nine months period ended in March, we exported iron and steel manufactures to the value of $413,400,000.
For the 9 months period ended March, 1914, six months of which was under the operation of the democratic tariff law, and three months of general business stagnation because of democratic tinkering, our exports of these products was valued at but $192,000,000, which was $33,000,000 less than for the nine months ended March, 1913, under the republican law. It will be found that the phenomenal increase for the nine months ended March, 1916, is almost wholly accounted for by the purchase of war munitions on the part of European belligerents.
In addition to this, during the 1915-16 period the war afforded us greater protection from the competition of European steel industries and their pauper-paid labor than was ever dreamed of by the most rabid protectionists of this country.

"Those who were weary almost to hopelessness, with the long fight against adversity, which began in 1913," says the "Iron Age" of January 9, 1916, "and seemed destined to continue indefinitely, have been reinvigorated, and again can make plans for the future with some confidence. The dismal array of idle workshops, cold blast furnaces, dead steel works and silent rolling mills has been touched by the magic wand of a reviving demand and quickened into life and renewed energy. Today any kind of a plant must be run most inefficiently to have its balances written in red ink." Was this rejuvenation of the steel industry due to the democratic tariff, or to the war? The "Iron Age" continues: "The influence of the European war went much further in increasing our export trade than in the demand for purely war material. Orders for steel rails, steel blooms, billets, tin plates, steel railroad, ties and a variety of other products, including pig iron, which would ordinarily have gone to some one of the belligerent countries, came to the United States."

And again, speaking of "war orders": "These orders became bewildering large in May. Orders for large rounds for shrapnel glutted the merchant mills having facilities for their production and the rail makers, whose mills were only spasmodically running on railroad business, diverted these mills to the production of such rounds, receiving 2 to 3 cents or more per pound, realizing a far larger profit than in making an equal tonnage of rails."

"The Iron Age" gives sufficient answer to the secretary of the treasury. Mr. McAdoo's statement is an excellent sample of the brand of falsehood which will characterize democratic claims during the coming campaign.

DANGEROUS WORK

Fighting in Mexico is not going to be anything like a vacation for the troops that are sent into the fray.
The Mexicans will not risk many stand up fights, but will conduct a guerrilla warfare, which is the hardest kind to contend with by troops that are not accustomed to the territory in which the bushwhacking is done. The Mexican prefers to fight by stealth and he is an adept at this kind of warfare. The report of the trap into which the troopers were lured at Carrizal gives some idea of what the obstacles will be which the soldiers of Uncle Sam will have to contend with in the enemy country.
After the first fighting the Mexicans will no longer risk actual battle, but will keep in the distance and harry the soldiers of the United States in every way possible. If the Carranza followers retreat to the mountains it is going to be a long and bitter fight to dislodge them, and the only way that it can be done is to hunt them down as was done in eliminating the Philippine insurrec-tors. If the two countries really come to a clash of arms the sooner it happens the better, as the longer the struggle is delayed the better chance will the Mexicans have to resist the invading army. Lack of preparedness on the part of the United States is liable to delay the invasion this time, as it did when Funston started after Villa and his bands of cutthroats who made the raids across the border which cost so many good American lives. In case of trouble between nations it is found that the one that makes the first move has the advantage during the early stages of the struggle. By waiting, the advantage is given the other side, and the preparation that is made during the waiting period proves a handicap to the one who causes the delay. If Mexico has to be invaded it will be a sudden and decisive blow that will count the most during the campaign. One thing is certain and that is that the Mexicans enjoy fighting, and their methods of warfare do not cause them to hesitate about the odds that they go against. The average Mexican soldier fights because the chances are better for securing food and clothing during war than they are under peaceful conditions. He knows nothing of real patriotism, because he has no government over which he could become in any way enthusiastic. He fights from habit which has been fixed upon him by centuries of periodic revolution.

This is part of the situation that will confront the United States troops who will do the fighting in Mexico when the signal is given to cross the border.

One of the first things for the independent voter to do is to determine WHY the Republicans nominated Hughes, and WHY the Democrats chose Wilson. Then he should determine which of the reasons commends itself to him.

Half the civilized world is engaged in the greatest war in history. The United States is enjoying the greatest export trade ever enjoyed by any country in history.
Which is just as plain as that two and two make four.

Wilson took a day off to explain what he meant by "disentangling alliances." It now looks as if he would have to explain the meaning of "universal voluntary training."

MEETING WAS WELL ATTENDED

AND PROGRAM PROVED AN IN-TERESTING ONE

Miss Katherine Fitch, Winner of First Prize in Essay Contest—Distributed Flowers.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union meeting at Chestnut cottage proved to be one of much interest, and considering the threatening weather, was well attended.

The meeting opened with a memorial service for the late Mrs. Mc-Cartney, who was a member of the Union. Mrs. Washburne and others gave loving tribute to the memory of the departed one. The flower mission committee had charge of the program. The two papers read at the Charlevoix county convention, held in Boyne City in May, one on "Preparedness," written by Mrs.
Root, of Boyne City, the other paper on "Purity," written by Mrs.
Hall, of East Jordan, and was read at the Friday meeting by Miss Annie Metcalf. The paper on "Preparedness" was read by Mrs. Wilkinson.

Miss Jenie Carey sang "Give Your Flowers to the Living" very nicely.
Miss Hazel Burns gave a recitation which was well received.

The prize essay contest on "Alcohol and Its Effects on the Human Body" was excellent, all doing well.
The contestants, Richard Hammet, Robert Burns and Katherine Fitch, showed close study of the subject allotted them. Katherine Fitch was awarded the first prize, a silver thimble. The others each received a book.

One new member was secured. A committee was appointed to put something on in the way of a demonstration for the coming Fourth of July, probably a float, in which children will be in evidence, although arrangements are not completed at this writing, but something worth while may be looked for.

At the close of the meeting the quantity of flowers which were brought in were arranged in bouquets and sent out by children and young people and others to different parts of the city to cheer the sick and "shut-ins." Cards with appropriate texts were sent with flowers.
Forty-four were thus remembered.
Who can say what these beautiful messengers of God may accomplish?
Some one has said that "Flowers are the most beautiful things God ever made and forget to put a soul into them."

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD FROM BARNARD CHURCH

Death Again Takes One of Charlevoix County's Pioneer Settlers.

George Ball, a resident of Charlevoix county since 1874, died Sunday evening at the home of his son, Walter, on Antrim street, after an extended illness.

Deceased was born at Hampshire, England, on May 14th, 1840. He was a member of the Queen's Guards in British army for 10 years. He came to America in 1870 and made his home in Canada for four years, then he came to Charlevoix county and settled at Barnard.

He was married in 1876 to Mary Jane Harris, who passed to the better world 18 years ago. To this union 7 children were given. The living ones are Walter of Charlevoix, Mrs. Lavina Beech of Levering, William of Texas, George of Levering, Albert of northwestern Canada and Arthur of California.

In early life Mr. Ball belonged to the church of England. Soon after coming to Barnard he united with the Methodist church, where he remained a faithful member until he was called to the church triumphant which is without fault before the throne of God.

Brother Ball was a good and helpful neighbor, a true friend, an indulgent and loving father. The world is better because he has lived. He was ready when the Master called and was greeted on the threshold of heaven with the well-done of his Lord.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Quinton Walker from the Barnard church, Tuesday afternoon.

LOCAL BOYS WERE UNABLE TO HIT BALL

Defeated Sunday at Boyne by Score of 6 to 0—Couldn't Hit Ball.

The Charlevoix Independent baseball team was defeated Sunday in its game with Boyne City, by a score of 6 to 0, at Boyne City.

The game was a scoreless one up to the seventh inning, when Boyne City filled the bases and started the runs on the score sheet before the home bunch could recover and stop the men on the run around the bases.

The game was featured by the splendid pitching of Powers and the fielding of Wilson, who was playing with the Charlevoix bunch.

The home team will play the Bay Shore Indians at the regular game next Sunday. On July 4 they will play the fast Alden bunch at 10 o'clock in the forenoon and East Jordan in the afternoon.

What Geo. Klooster & Son of Ellsworth have to say about cream separators this week

Don't delay buying a De Laval Cream Separator a single day longer.

If you are selling cream or making butter and have no separator, or an inferior one, you are wasting cream every day you delay the purchase of a De Laval.

There can be only two real reasons for putting off buying a De Laval. Either you don't really appreciate how great your loss in dollars and cents actually is, or else you don't believe the De Laval Separator will make the savings we claim for it.

In either case, there is one sensible way to settle this matter. Let us set up a machine for you on your place and then you can see for yourself what the De Laval will do.

You have nothing to risk, and nearly two million other cow owners who have made this test have found they had much to gain. You can't afford to wait. Let the De Laval Separator start saving cream for you RIGHT NOW.

If you would really like to know just how much more cream you can get with a De Laval let us set up a machine for you on your place and have you try it out for yourself. Isn't this as fair a proposition as you ever heard of?

Just phone or drop us a postal and we will be glad to bring a machine out to your place any time you say.

Sooner or later you will buy a DE LAVAL

Tom May Works for the Drys

Tom May of Detroit, noted in many states as the leading cartoonist of Michigan, has been added to the staff of the Michigan Dry Campaign committee. Although his services were sought by the liquor dealers, Mr. May declined their overtures and at financial sacrifice, accepted a proposal made to him by the dry workers.

The cartoon is one of the greatest campaign features of the day; every modern newspaper uses it in some form. It carries an appeal to the average reader which often strikes home more quickly and deeper than columns of argument. Newspaper publishers are glad to use cartoons when they decline to accept special pleas put in other forms.

There is no doubt that the Tom May cartoon which will begin running soon after May 1st, will become one of the striking features of the campaign.

SEE WHAT DRINK DOES

Who Makes Paupers? If the Saloon Is Not Guilty Who Is?

County poor houses of Michigan now known as infirmaries, furnish universal evidence that liquor is responsible for more than half of poverty.

Statistical tabulations showing the effect of the license and non-license systems in individual counties of Michigan are of little value as evidence. Many inmates of infirmaries are permanent occupants, whose entry or exit bears no direct relation to social conditions. A lapse of years, possibly of a whole generation, would be necessary to produce any radical change in pauperism as a class following the abolition of saloons.

Two facts stand out: One is that the authorities and citizens in dry counties are unanimous in their opinion that from the standpoint of the county poor the dry regime is far superior. The other fact is that many counties report officially that about three-fourths of the poverty which requires county aid to individual or family, is due to the use of alcoholic beverages.

Official statements written by superintendents of the poor include the following:

"This county is in the dry column, and we find that while the cost of everything is much higher, the supervisors are not called upon to furnish us more money now than they did while the county was wet."—C. C. Haslenbeck, Eaton County.

"We are pleased to inform you that there are so few cases in this county which are receiving relief that have been caused by alcoholic beverages, we have a clear slate, are now dry and expect to remain so."—O. O. Frick, Oscoda County.

"Midland County has been dry eight years and people like it. Two old timers is all we have left in the county home whose condition is due to drink."—K. McKay, Midland County.

Confidential statements to the same effect, are as follows: Drink is the almost universal cause of poverty while for temporary assistance it is probably the main factor in at least one half the cases. In my best judgment about 50 per cent of poverty in this county can be attributed to the use of drink if not more. In fact, nearly all the crime we have can be laid to the same cause.

"I am quite sure that three-fourths at least are caused by the liquor traffic."

Following are a few more definite statements:

Alger County: "About 75 per cent." Genesee County: "About 70 per cent from liquor directly or indirectly."

Huron County: "Most of the inmates of the county farm here have come to the institution because of intemperance and the use of liquor."

Isaac County: "35 per cent directly and 20 per cent indirectly, or 55 per cent of all poverty in our county is caused by alcoholic drink."

Iron County: "Ten years ago poor commission leads me to say that fully 95 per cent of male inmates at our county farm have come here either directly or indirectly because of liquor."

Kent County: "Of 500 families helped during the year ending March 1, 1916, liquor was the direct cause of poverty in twenty-five families and an indirect cause in fifty-three families. Of 103 persons in Kent County Detention Hospital last year, at least one half were caused by intemperance. In Kent County Home were 136 persons, of whom 85 per cent can easily be traced to intemperance as a direct cause."—L. De Payter.

"To the best of my judgment, I would say that 80 per cent of the poverty is caused by alcoholism. It would be a number of years after its passage before we could get the full benefit of state wide prohibition. The effects of the past years would stay with us until the rising generation took its place."—V. H. Billings.

Montmorency County: "Four of the six men in our poor house were forced to come here on account of drink."

Oakland County: "70 per cent or more of the cases here are due to drink. We are going through the second dry time and we find it helps very much. I hope for state wide prohibition."

CAMP FERRIS IS BUSY PLACE

When the 6,000 members of the Michigan National Guard—figuring that the guard will be recruited to war strength—reached the encampment grounds on Portage Lake Saturday and early Sunday they had but to draw their tents, cots and other camp equipment from the store houses, pitch camp and draw their rations from the quartermaster general to be all set for the maneuvers which will fill in the time until they shall be ordered to the Mexican border.

Thanks to the generosity of Mrs. Hanson, of Grayling, who donated to the state of Michigan the 15,000 acres of land which make up the state military reservation, and the immediate action of the state military board in equipping it for encampment purposes, Michigan possesses one of the most modern and efficient plants in the United States.

Under the care of three caretakers who remain on the reservation the year around, equipment has been on the grounds sufficient for the military peace strength. In addition five carloads of reserve equipment has arrived from Lansing storehouses of the Michigan National Guard. Rations for five days were purchased and forwarded by Quartermaster General Walter Rogers so that the boys did not miss a meal upon their arrival in camp.

Showing what the boys will be fed on, here is the order which was filled for the first five days of the life of the mobilization camp. After the five days, it is up to the United States war department to provide the commissary. The commissary list:

22,000 pounds of fresh meat.
2,500 pounds of bacon.
14,000 loaves of bread.
500 pounds of flour.
2,500 pounds of beans.
24,000 pounds of potatoes.
1,000 pounds of prunes.
450 pounds of evaporated apples.
450 pounds of evaporated peaches.
1,600 pounds of coffee.
4,500 pounds of sugar.
28 gallons of vinegar.
56 gallons of pickles.
850 pounds of salt.
50 pounds of pepper.
650 pounds of rice.
50 pounds of baking powder.
600 pounds of lard.
800 pounds of butter.
900 pounds of soap.
300 pounds of candles.

In addition to the ration served by the National Guard organization, the various companies have a "slush" fund which is maintained by entertainments, by contributions by the men or in any manner the company sees fit and upon which the company draws to add to the mess such luxuries as may be desired.

On the encampment grounds are power houses, stables for the battery horses and officers' mounts, mess halls, warehouses, machine shops, oil house and blacksmith shop and electric light and water system.

A rifle range with concrete parapet walls, pit houses, piers, side walks, and fifty targets occupies about 75 acres of the west end of the camp. The range is 1,200 yards long and 300 yards wide.

Michigan Central tracks running in to the reservation make the operation of detaining and unloading supplies a simple one.

Recreation Provided at Camp.
Though officers of the Michigan National Guard plan to put the state militia men through a stiff training routine pending receipt of orders sending the troops to the border, it will not be a case of all work and no play for the soldiers.

Under the direction of Lieutenant W. A. Atkinson, chaplain of the 31st Regiment, and athletic director of the camp, a program of sports and games will be staged each day during the stay at Grayling.

Physical Standard Is High.
The physical standard of Michigan troops assembled at the state concentration camp here in response to President Wilson's call for Mexican duty, is unusually high, according to surgeons in charge of the work of examining the men to determine their fitness for the work in prospect.

Each new recruit in the guard was forced to undergo the same rigid examination that is required for enlistment in the regular army. Surgeons at the camp considered it remarkable that more than 50 per cent of all applicants examined were suitable for admission.

Camp Grayling Lively Place.

An Eccentric Bishop.

Bishop Wilson of Calcutta had as housekeeper a venerable lady who remembered the duel between Sir Philip Francis and Warren Hastings on Aug. 17, 1783. On entering the cathedral on a Sunday morning, fully robed, lawn sleeves and all, and passing the pew where the old lady sat he would pause and give her the "kiss of peace" before all the congregation, and this although he had met her at breakfast.

His sermons, too, were racy. Preaching against dishonesty, especially in horseteeth, as one of the great English failings in India, he went on, "Nor are we, servants of the altar, free from yielding to this temptation." Pointing to the occupant of the reading desk below him: "There is my dear and venerable brother, the archdeacon, down there. He is an instance of it. He once sold me a horse. It was unsound. I was a stranger, and he took me in."

Golf Defined.

On the terrace of a country club a group of nongolfers were taking tea. A male nongolfer said thoughtfully: "Golf might be defined as billiards gone to grass."

"Spleen on the green, I'd call it," said a female nongolfer.
"Or the last flicker in the dying fire of athletics," sneered a young football player.

"The misuse of land and language," suggested a tennis champion.
"No, no, you're all wrong," said a famous angler. "Golf is simply a game wherein the ball lies badly and the player well."—Washington Post.

lease the best in Seattle. She wrote that big snowslide story for the Review last fall. She tells 'em how to raise eight babies on $7 a week or how to make a full set of library furniture out of three beef kegs, a packing case and an epileptic icebox. She runs the "Domestic Economy" column, and she's the sweetest, the cleverest, the most stinging—

Appleton's enthusiastic tribute ceased suddenly, for he saw that O'Neil was once more deaf and that his eyes were fixed dreamily upon the canyon far ahead.

On the evening of the sixth day a splattered, battered poling boat with its seams open awing in to the bank where O'Neil's men were encamped, and its three occupants staggered out. They were gaunt and stiff and heavy eyed. Even Tom Slater's full cheeks hung loose and flabby. But the leader was alert and buoyant; his face was calm, his eyes were smiling.

"You'll take the men on to the coal fields and finish the work," he told his boss packer later that night. "Appleton and I will start back to Cortez in the morning. When you have finished go to Juneau and see to the recording."

"Ain't that my neck?" murmured the dyspeptic. "No for Kyak, where there ain't a store, and my gum all wet."

"Chew it, paper and all," advised Appleton cheerfully.

"Oh, the good has all gone out of it now," Slater explained.

"Meet me in Seattle on the 15th of next month," his employer directed.

The clerk of the leading hotel in Seattle whirled his register about as a man deposited a weather beaten war bag on the marble floor and leaned over the counter to inquire:

"Is Murray O'Neil here?"

This question had been asked repeatedly within the last two hours, but heretofore by people totally different in appearance from the one who spoke now. The man behind the desk measured the stranger with a suspicious eye before answering. He saw a rugged, loose hung, fat person of melancholy countenance, who was loaded to the knees and claying rum.

"Mr. O'Neil is not here."

The fat man stared at his informant accusingly. "Ain't this the 15th?" he asked.

"It is."

"Then he's here, ain't right?"

"Mr. O'Neil is not in," the clerk repeated, raising fixedly over Mr. Slater's left shoulder.

"Well, I guess his room will do for me. I ain't particular."

"His room is occupied at present. If you care to wait you will find"—

Precisely what it was that he was to find Tom never learned, for at that moment the brent was driven out of his lungs by a tremendous whack, and he turned to behold Dr. Stanley Gray towering over him, an expansive smile upon his face.

"He's around somewhere."

Slater turned a resentful, smoldering gaze upon the hotel clerk and looked about him for a chair with a detachable leg, but the object of his regard disappeared abruptly behind the key rack.

"This rat brained party said he hadn't come."

"He arrived this morning, but we've barely seen him."

"I left Appleton in Juneau. He'll be down on the next boat."

"Appleton? Who's he?" Dr. Gray inquired.

"Oh, he's a new member of the order—initiated last month. He's learning to be a sleep hater, like the rest of us. He's recording the right of way."

"What's in the air? None of us knows. We didn't even know Murray's whereabouts. Thought he was in Kyak until he sounded the tocsin from New York. The other boys have quit their jobs, and I've sold my practice."

"It's a railroad."

Dr. Gray grinned. "Well, that's the tone I use when I break the news that it's a girl instead of a boy."

"It's a railroad," Slater repeated, "up the Salmon river."

LOCATING MINERALS.

Inventor Believes Deposits May Be Found by Means of "F" Rays.

The experiments made in France in August last and in Italy during the past few months by the Florentine inventor, Ing. Ulivi, in regard to exploding deposits of powder without contact by means of the new so called F rays, have only been duly chronicled in the newspapers. A field apparatus which can locate and explode a magazine or a mine at considerable distances is conceded to have a high value as a weapon of war, and that is probably the primary value of the discovery. However, the inventor has stated that the greatest value of his invention will ultimately be found in a purely commercial field—namely, the locating of mineral deposits in the earth.

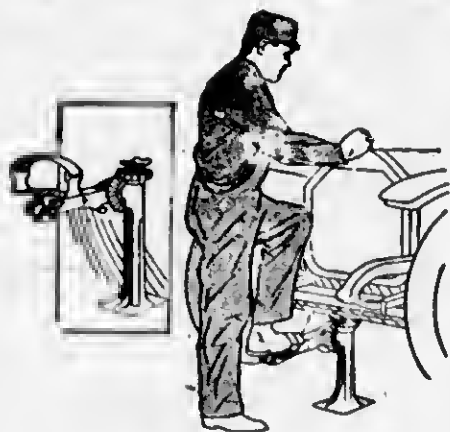

The secret of the apparatus lies, of course, with the inventor, but he has given the following general information in regard to the operation of the F rays: The apparatus as used by Ing. Ulivi is equipped with resonators. The F rays directed or aimed by the apparatus cause the resonators to sound tones which vary in accordance with the body through which the rays pass. In his experiments in setting off explosives by means of the F rays, Ing. Ulivi has specialized on the note or tone given out by the apparatus when the rays encounter the explosive and its container. The sounding of that note gives him the accurate direction, after which the rays are intensified or focused, so to speak, until the explosion occurs. Parenthetically it might be added that the F rays, under the Ulivi system, are valueless against explosives which cannot be fired by ignition.

In the course of these experiments Ing. Ulivi has discovered that of the various metals encountered by the rays each has a distinctive tone on the resonators, which tone varies in accordance with the character, volume and density of the body of metal encountered. The inventor believes that an apparatus of the type now used by him, perfected with a view to accurately classifying different metals and their volumes, could be employed with certainty in the exploration of mineral lands and in locating ore bearing ledges.

JACK FOR AUTOMOBILES.

Foot Operated Device That Is Easily and Quickly Adjusted.

"Jacking up" an automobile is an easy matter, so far as mere muscular exertion is concerned, when a modern jack is used. But the operation is often marred by the dust and grease which are almost inseparable adjuncts. A device which enables the motorist to avoid these consequences, by operating any auto jack with his foot, is the product of a Chicago manufacturer, whose foot stirrup attachment may be quickly adjusted and is easily operated in a standing position.

Uses of Aluminum.

The extent and variety of the uses of aluminum may be inferred from a consideration of its properties. While it is extremely light—only about two and a half times heavier than water—it possesses great malleability, ductility and tensile strength. It is easily alloyed with other metals and strongly resists the influences of air, water and vegetable acids. For these reasons it is to an increasing extent employed in making kitchen utensils, surgical appliances, jewelry, fancy articles, heavy bearings for machinery, etc. In these various forms it is being exported to every grand division of the world, our sales last year being especially heavy in Canada, England and India. Japan, Australia, Germany and Brazil rank next in value of purchases from us, while sales are recorded in smaller quantities in practically every part of the civilized globe.

Fourth of July Dinners.

The parlors of the Baptist church will be open to the public all day on July 4th and will provide a pleasant resting place. A first class dinner will be served at 12 m. for which tickets will be on sale at an early date. Supper will be served from 5 to 8. All will receive a hearty welcome.

Spend Your Fourth in Charlevoix

Among the Players and Caddies

The golf season at the Charlevoix links opened officially June 17. On account of the cool weather, which seems to be general over the country, the season did not open with anything like a rush. But if the "signs" mean anything the season will not be any poorer for a slack week or so at the beginning.

A number of very desirable alterations have been made in the Golf Club house, which will increase the size of the locker rooms, shop and office, and in many ways facilitate the better accommodation of the players. The golf course, in spite of a hard winter, is in excellent condition. Players who have gone over the course say that the course is as near perfect as they have ever seen it. James Gaskins, Sr., is to be complimented very highly on this account. No alterations have been made on the course with the exception of a slight change in the bunker on the fourteenth hole.

William Watson, the eminent golf professional and golf course expert, is in entire charge again, as he has been for the past two seasons. He arrived in Charlevoix last Wednesday. Franz Rickaby has charge of the caddies and commences his fourth year in that capacity. Harry Alcox has been re-employed by the club to manage the sale of tickets and lockers. James Gaskin, Jr., is again assistant professional and club maker for Mr. Watson, and Anthony Schubert returns as Mr. Watson's secretary. Gaskin and Schubert were both with Mr. Watson during the winter season in California. The position of caddie master's assistant, held last year by Ernie Olney, is filled this year by John Gabrielson, of Galesburg, Illinois. Olney has been given the position of grounds patrol.

This year the course will be open on Sundays after one o'clock p. m.

The attention of the boys of Charlevoix and vicinity and the parents of the boys is again respectfully called to what the golf course has to offer its caddies. No changes have been made in the prizes and awards to be given the boys for merit along one line or another. The rate of payment for service remains the same also. Attention is called particularly to the savings prizes which consist of 10 per cent added to the money saved by any caddie who can show by a deposit book from one of the local banks that he has been depositing all or part of his earnings weekly. These percentages are awarded about the end of the first week in September.

Plans are on foot to furnish good pastimes for the boys while not on duty. Mr. Gabrielson is an athlete who wrens his college letters in baseball and basketball, and will be a good "pal" for the boys. Baseball and basketball outfits will be furnished immediately, and it is highly probable that some all-steel gymnastic apparatus will be put in the coddie house yard this season. Smoking and card playing while at the course will be considered misdemeanors and the offenders will be punished by being suspended for not less than three days and being declared ineligible to serve as professional caddie for this season. This position, paying from two to three dollars a day, as it was last year, will be awarded at the close of each week for the week following to the caddie judged to be the most deserving of the honor.

A close record of caddies' earnings last year revealed some startling figures. On Monday, August 16, the caddies received $137.85. During the month from June 17 to July 17, the total was $1,278.52. The total earnings amounted to $4,797.39. This total does not include anything earned before June 17 or after September 10. These figures are authentic and may be seen by anyone on application. There is no doubt but that this season will compare very favorably with last. All inducement will be offered the boys to save their money. The caddie master will be only too glad to do anything he can for the boys in this respect. No normal boy of twelve years or over (or even younger if he is large or strong) should miss the opportunity of getting a portion of the right respectable amount given to the caddies each year.

The annual excursion will be held as usual, about the second or third Sunday in August. It is possible the trip will be made to Mackinac this year. There is nothing definite about this, however, and more will be said later.

It is the purpose of the caddie master and his assistant to see more than ever that good order is maintained at the course, and that all the boys "get a chance" if they deserve it. The boys should show regularity and earnestness in their work. Parents will do much to help if they will encourage these qualities in the boys who are caddies.

If possible this column will be maintained each week in the "Courier," and the caddie-master is always glad to meet and talk with the parents of any of the boys at any time.

Twenty boys were given numbers last week. They are: Yettows Hyck, Fred Norton, Lawrence Taylor, Louis Hyck, Martin Halverson, Clarence Thompson, Robert Miles, Lester Coblenz, Kenneth Usher, Walter Anderson, Lyman Brown, William Woods, Charles McFarlane, Hank Hyck, Carl Gordon, Harold McCafferty, Jeff Novotny, Alfred Jones, Gordon Palmer, Hugh Kelley. They are named here in order. It is likely that more boys will be needed very soon.

SHOULD BUILD ROADS THAT ARE PERMANENT

Concrete Highways Cost Less Than Yearly Upkeep of Gravel Roads.

By way of explanation, the Courier is authorized by Van Pelt to state why he is agitating the building of cement roads in Charlevoix county. He and his family pay a pretty stiff tax and he wishes to reduce this tax for all time to come. That is why, and he does it for no other reason. He doesn't propose to make any money by building the road himself nor by being interested with anyone who will build it, nor to have any pecuniary interest in it in any shape, form or fashion—just simply to reduce the road tax and he has the figures to show how it can be done.

In the meantime, all he asks is for every tax payer, and anyone who is at all interested in having good roads or who would wish to haul three or four times as much to a load as one time on the nine foot road now being built, to look at the concrete road Lee Howland built at the south end of Bridge street, Charlevoix, opposite the Elston house (now Hotel Michigan). This has been down seven years and there is not a crack nor a break nor a worn place in it, and he claims that in any month of July or August during these years there have been more vehicles pass over this strip of road than would pass between Charlevoix and East Jordan in one year, and also that the same thing applies to Dixon avenue.

We all know that the nine foot road is better now than the old road was, and that more could be bailed at the present time on such a road were it not for turning out in the mud and turning back on again, but the question is—no, he says it is no question of how long they will last, because repairs have to be made sometimes the first year, always the second year and always the third year on the nine foot road. In fact, continuous work must be done on it.

BACKACHE IS A WARNING

Charlevoix People Should Not Neglect Their Kidneys.

Backache is often nature's most frequent signal of weakened kidneys. To cure the pains and aches, to remove the lameness when it arises from weakened kidneys, you must reach the cause—the kidneys. If you have pain through the small of your back, urinary disorders, headaches, dizzy spells, or are nervous and depressed, start treating the kidneys with a tested kidney remedy.

Doan's Kidney Pills have been proved good and are especially for weak kidneys. Doan's have been used in kidney trouble for over 50 years. Read Charlevoix testimony.

Mrs. W. L. Cowan, 210 Antrim street, Charlevoix, says: "I don't hesitate to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, for I have had good results from them. I had a severe backache and pains in my kidneys and was also annoyed by the kidney secretions. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store, and they brought me great relief."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Cowan had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

WHAT CATARRH IS

It has been said that every third person has catarrh in some form. Science has shown that nasal catarrh often indicates a general weakness of the body; and local treatments in the form of snuffs and vapors do little, if any good.

To correct catarrh you should treat its cause by enriching your blood with the oil-food in Scott's Emulsion which is a medicinal food and a building-tonic, free from alcohol or any harmful drugs. Try it. Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J.

"A Candidate for the Reason That I Believe I Can Save the Tax-Payers Money"

DANA H. HINKLEY

Candidate for STATE SENATOR
Twenty-ninth District

HINKLEY'S WORK

No member of the present legislature has done better work for the state of Michigan during this session than Rep. Dana H. Hinkley of Emmet county. His efforts have stood out with constant conspicuousness since the day when he was named chairman of the ways and means committee of the house.

As the head of the most-important committee in the lower body of the legislature he has carried more responsibilities than any one member of either house. With these responsibilities went great power and it can be said to his credit that he used this power sparingly and wisely.

Not the least of his service has been his determined effort to curtail the expenses which will attend the operation of the state government during the next two years.

During the last session of the legislature Senator Charles Foster, of Lansing, whose bill making an appropriation of $800,000 for a new office building passed the senate by unanimous vote, was assured by members of the house that the bill would be passed if it could be pried out of the ways and means committee. It was reported favorably by the house committee on public buildings, but Chairman Harry Hinkley of the ways and means committee refused to report it out on the ground that the state could not spare the money.—Grand Rapids Press.

Another state legislator who should be returned—for the good of Michigan—is Representative D. H. Hinkley of Petoskey. Hinkley has served as chairman of the ways and means committee of the lower house. He knows just how badly Michigan needs a "Budget System" for making appropriations. He can be of inestimable service in perfecting a workable "Budget System" that will produce results. His experience and his advice will be of incalculable value to this end. Mr. Hinkley rendered Michigan invaluable service as ways and means committee chairman.—Grand Rapids Herald.

Up in the 29th senatorial district, Dana H. Hinkley of Petoskey is a candidate for the Republican nomination. Hinkley has the exceptional record of having served three terms in the House of Representatives, being nominated each of his three terms without opposition in the primaries. Starting as a lumber piler in a saw mill, and later operating one, his most earnest supporters have been former employees. "Harry," as he is known to his close friends, started profit sharing with his employees in 1907. He served in the last two sessions as chairman of the ways and means committee which by itself marks the influence he wielded in legislative and many bills aimed at taking money from the state treasury sailed along smoothly until they bumped into Chairman Hinkley and the ways and means committee where they were peacefully put to sleep. His experience on this committee has given him unusual opportunity to study the problems that have brought out the agitation for a budget system in this state, and if experience counts for anything Mr. Hinkley, just at this time, more than any man in Michigan, can render invaluable service in working out legislation looking to a change in the policy of making the budget. Mr. Hinkley thinks ten per cent, or a cool million dollar saving is conservative and he would like to participate in making the bill that will bring about this needed reform. If the 29th district nominate and elset Mr. Hinkley, they are assured of a strong senator, who will be a credit to their district and will bring them additional credit and prestige in the state at large.—Charlevoix Republican. Pol. Adv. 261f

TIMELY SUGGESTIONS ON GOOD ROAD BUILDING

Do you want a good durable road? Do you expect to get it for nothing? When you make an investment, do you investigate as to whether it is going to pay or not?

Did you ever decide on a certain plan and then change your mind because you had learned of a better and a cheaper plan?

If you were going to build a bridge, would you build it strong enough to hold the heaviest load you expected to carry over it, or would you not?

If you were going to build a road for your own personal use with your own money and expected to use it for 50 years, would you build a good durable one that would last that length of time, or would you build a cheap one and keep rebuilding it every year.

Remember, it is your own money that is building roads today.

Deafness Cannot be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out of this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

Winter in Russia.

What winter can be like in Russia was discovered by Napoleon in 1812 and by Charles XII. of Sweden a century earlier. Charles made a successful drive into Russia in 1708, but winter overtook him in October. The cold was so intense that wood could not be made to ignite in the open air. Wine and spirits froze, birds fell dead on the wing, salivn congealed on the men's lips. Says one who went through that terrible winter with the Swedes army: "You could see some without hands, some without feet, some without ears and noses, unable to walk upright, but creeping along like quadrupeds."—London Standard.

HOW APPENDICITIS CAN BE PREVENTED

Charlevoix people should know that a few doses of simple buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adler-ka, often relieve or prevent appendicitis. This simple mixture removes such surprising fouls matter that ONE SPOONFUL relieves almost ANY CASE of constipation, sour stomach or gas. A short treatment helps chronic stomach trouble. Adler-ka has easiest and most thorough action of anything we ever sold. B. A. Herman, druggist.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Northland Opens Season.

The Steamship Northland made her first trip of the season into Harbor Springs last Sunday. She runs on a different schedule from last year. On her way to Chicago she arrives at 4:45 p. m. and departs at 5:00 p. m. Thursday, and Buffalo bound she arrives at 10:30 a. m. and leaves at 10:45 a. m. Sunday. The ship is a veritable floating palace with every possible convenience and comfort aboard, and she is always right on schedule time.

Premature Celebration.

A premature Fourth of July celebration was observed by a few pedestrians at Boyns City one morning last week when the window display of fire crackers, roman candles, etc., in the Western Union office began a fusillade. The rising sun ignited some of the display and soon the window was ablaze with colored flames, small explosions. The office was entered and the conflagration stopped before great damage had been done.

Petoskey Claims Oldest Apple.

California claims to have an apple which was stuffed full of cloves thirty-six years ago and carefully preserved all these years, but Michigan can go California or any other state in the Union one better, for Mrs. L. A. Labadie, of Lake street, Petoskey, is displaying an apple which she stuffed with cloves in 1863 while Mr. Labadie was with the Union army in the Civil war.

Mr. and Mrs. Labadie then made their home in White Pigeon, Mich., and in the early fall of 1863 Mrs. Labadie picked a beautiful yellow harvest apple and stuffed it just as full of cloves as it would hold. She then carefully placed it in a safe place and since has preserved it.

A few days ago she noticed the article in the Petoskey Evening News telling of the clove stuffed apple shown in California and Mr. Labadie at once brought their specimen of clove stuffed apple to that office.

Stuffed into one end of the apple is a yellow slip of paper bearing the date on which the apple was stuffed and bearing Mrs. Labadie's name. The apple is highly prized by Mr. and Mrs. Labadie and is carefully preserved by them as one of their choice possessions. Few persons have ever seen it, but they will be glad to show it to their friends. It is fifty-three years old, seventeen years older than the much talked about apple in the west.

Boys Kill Big Bear.

Six boys armed only with clubs and abetted by a big dog killed a large bear near Summit City last week. The boys, Norman Sampson, Wilfer Schnipp, Bryan, Rolph and Harry Hicks, of Holmes Siding, and Rolph Skiver, of Traverse City, all under sixteen, were returning from Walton Junction where they had feasted on ice cream and cake. As they neared this village a big bear leaped across their path. Grabbing clubs, the youths fought for an hour with the bear and finally beat out its brains. Hicks Corners was the scene of a bear skinning and some people in that vicinity enjoyed bear steaks for the first time since Michigan became a state.

Bad Fire at East Jordan.

At 1:30 o'clock Tuesday morning of last week neighbors discovered the residence of Ed. Sandle on Howens Addition in East Jordan was on fire. Fire was first discovered about the chimney in the roof. The fire department answered the alarm and succeeded in extinguishing the fire after it had wrought considerable damage.

Mr. Sandle had come home shortly before mid-night and his sprained wrist paining him he had built a quick fire to heat some water to dress it and then went to bed and sleep. He had been up with his wife who is at a Petoskey hospital for an operation for several days and nights and was soon sound asleep and was only awakened by the neighbors who came to the fire. The house belonged to Mr. E. Flagg and was badly damaged, especially the addition. Mr. Sandle lost considerable of his furniture, etc., the loss being partially covered by insurance.—Enterprise.

Radical Change in Interest Paid On Bank Deposits.

For some time the banks in Charlevoix county have been paying interest at three percent if left three months, on certificates of deposit. It has been found by the banks that this is too short a time to have funds on deposit and make them earn anything or have any loan value.

In view of this it is agreed by the banks in Charlevoix county, that on and after July 1, 1916, no interest will be paid upon deposits unless the money has been so left for six full months, according to the regular rules of the savings department, which is four percent per annum on all funds left six months or longer. Hereafter this will apply to certificates of deposit likewise.

Many of our customers have expressed themselves to the effect that it is worth as much to them to have a place to leave their funds for a shorter time, as it is worth to a bank to have them. In fairness to all this change is made.

Respectfully,

CHAPTER V.

O'Neill sizes up Gordon.
"The Irish prince" had gained something of a reputation for extravagance, but he acknowledged himself completely outdone by the luxury with which Curtis Gordon had surrounded himself at Hope. The promoter had spoken of his modest living quarters. In reality they consisted of a handsome twenty room house, furnished with the elegance of a Newport cottage.
"You wonder, perhaps, why I have been so extravagant with my living quarters," said Gordon as they walked into the library. "but it is not alone for myself. You see, I have people associated with me who are accustomed to every comfort and luxury, and I built this house for them. Mrs. Gerard has been kind enough to grace the establishment with her presence, and I expect others of my stockholders to do likewise. You see, I work in the light, Mr. O'Neill. I insist upon the broadest publicity in all my operations, and to that end I strive to bring my clients into contact with the undertaking itself. For instance, I am bringing a party of my stockholders all the way from New York at my own expense just to show them how their interests are being administered. I have chartered a special train and a ship for them, and of course they must be properly catered while here."
"Quite a scheme," said O'Neill.
"I wanted to show them this marvelous country, God's wonderland of opportunity. They will return impressed by the solidity and permanence of their investment."
"I judge from what you say that the mine gives encouragement," O'Neill ventured, eyeing his host curiously through a cloud of tobacco smoke.
"Encouragement" is not the word. Before many years Hope Consolidated will be listed on the exchanges of the world along with Amalgamated and the other great producers. We have here, Mr. O'Neill, a tremendous mountain of ore, located at tide-water on one of the world's finest harbors. The climate is superb. We have coal near at hand for our smelter. The mine only requires systematic development under competent hands."

"I was in Cortez when Lars Anderson made his first discovery here, and I had an option on all this property. I believe the price was $1,200. At any rate, it was I who drove those tunnels you found when you bought him out." Gordon's eyes wavered briefly, then he laughed.
"My dear sir, you have my sincere sympathy. Your poison, my man, as it were, eh? You became discouraged too soon. Another hundred feet of work and you would have been justified in paying $1,500,000. This Eldorado which the copper trust has bought has a greater surface showing than Hope, I grant, but it lies 200 miles inland, and there is the all important question of transportation to be solved. The ore will have to be hauled or smelted on the ground, while we have the Kyak coal fields at our door. The Hellions are building a railroad to it which will parallel mine in places, but the very nature of their enterprise forebodes it to failure."

"Indeed! How so?"
"My mine is the better. By a rigid economy of expenditure, by a careful supervision of detail, I can effect a tremendous saving over their initial cost. I hope to convince them of the fact and thus induce them to withdraw from the field or take over my mine at a reasonable figure. Negotiations are under way."

At this talk of economy from Curtis Gordon O'Neill refrained from stalling with difficulty. He felt certain that the man's entire operations were as unsound as his statement that he could bring the trust to terms. Yet Gordon seemed thoroughly in earnest. Either he expected to fool his present hearer or else he had become hypnotized by the sight of his own magnificent treasure. O'Neill could not tell which.
"Who took over your right of way?" he asked with some interest.
"A very able young engineer, Dan Appleton. An excellent man, but—unreliable in certain things. I had to let him go, this very afternoon, in fact, for insubordination. But I discharged him more for the sake of discipline than anything else. He'll be anxious to return in a few days. Now tell me—Gordon fixed his visitor with a bland stare which failed to mask his gnawing curiosity—"what brings you to King Philip sound? Are we to be rivals in the railroad field?"

"No. There are enough projects of that sort in the neighborhood for the present."
"Five, all told, but only one destined to succeed."
"I'm bound for the Kyak coal fields to perfect and extend my surveys under the new rule."

"Ah! I've heard about that ruling," "Heard about it?" exclaimed O'Neill. "Good Lord! Haven't you complied with it?"
"Not yet."
"You surely intend to do so?"
"Oh, yes; I suppose so."
"If you don't you'll lose it."
"I'm not sure we can ever win."
"Nonsense!"
"I'm not sure that it's wise to put more good money into those coal claims," said Gordon. "This ruling will doubtless be reversed as the others have been. One never knows what the land office policy will be two days at a time."

"You know your own business," O'Neill remarked after a pause, "but unless you have inside information or a bigger pull in Washington than the rest of us I'd advise you to get busy. I'll be on my way to Kyak in the morning with a gag of men." Gordon's attitude puzzled him, for he could not bring himself to believe that such indifference was genuine.
It was difficult to escape from the hospitality of Hope, and O'Neill succeeded in doing so only after an argument with Nattie and her mother. They let him go at last only upon his promise to return on his way back from the coal fields, and they insisted upon accompanying him down to the dock, whither Gordon had preceded them in order to have his motorboat in readiness.

An 11 o'clock twilight enveloped Cortez when O'Neill and Slater landed, but the town was awake. The recent railway and mining activity in the neighborhood had brought a considerable influx of people to King Philip sound, and the strains of music from dance hall doors, the click of checks and roulette balls from the saloons, gave evidence of an unusual prosperity.

O'Neill had no difficulty in securing men. Once he was recognized, the scenes at Hope were re-enacted, and there was a general scramble to enlist upon his payroll. Within an hour, therefore, his arrangements were made, and he and Tom repaired to Calahan's hotel for a few hours' sleep.
A stud game was going on in the barroom when they entered, and O'Neill paused to watch it while Slater spoke to one of the players, a clean-cut, blond youth of whimsical countenance. When the two friends finally faced the bar for their "nightcap" Tom explained:

"That's Appleton, the fellow Gordon fired today. I told him I'd left the old mine flat."

"Is he a friend of yours?"
"Sure. Nice boy; good engineer too."
"Umph! That game is crooked."
"No?" Happy Tom displayed a flash of interest.

"Yes; Cortez is fast becoming a metropolis, I see. The man in the derby hat is performing a little feat that once cost me $4,000 to learn."

"I'd better split Dan away," said Tom hastily.

"Wait! Education is a good thing, even if it is expensive at times. I fancy your friend is bright enough to take care of himself. Let's wait a bit."

"Ain't that just my blained luck?" lamented Slater. "Now, if they were playing fur I could make a killing. I'd 'copper' Appleton's bets and 'open' the ones he cooped."

O'Neill smiled, for Happy Tom's caution in money matters was notorious. "You know you don't believe in gambling," he said.

"It's not a belief, it's a disease," declared the fat man. "I was born to be a gambler, but the business is too uncertain. Now that I'm getting so old and feeble I can't work any more, I'd take it up, only I broke three fingers, and when I try to deal I drop the cards. What are we going to do?"

"Just wait," said O'Neill.
"Futurized the two friends watched the poker game, which for a time proceeded quietly. But suddenly they saw Appleton lean over the table and address the man with the derby hat; then, thrusting back his chair, he rose, declaring in a louder tone:

"I tell you I saw it. I thought I was mistaken at first. His face was white, and he disregarded the efforts of his right hand neighbor to quiet him."

"Don't squeal," smiled the dealer. "I'll leave it to the boys if I did anything wrong."

"You pulled that king from the bottom. It may not be wrong, but it's mighty peculiar."

"Forget it!" one of the others exclaimed. "Denny wouldn't doubt a cross you."

"Hardly," agreed Mr. Denny evenly. "You're in $180, but if you're sore you can have it back."

Appleton dug his cards into the middle of the table and turned away disgustedly. "It's a hard thing to prove, and I'm not absolutely sure I saw straight or—I'm not enough."

Denny shrugged and gathered in the discarded hand. "You've been drinking too much, that's all. Your eyesight is scattered."

Appleton's face flushed as he beheld the gaze of the company upon him and heard the laughter which greeted his remark. He turned to leave when O'Neill, who had continued to watch the proceedings with interest, crossed to the group and touched Denny on the shoulder, saying quietly:

"Give him his money."
"Eh?" The smile faded from the fellow's face. He looked up with startled inquiry. "What?"
"Give him his money."

In the momentary hush which followed Happy Tom Slater, who had frequently seen his employer to action and understood storm signals, sighed deeply and reached for the nearest chair. With a wrench of his powerful hands he loosened a leg. Although Mr. Slater abhorred trouble, he was accustomed to meet it philosophically. A lifetime spent in construction camps had taught him that of all weapons the one best suited to his use was a pick handle. Second to that he had come to value the hardwood leg of a chair. But in the present case his precaution proved needless, for the dispute was over before he had fairly prepared himself.

Without waiting for O'Neill to pat his accusation into words Denny had risen swiftly, and in doing so he had either purposely or by accident made a movement which produced a prompt and instinctive reaction. Murray's fist met him as he arose, met him so squarely and with such force that he lost all interest in what followed. The other card players silently gathered Mr. Denny in their arms and stretched him upon a disused roulette table. The bartender appeared with a wet towel and began to bathe his temples.

Appleton, dazed by the suddenness of it all, found a stack of gold pieces in his hand and heard O'Neill saying in an everyday tone:

"Come to my room, please. I'd like to talk to you." Something commanding in the speaker's face made the engineer follow against his will. He lingered to loiter here until Denny regained his senses, but O'Neill had him by the arm, and a moment later he was being led down the hall away from the lobby and the barroom. As Slater, who had followed, closed the door behind them Dan burst forth:

"By Jove! Why didn't you tell me? I knew he was crooked, but I couldn't believe it."
"Sh! down," said O'Neill. "He won't pull himself together for awhile, and Murray's Fist Met Him as He Rose.

I want to get to bed. Are you looking for a job?"

The engineer's eyes opened wide. "Yes."
"Do you know the Kyak country?"
"Pretty well."

"I need a surveyor. Your wages will be the same that Gordon paid, and they begin now, if it's agreeable."

"It's certainly so."
"Good! Well leave at 6 o'clock sharp. Bring your bedding and instruments."

"Thanks!—This is a bit of a surprise. Who are you?"
"Mr. O'Neill."

"Oh! Mr. Appleton's expression changed quickly. "You're Murray?"
He stammered an instant—"It was very good of you to take my part after I'd been fool enough to—"

"Well, I didn't want to see you make a total idiot of yourself."

The young man flushed slightly; then in a quieter voice he asked:

"How did you know I was out of work?"
"Mr. Gordon told me. He recommended you highly."

"He did?"
"He said you were unreliable, dishonest and dishonest. Coming from him, I took that as high praise."

There was a moment's pause; then Appleton laughed boyishly.
"That's funny. I'm very glad to know you, Mr. O'Neill."

"You don't and you won't for a long time. Tom tells me you didn't think well of Gordon's enterprise and so he fired you."

"That's right. I suppose I ought to (Continued on page eleven.)"

and, likewise, everyone used hand-mixed paint. To-day, when machine-spun cloth is so much better and cheaper, no one would think of wearing homespun. Many people are still using hand-mixed paint, however, because they do not know that have kept my mouth shut, but if I have a way of flying open when it shouldn't. He is either a fool or a crook, and his mine is nothing but a prospect. I couldn't resist telling him so."

"And his railroad?" Appleton asked. "Oh, it's a good a role as the trust's. I worked on the two surveys. Personally I think both outfits are crazy to try to build in from here. I had to tell Gordon that too. You see, I'm a volunteer talker. I should have been born with a stutter. It would have saved me a lot of trouble."

CHAPTER VI.

In a Wild Country.

LATE on the following morning O'Neill's expedition was landed at the deserted fishing station of Omar, thirty miles down the sound from Cortez. From this point its route lay down the bay to open water and thence eastward along the coast in front of the Salmon river delta some forty miles to Kyak. This latter stretch would have been well nigh impossible for open boats but for the fact that the numerous mud bars and islands thrown out by the river afforded a sheltered course. These inside channels, though shallow, were of sufficient depth to allow small craft to navigate and had long been used as a route to the coal fields.

Appleton, smiling and cheerful, was the first member of the party to appear at the dock that morning, and when the landing had been effected at Omar he showed his knowledge of the country by suggesting a short cut which would save the long row down to the mouth of the sound and around into the delta. Immediately back of the old cannery, which occupied a gap in the mountain rim, lay a narrow lake, and this, he declared, held an outlet which led into the Salmon river flats. By hauling the boats over into this body of water—a task made easy by the presence of a tiny tramway with one dilapidated push car which had been a part of the cannery equipment—it would be possible to save much time and labor.

"I've heard there was a way through," O'Neill confessed, "but nobody seemed to know just where it was."

"I know," the young man assured him. "We can gain a day at least, and I judge every day is valuable." "So valuable that we can't afford to lose one by making a mistake," said his employer meaningly.

"Leave it to me. I never forget a country once I've been through it."

But Dan Appleton was not mistaken. A two hours' row across the mirror-like surface of Omar lake brought the party out through a hidden gap in the mountains and afforded them a view across the level delta. To their left the range they had just penetrated retreated toward the canyon where the Salmon river burst its way out from the interior, and beyond that point it continued in a coastward swing to Kyak, their destination. Between lay a flat, trackless tundra, cut by sloughs and glacial streams, with here and there long tongues of timber reaching down from the high ground and dwindling away toward the seaward marshes. It was a desolate realm, the breeding place of sea fowl, the hunting ground for the great brown bear.

O'Neill had never before been so near the canyon as this, and the wild stories he had heard of it recurred to him with interest. He surveyed the place curiously as the boats glided along, but could see nothing more than a jumble of small hills and buttes and beyond them the dead gray backs of the twin glaciers coming down from the slopes to east and west. Beyond the foothills and the glaciers themselves the main range was washed by a deep valley through which he judged the river must come, and beyond that he knew was a country of agricultural promise, extending clear to the fabulous copper belt, whither the railroads from Cortez were headed. Still farther inland lay the Tannu, and then the Yukon, with their ridges untouched.

What a pity, what a mockery, it was that this obvious entrance to the country had been blocked by nature! Just at his back was Omar, with its deep and sheltered harbor; the lake he had crossed gave a passage through the guardian range, and this tundra—O'Neill estimated that he could lay a mile of track a day over it—led right up to the glaciers. Once through the coast range building would be easy, for the upper Salmon was navigable, and its banks presented no difficulties to track laying.

He turned abruptly to Appleton, who was pulling an oar.

"What do you know about that canyon?" he asked.

"Not much. Nobody knows much, for those fellows who went through in the gold rush have all left the country. Gordon's right of way comes in above, and so does the trust's. From there on I know every foot of the ground."

Came was lithe that night for out on the day. During the preparation of supper Murray sat staring fixedly before him, deaf to all sounds and insensible to the activities of his companions. He had lost his customary breeziness and his good nature. He was curt, satirical, unsmiling. Appleton undertook to arouse him from this abstraction, but Slater drew the young man aside hurriedly with a warning:

"Don't do that, son, or you'll wear splints for the rest of the trip."

"What's the matter with him, anyhow?" Dan inquired. "He was boiling over with enthusiasm all day, but now—why, he's asleep sitting up! He hasn't moved for twenty minutes."

Tom shook his head, dislodging a swarm of mosquitoes.

"Walk on your toes, my boy. Walk on your toes. I smell something cooking, and it ain't supper."

When food was served O'Neill made a pretense of eating, but rose suddenly in the midst of it with the words:

"I'll stretch my legs a bit." His eyes were the same abstraction which had troubled Appleton during the afternoon. He left the camp and disappeared up the bank of the stream.

"Nice place to take a walk," the engineer observed. "He'll bog down in half a mile or get lost among the sloughs."

Darkness had settled when O'Neill reappeared. He came plunging out of the brush, drenched, muddy, stained by contact with the thickets, but his former mood had disappeared, and in its place was a harsh, explosive energy.

"Tom," he cried, "you and Appleton and I will leave at daylight. The men will wait here until we get back." His voice was incisive. Its tone forbade question.

The youthful engineer stared at him in dismay, for only his anxiety had triumphed over his fatigue, and daylight was but four hours away. O'Neill noted the expression and said more gently:

"You're tired, Appleton, I know, but in working for me you'll be called upon for extraordinary effort now and then. I may not demand more than an extra hour from you; then again I may demand a week straight without sleep. I'll never ask it unless it's necessary and unless I'm ready to do my share."

"Yes, sir." "The sacrifice is big, but the pay is bigger. Loyalty is all I require."

"I'm ready now, sir."

"We can't see to travel before dawn. Help Tom load the lightest boat with rations for five days. If we run short we'll 'stow' it." He kicked off his rubber boots, suspended them to drain the water out, then flung himself upon his bed of boughs and was asleep almost before the two had recovered from their surprise.

"Five days or longer," Slater said gloomily as he and Dan began their preparations. "And me with indigestion!"

"What does it mean?" queried Appleton.

"It means I'll probably succumb."

"No, no! What's the meaning of this change of plan? I can't understand it."

"You don't need to," happy Tom informed him curtly. "There was a look of solicitude in his face as he added, 'I wish I'd made him take off his wet clothes before he went to sleep.'"

"Let's wake him up."

But Slater shook his head. "I'd sooner wake a rattlesnake," said he.

O'Neill roused the members of his expedition while the sky was reddening faintly, for he had a mind which worked like an alarm clock. All except Appleton had worked for him before, and the men accepted his orders to await his return with no appearance of surprise.

With the first clear light he and his two companions set out, rowing up the estuary of the Salmon until the current became too swift to stem in that manner. Then landing, they rigged a "bridle" for the skiff, fitted their shoulders to loops in a ninety foot tow rope and began to "track" their craft up against the stream. It was heart-breaking work. Frequently they were waist deep in the cold water. Long "sweepers" with tips awash in the flood interfered with their efforts. The many branches of the stream forced them to make repeated crossings, for the delta was no more than an endless series of islands through which the current swirled. When dusk overtook them they were wet, weary and weak from hunger. With the dawn they were up and at it again, but their task became constantly more difficult because of the floating glacier ice, which increased with every mile. They were obliged to exercise the utmost caution. Hour after hour they strained against the current until the ropes bit into their aching flesh, bracing raw places on neck and palm. Hour after hour the ice went churning past, and through it all came the intermittent echo of the caving glaciers ahead of them.

Dan Appleton realized very soon whether the journey was leading, and at thought of actually facing those terrors which loomed so large in conjecture his pulses began to leap. He had a suspicion of O'Neill's intent, but dared not voice it. Though the scheme seemed mad enough, its very audacity fascinated him. It would be worth while to take part in such an undertaking, even if it ended in failure. And somehow, against his judgment, he felt that his leader would find a way.

For the most part O'Neill was as silent as a man of stone, and only on those rare occasions when he craved relief from his thoughts did he encourage Dan to talk. Then he sometimes listened, but more frequently he did not. Slater had long since become a dumb draft animal, senseless to discomfort except in the hour of relaxation, when he monotonously catalogued his ills.

"Are you a married man?" O'Neill inquired once of Dan.

"Not yet, sir."

"Familly?"

"Sure! A great big, fine one, consisting of a sister. But she's more than a family—she's a religion." Receiving encouragement from his employer's look of interest, he continued: "We were wiped out by the San Francisco earthquake and stood in the bread line for awhile. We managed to save $4,000 from the wreck, which we divided equally. Then we started out to make our fortunes. It was her idea."

"You came to Cortez?"

"Yes. Money was so easy for me that I lost all respect for it. The town rang with my mirth for awhile. I was an awful fool."

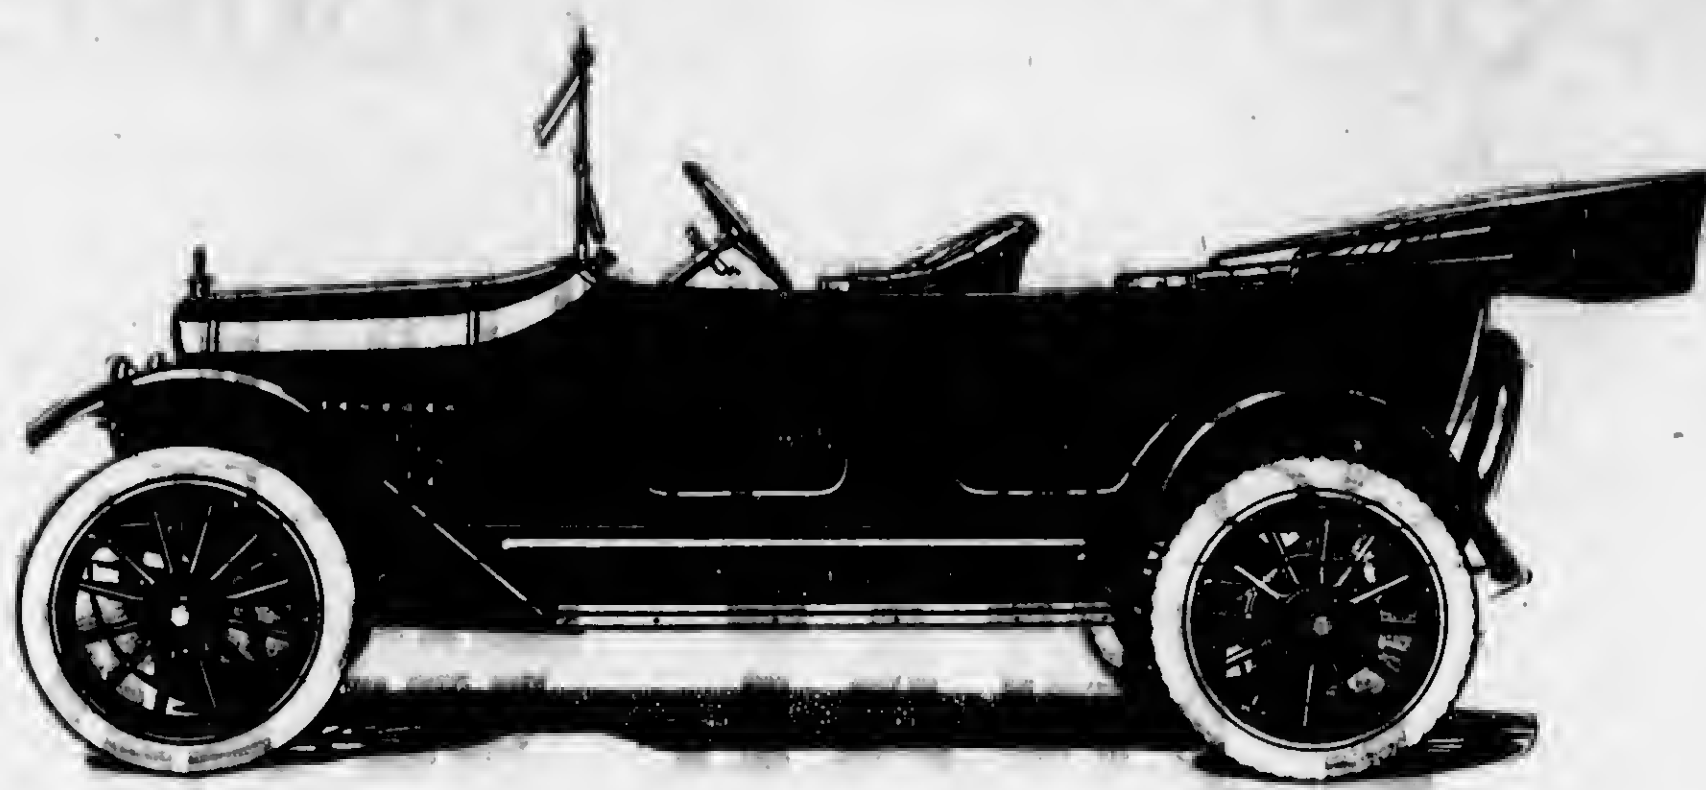

"Edification?"

"Now, it's my ambition to get settled and have her with me. I haven't had a good laugh, a hearty meal or a Christian impulse since I left her."

"What did she do with her half of the fortune?"

"Invested it wisely and went to work. I bought little round celluloid disks with mine; she bought land of some sort with hers. She's a newspaper woman, and the best in the world—or at least she was when she was young."

Why You Should Own a Maxwell

Comfort

First, because it is a comfortable riding car. Plenty of room for five people; deep, soft cushions; springs made of the best spring steel, scientifically heat-treated, accurately suspended and balanced. You will always be comfortable in a Maxwell.

Appearance

Second, because the Maxwell is a trim, smart, good-looking car.

Many makers of heavy, high priced cars, as you know, have copied the general lines, the shape of the body and hood of the Maxwell. This is more of a compliment than an infringement.

Service

Third, because the Maxwell, being a product of thirteen years evolution, is so designed and manufactured that it gives unfailing, consistent and satisfying service to thousands of owners.

Maxwell cars are made of the best materials that money and brains can buy—and they are made right. You can get out of any car only what is put into it.

Low First-Cost

Fourth, because you get everything in a Maxwell that you can get in any car and you get it for less money.

The answer to this is that the Maxwell is a light car and it is built in enormous quantities. The Maxwell Co. is one of the three largest producers of high grade motor cars in the world.

Low After-Cost

Fifth, because the Maxwell will give you more miles per dollar than any car built.

We say this without hesitation or doubt. It is our honest belief and we are willing to prove it by Maxwell owners, by comparison with any other car or by any other way you suggest or prefer.

The Maxwell will please you. We know it will. Let us arrange for a demonstration and we'll take the responsibility of satisfying you completely.

Governor Ferris Gives Touching
Goodbye and God Speed—Notes About Camp Life.

(BY HAROLD W. USHER.)

CAMP FERRIS, July 2.—Standing bare headed before "the boys," Governor Ferris bade goodbye and God speed to the guardsmen last Wednesday afternoon. "I cannot bear to see you leave Michigan without bidding you goodbye," were the words he used.

"The battles," he said, "have always been fought by the youth of our land. We have always won in the end. But we cannot win unless we have clean minds and clean bodies. Remember your religious duties as well as your rules of sanitation. Remember your fathers and mothers and home ties and drop the folks a postal card as often as possible." He was much pleased by the good showing of the brigade and the spirit shown by the troops.

Company I is faring well and all are contented. The only kick is that we are not leaving for Mexico at once. The weather is extremely hot during the day time and cold at night. Many members of various companies from the southern part of the state are having a hard time to get acclimated and in some instances have suffered from the sudden change. We go swimming every day and it would be amusing to you to see the boys do their own washing. Many amusements are afforded, such as swimming, base ball and the hazing of the rookies. The food has been excellent and well cooked due to our cook, "Baby Doll" Jack Mahar and Ed. Jones, of Norwood. We consider ourselves lucky to have such a man as Mahar with us, as we consider him the best in camp. He's small, only weighing 300 pounds, but all there.

An exciting incident happened in Houghton Co. G, next to ours, the other night. At 4:15 a. m. a member of this company went insane. With a bayonet in hand he rushed through the camp crying, "help, murder!" He made desperate efforts to cut his throat, but luckily used the wrong side of the weapon and escaped with a few scratches and lacerations in the field hospital.

A large number of East Jordan people visited the company Sunday and spent the day. This proved a treat and it would be much appreciated if more Charlevoix people would give us a visit. Company I is adding recruits right along and will soon be of battle strength. At present every one is preparing for examination which takes place this week.

SHOULD NOT FOOL COUNTY'S MONEY AWAY

Van Pelt Urges People of County to Build Permanent Roads.

In building highways, it might be well to pattern after the advisory highway paving commission of Boston, Mass.—we say Boston, as while there are many other places that do the same thing, it seemed very difficult for Boston to accomplish it. At all events, the "Yankees" don't like to fool away money. Boston went on record as favoring open specifications with regard to street paving materials. Good roads should be built, particularly where they are expensive and hard to build and cost a great deal of money, on the same plan. Specifications should be made and open bids received. Special inspectors, who would be unpurchasable and unbiased, should be appointed to watch every crew engaged in building the road.

Some objections might be offered in regard to this, but it is an easy matter to get good honest men and nothing would pay better than the employment of such men to see that when the road is being built it is built entirely according to specifications.

FIRE CHIEF SAYS PEOPLE SHOULD CLEAN UP

Alleys in Business Section Filled With Inflammable Material.

Fire Chief Marshall says there are many places in Charlevoix needing cleaning up to prevent a fire. Several small alleys about buildings in the downtown section are full of old paper and boxes and should be given immediate attention from the property owners.

Here is a section from the state fire regulations which must people read to read and then act upon:

Section 14. Every person who shall deposit any rubbish, inflammable or combustible material or any ashes, burning coals or embers within ten (10) feet of any building, fence, sidewalk, pavement or other structure made of wood or other combustible material, or within ten (10) feet of any wooden wall, partition, casing, base board, floor or other wood work of any brick, stone or iron building, or within ten (10) feet of any lumber, timber, wood, hay, straw, shavings, rubbish or other combustible material or substance whatever within the state of Michigan, except in metallic, earthen or other non-combustible vessels or receptacles or in places especially designated for that purpose by the chief of the local fire department, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

FORD RAMBLED RIGHT ALONG

MADE RECORD TRIP UP STATE FROM DETROIT

Harold Hampton and Ernie Soulliere
But Twenty-four Hours on Long Run.

Charles H. Hampton, secretary treasurer of the Canadian Lamp & Stamping Co., at Walkerville, Ont., was up to spend the "Fourth" with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Will E. Hampton. He drove through in a Ford car, accompanied by Ernie Soulliere, superintendent of one of the departments in the factory, and in making the trip established another record for the "Ford," in this part of the state at least. He left Walkerville Friday evening at seven o'clock, eastern time, and arrived in Charlevoix at 9:10, standard time.

Taking out the stops at Lansing for midnight lunch and oil, and at Grand Rapids and Cadillac for similar purposes, and the actual running time was just a trifle over 24 hours, which certainly is "going some." The two occupants of the car alternated in driving, and in the entire trip they had no trouble of any kind, but did stop to tow another disabled car of large size, several miles into the next town.

The route was Detroit to Grand Rapids via Lansing, north through Cadillac, Sherman and Traverse City, thence here. The stretch of road from Big Rapids to Cadillac is described as being the worst on the route, and in portions of this section it was "fierce," but the Ford "rambled right along." They returned Tuesday night, going via the West Michigan Pike to Grand Rapids.

ONE GOOD MAN CAN DO WORK OF THREE

Many Counties Reduce Number of County Road Commissioners.

Many counties in the state have come to the conclusion that the work of building roads can be as well accomplished by one good man as three, and have at the June session of the board of supervisors made this ruling effective.

Manistee county has adopted the one man plan, having employed three in the past. Several other counties have also adopted the one man plan. The plan is being taken up as step towards reducing the road building expense account.

We believe that as efficient work could be accomplished in Charlevoix county by one man as is being done today by three. It would mean a saving of many hundreds of dollars to tax payers, and the result would be as many miles of road could be constructed as under the present method.

WAR AND LAW

BEST COUNTY IN THE STATE

SUCH IS CLAIM MADE BY THOSE WHO KNOW

Charlevoix Can Duplicate All Products Grown With Exception of Cotton

There are those who know, or at least who ought to know whether what they say is true or not, who claim that Charlevoix county, in many ways, is the best county in the state of Michigan. Surely the possibilities are very great.

We have within the confines of our county, Pine lake, one of the finest lakes in Michigan, and on account of its irregular shape, with the south arm running to East Jordan, it is of unusual beauty.

In order to intelligently study and understand conditions and possibilities of Charlevoix county, one should have a map of the state of Michigan before him as an aid to the thought and answer to the question. What is the cause for all this loud talk regarding the best county in the state. We have many other good counties and why should Charlevoix county set itself up as being the best, or having prospects greater and more far reaching than any others. It is because the natural agricultural resources and possibilities of the best climate that make it so it can duplicate all of the most important products of any state in the Union, with the exception of cotton. We have three flourishing cities, all having fine harbors with dock facilities sufficient for any enterprise and low freight rates, each city being well supplied with railroads and with good prospects of having more when the time comes for the revival of railroad building. There is a fine roadway all around Pine lake and all we need is good roads to make it perfect and to give it a national reputation. With these good roads, the time is not far distant when many of the very beautiful building sites, along this drive will be occupied by large, substantial houses; at least this is borne out by the development of many other places that have no such advantages as Charlevoix county.

It would be well to remember that two hundred million dollars worth of United States money has been spent yearly by her tourists going abroad and a great deal of this money will be spent in other places. Now, why not prepare for these people, take a few of their millions and profit thereby? They want the goods we have to sell, but they want them put up in nice packages. Here endeth the second lesson.

Charlevoix Man Doing Work.

Roy Babcock, of Charlevoix, of Babcock & Son, florists, was in the city the first of the week overseeing the work at the Pere Marquette park. Mr. Babcock has the contract for laying off the grounds and arranging the planting of flowers in that park and when the work is completed the park will be second to none in the city.—Petoskey Evening News.

SCRAMBLE FOR REWARD MONEY

CHARLEVOIX PEOPLE SCENT
SOME EASY MONEY

Five Corned Bottle is Being Waged for Reward for Capturing Harry Powers.

The meeting of the county supervisors brought a five-corned scrap for the reward offered for the arrest and conviction of Harry Powers after his recent escape from the local jail, says the Traverse Record-Eagle issue of June 27. There are five people; all of Charlevoix, that are under the impression that they, individually, are responsible for the recapture of Powers.

First, there is Mrs. Anna Morford, who was the first to notify local officers that Powers was in that neighborhood. Mrs. Morford telephoned Sheriff Novak in the night a few days after Powers had taken his leave and told him that the runaway was at her home.

Then there are the Rev. Quinton Walker and Cora E. Boissat, who also want their share of the reward. Mrs. Boissat owns a summer hotel at Charlevoix and as she was visiting it one day thought that she detected smoke. She called the Rev. Walker, who was working in a tennis court nearby and the two of them entered the house and Mrs. Boissat saw the men under a bed and the two notified the Charlevoix chief of police. This is their claim.

The man that actually made the arrest is Chief of Police Jeffries of Charlevoix. He makes his claim on the grounds of being the person to make the actual arrest.

The fifth claimant is Chas. Howard, turnkey at the Charlevoix jail, who also has some claim or other. The Rev. Walker and Chief Jeffries were present at the board meeting yesterday afternoon to present their claims in person. The supervisors pondered long as to whether to split the reward five ways or to give it to the person having the best claim, but finally turned the matter over to the finance committee, who will report on it some time during this session.

BEAUTIFUL SHADE TREES BADLY NEED TRIMMING

Courier Calls Attention to Condition That Needs Immediate Attention.

It does not require a person with very clear vision to see that the trees throughout the city are badly in need of trimming where they overhang the sidewalks. When it rains the branches laden with water hang down over the sidewalks making it impossible in some places to stand erect, much less to carry an umbrella. If the people have not enough interest in the comfort of the walking public to trim the trees, the city authorities should pass a tree trimming ordinance which would require that the branches of one tree shall clear the sidewalk at least nine feet. As it is at the present time many of them do not clear six feet which makes it mighty unpleasant for the pedestrian who cannot afford to do his traveling by automobile. Unless something is done to relieve the situation pedestrians will have to take to the middle of the street and abandon the sidewalks entirely during rainy weather.

Antrim street especially needs immediate attention. Trees along the entire street need trimming at once. The street is as bad as a muddy country road. On the south side the foliage is so thick that the rays of the sun seldom reach the street, with the result that it is a continuous mud hole for many hundred feet. The trees should be trimmed at once, not only for the convenience of pedestrians, but as a precautionary measure in saving the city many hundreds of dollars on street improvement.

STREET THROGGED WITH VISITORS

HUNDREDS PRESENT AT CELEBRATION TUESDAY

Industrial and Sight Seeing Parade a Feature of the Day—Day
a Great Success.

The Fourth of July has come and gone—Charlevoix's celebration was all that could be asked and the hundreds of people who spent the day here went home fully satisfied with the entertainment given them.

The activities of the day commenced at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon with the big industrial parade, in which numerous business houses participated. Following this was the "Sight Seeing" parade, in which a large number of automobiles took part. In this parade were numerous floats that deserve much credit. Business houses were represented in both parades, and many of the displays made were beyond the expectations of all. Charlevoix's merchants are to be commended for their enterprise in making both parades a success.

At 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon athletic sports were pulled off on both Clinton and Mason streets. Each event had a number of participants, and the winners had no walkaway. One of the best features of the day was the greased pole. Three contestants kept the huge crowd entertained for fully 40 minutes before the goal at the end of the pole was gained. Mose Zess, of East Jordan, was the winner and he certainly earned it. High dives, back flops and funny contortions were gone through by the contestants in their efforts to keep a footing on the slippery pole.

From the huge loads of children brought in from the country for the prizes offered for the largest load, it is quite evident that the early and late frosts of recent years had not affected this line of products in the least. M. K. Chew, of Hayes township, was awarded the first prize of $10.00, having 57 children in his load. Frank Caurier, of Eveline township, was second with a load of 47, and Elmer Meggison, of Marion, third with 32.

Charlevoix won both forenoon and afternoon ball games. The forenoon game was good, the score being 9 to 1. In the afternoon it was a walkaway.

The Harbor Springs, East Jordan and Ellsworth bands furnished the music for the many events, and in the intervals played at various places on Bridge street. Taken as a whole, the celebration was a most successful one.

RURAL CARRIERS NOW IN SESSION

OVER A HUNDRED VISITORS AND WIVES PRESENT

Opening Meeting Held at Court House—Carriers Pleased With Reception.

The fourteenth annual convention of the Michigan Rural Carriers' association opened in this city today. Members of the association to the number of a hundred or more with their wives were in attendance at the opening session Wednesday forenoon, and more are expected on the afternoon train.

All business sessions are being held in the court house, while the headquarters of the members are at the Hotel Michigan. Wednesday forenoon's session was opened by the song "America," led by Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, followed by invocation by Rev. C. E. Taggart. R. W. Paddock welcomed the visitors to the city in behalf of the mayor. Mr. Paddock tipped the boys off where to find the good things and who to go to if assistance is needed. This was responded to by W. F. Jehnzen, president of the association.

J. H. Brown, of Battle Creek, gave an excellent talk on "Good Roads," in which much good advice was given the carriers in their efforts to better road conditions. This was followed by an address by George H. Van Pelt, who in his characteristic manner, discussed the possibilities and resources of Charlevoix county, its climate, people, and closed with a fifteen minute talk on "Good Roads and How to Build Them." Following is the address:

I feel that an apology is necessary for my appearance before you today as a speaker. When our postmaster, Mr. Finucan, asked me to write to Chicago and get some extra good speaker to address you, as he wished to give you boys a royal good welcome, I immediately complied with his request and wrote Mr. William G. Edens, the chairman of our Good Roads Committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce. I received his reply by return mail, saying that it would be impossible for him to come, so, as the time was short, he would ask me to represent him, I being one of his committeemen.

Now, I am no more fit to represent Bill Edens in any way, particularly, as a speaker, than he would be fit for a powder house, because he is an orator possessed of the proverbial silver tongue, but, if you will indulge me so far, there are some things I should like to say.

While you are invited here by our mutual friend, Fred Butler, father of General Butler of the Civil war, a hearty welcome is extended to all of you, not only from Charlevoix but from the entire county of Charlevoix.

Right here, I want to say, we have three, smart, thriving cities in this (Continued on page nine.)

RUNAWAY TEAM OVER- TURN A LOAD OF HAY

Henry Hare of Near Bay Shore Thrown From the Load.

Henry Hare, of near Bay Shore, had a narrow escape from serious and possibly fatal injury Monday forenoon, when he was thrown from the top of a load of hay in a runaway accident. Mr. Hare was coming to Charlevoix with a load of hay for M. B. Hooker & Son. He was on the Petoskey road near the home of Percy Marsa, when the team became frightened by a passing motorcycle. In their efforts to get away the team broke a part of the harness allowing the tongue of the wagon to drop to the ground, overturning the load. Mr. Hare was thrown to the ground and badly shaken up and bruised. He was in a semi-unconscious condition for some time after the accident happened, but his injuries are not of a serious nature.

Lucious Strawberries.

The Courier is under obligation to J. T. Oldham, 306 Clinton street, for as fine a quart of strawberries as we have seen for some time. They were the Chesapeake variety, of fine flavor and large size. It is useless to say they were greatly enjoyed by the editor and family.

"A Candidate for the Reason That I Believe I Can Save the Tax Payers Money"

DANA H. HINKLEY

Candidate for STATE SENATOR
Twenty-ninth District

HINKLEY'S WORK

No member of the present legislature has done better work for the state of Michigan during this session than Rep. Dana H. Hinkley of Emmet county. His efforts have stood out with constant conspicuousness since the day when he was named chairman of the ways and means committee of the house.

As the head of the most important committee in the lower body of the legislature he has carried more responsibilities than any one member of either house. With these responsibilities went great power and it can be said to his credit that he used this power sparingly and wisely.

Not the least of his service has been his determined effort to curtail the expenses which will attend the operation of the state government during the next two years.

During the last session of the legislature Senator Charles Foster, of Lansing, whose bill making an appropriation of $800,000 for a new office building passed the senate by unanimous vote, was assured by members of the house that the bill would be passed if it could be pried out of the ways and means committee. It was reported favorably by the house committee on public buildings, but Chairman Harry Hinkley of the ways and means committee refused to report it out on the ground that the state could not spare the money.—Grand Rapids Press.

Another state legislator who should be returned—for the good of Michigan—is Representative D. H. Hinkley of Petoskey. Hinkley has served as chairman of the ways and means committee of the lower house. He knows just how badly Michigan needs a "Budget System" for making appropriations. He can be of inestimable service in perfecting a workable "Budget System" that will produce results. His experience and his advice will be of incalculable value to this end. Mr. Hinkley rendered Michigan invaluable service as ways and means committee chairman.—Grand Rapids Herald.

Up in the 29th senatorial district, Panna H. Hinkley of Petoskey is a candidate for the Republican nomination. Hinkley has the exceptional record of having served three terms in the House of Representatives, being nominated each of his three terms without opposition in the primaries. Starting as a lumber miller in a saw mill, and later operating one, his most earnest supporters have been former employees.

"Harry," as he is known to his closer friends, started profit sharing with his employees in 1907. He served in the last two sessions as chairman of the ways and means committee which by itself marks the influence he wielded in legislative and many bills aimed at taking money from the state treasury sailed along smoothly until they bumped into Chairman Hinkley and the ways and means committee where they were peacefully put to sleep. His experience on this committee has given him unusual opportunity to study the problems that have brought out the agitation for a budget system in this state, and if experience counts for anything Mr. Hinkley, just at this time, more than any man in Michigan, can render invaluable service in working out legislation looking to a change in the policy of making the budget. Mr. Hinkley thinks ten per cent, or a cool million dollar saving is conservative and he would like to participate in making the bill that will bring about this needed reform. If the 29th district nominates and elect Mr. Hinkley, they are assured of a strong senator, who will be a credit to their district and will bring them additional credit and prestige in the state at large.—Charlevoix Republican. FORMER OAKLAND COUNTY BOY IS GUBERNATORIAL CANDIDATE

FRANK B. LELAND, WHO HAS SHIED HIS HAT INTO THE RING, WAS BORN ON A FARM IN ROSE TOWNSHIP, THIS COUNTY, WORKED HIS WAY THROUGH COLLEGE TO A COMMANDING POSITION IN THE BUSINESS WORLD. MAKES A STRONG BID FOR SUPPORT.

(Oxford Leader of May 5, 1916.)

Frank B. Leland, former Oakland county man, who has announced his candidacy for the republican nomination for governor.

Oakland County Republicans at the coming August primaries will likely look with much favor upon the gubernatorial candidacy of Frank B. Leland, of Detroit. The fact that he is a native of this county will command the attention of Oakland county Republicans who are invariably loyal to the "home folks."

Leland was born on a farm in Rose township, this county; in fact for a number of years has owned and operated the farm on which his boyhood was spent, so it is but natural that Oakland county should have more than a passing interest in his candidacy. We have been proudly interested in the remarkable success of this former Oakland county boy in business circles and it is a foregone conclusion that "folks back home" are going to do all they can to aid in placing him in the executive office at Lansing; for, as the Detroit News says, "There is an appeal in the record of Mr. Leland, who as a farmer boy, worked his way through college, came to the city and achieved success."

But no one here need pin his faith on these grounds alone for Frank B. Leland is eminently well qualified for the position of governor of this great state. Experienced in finance and business, possessing educational training represented by two degrees from the state university, still retaining a warm place in his heart for the farming life and interests from which he sprung, he combines qualities seldom presented in gubernatorial candidates.

As president of the United Savings Bank of Detroit, he commands the confidence and respect of the solid business interests of the state, and as president of the Detroit Tuberculosis Sanatorium he has engaged in a war against the white plague that has made the entire state his debtor. Eight years a regent of the U. of M. handling the expenditures of millions of dollars, shows the capacity of the man as well as indicating that he has had exceptional opportunities for studying the business methods of the state and its institutions. He comes not before the public forum as an untried neophyte but as a successful business man of practical experience.

From the standpoint of political expediency, the party which wishes to again control the reins of state government must consider Leland. He comes in the unique character of a man on whom all Wayne county republicans can combine and with the endorsement of all the press of the metropolis—a condition we cannot recall as ever occurring in the past. For, in harmonizing Wayne, he has accomplished what has been long thought an impossibility.

Nor does his support seem to be dependent upon the heavy vote of the metropolis, although that is bound to be a great factor in his favor at the primaries. He has a large following in the state as evidenced when he was nominated for regent of the U. of M. despite the opposition of factional organizations in Wayne.

Leland's strong personality, varied business experience, high educational qualifications and commendable record in public and private life will make him a mighty potent factor in the coming campaign.

If nominated his election is assured. If elected Michigan will have a governor second to no state in the Union. Adv. 27tf closed and packed air tight with garments, suffocating the flames which died out in about fifteen minutes.

The craft was just opposite Glenwood when the accident occurred. The attention of some unknown man on shore was attracted, and he, procuring a row boat, rowed out arriving there just as the flames died out. The launch of Sam Rose, of Charlevoix, passed shortly afterwards and towed the crippled boat into the slip at the city dock where several had gathered, having heard of the accident.

An emergency plug, placed in the 40 gallon gas tank, with a resisting power of 75 pounds, was blown high into the air when the tank became heated. This outlet undoubtedly saved the lives of those on board.

The boat was but slightly damaged, none of the woodwork having burned.—Boyne Citizen.

Horse Ran Away With Child.

Mrs. Andrew Szocinski, of near Gaylord, went to town Tuesday of last week and hitching her horse in front of a store, went in to do some trading, leaving her little girl, a child of about two years of age, in the buggy. A passing automobile frightened the animal and breaking his tie strap he ran away. Realizing the peril of the little girl, several people made a futile effort to stop the animal, but it reached the Gaylord Mfg. Co. plant without hindrance. Here, Ben Hecox ran out to catch the horse, who eluded him, turned squarely around and started back up Main street, the buggy still miraculously on all four wheels and the little girl crying and hugging the side of the vehicle. Harry Nichols also made an unsuccessful attempt to stop the horse, but got mixed up with the buggy wheels and was thrown to the ground. Joe Hale here entered the scene and with rapid sprint got hold of the top of the buggy and pulled himself in. Then he discovered that the reins were broken and that there was no chance to stop the horse. But, with all the calmness and presence of mind of a hero, he took the little girl in his arms, prepared to jump if necessary, but by this time others had succeeded in bringing the horse to a stop and the danger was passed.

Time to Think About that New Heating Plant

Right now is the time to settle all details regarding that new heating plant. Its a bad time just at the beginning of the cool weather in the fall. Do it now, while there is plenty of time for installation and obtaining the proper material. I handle the

Bell Hot Air Furnaces

These furnaces are designed and constructed expressly to heat by piping to separate rooms. They have capacity sufficient to heat comfortably from 7 to 9 medium sized rooms. Last season I sold and installed 87 of these furnaces in Charlevoix and vicinity. This year I expect to sell over 100. They give satisfaction. That's the reason I can sell them. We guarantee them to give perfect satisfaction, and so far they have not failed to do so. In fact we have that confidence in the Bell Furnaces that we install them without asking for a dollar in payment until you are satisfied they are all that we represent them to be. I also handle the Ideal Hot Air and Steam Heating Plants. Some prefer these—you can have your choice. Just drop me a card if you are interested in Furnaces.

Cow Mothers Fawn.

A few days ago, a heifer of Dave Johnson, who lives near Harbor Springs, returned to the farm yard with a fawn following her and taking all the rights and privileges of a calf. It had no fear whatever and the cow evidently was perfectly content with her strange child which she adopted and accepted with full faith and credit and did her best to bring up in the straight and narrow way. The little animal became so tame that the children played with it, and it seemed perfectly content to be a domestic animal. The game warden will take the fawn and put it in the game preserve.

Deplorable Case Being Investigated.
Sheriff Novak and Prosecutor Lewis were in the city investigating a most deplorable case in which a young girl and half a dozen adult men are implicated. The moral degeneracy of the girl led to an investigation by school authorities which resulted in the county authorities taking the matter up. Startling statements have been made by the girl and they are being verified, following which drastic action will be taken as befits the case.—Boyne Citizen.

Gasoline had leaked from the carburetor filling the bottom of the boat in the engine room. This became ignited when the engine backfired. The engine room was immediately

WHO FOR GOVERNOR?

The national Republican ticket, having been completed in a highly satisfactory manner, the next step toward a successful campaign result in Michigan is the nomination of a governor. Five men are now prominently before the state for this place. They are Albert E. Sleeper of Lexington, Sanilac county; G. J. Diekema of Holland; Luren D. Dickinson of Charlotte; Frank B. Leland of Detroit; and Washington Gardner of Albion. The Courier is not at the present time "plugging" for any one of these men. We recognize the fact that each one of them has his "talking points" and might make an acceptable governor. We do not regard any one of them as wholly unfit. If we did, we should do all in our power to defeat such a one. By far the most vital question in connection with the candidacy of every one of them is "Where does he stand on the state issues?" Of course if he is to run on a Republican ticket we expect him to be a Republican and we believe that all of these mentioned are Republicans and loyally supporting Hughes and Fairbanks and the national platform.

Second in their personality. Mr. Sleeper is a prosperous banker and merchant. He has held many local offices, been a member of the state senate, national committeeman and state treasurer. He is highly esteemed by all who know him. He informs The Courier that on what we regard as the two vital state issues, state economy and temperance legislation, he is fully committed to the economy issue. That he has always stood for temperance, and will stand for the strict enforcement of whatever legislation the people endorse.

G. J. Diekema of Holland, is a man who is personally greatly liked by all who know him. While still a young man he was elected to the state house of representatives, of which he later became speaker. He served several terms in congress where he distinguished himself as one of the readiest and most eloquent debaters. He is a lawyer of marked ability and one of the very best campaigners in Michigan. Everyone knows that he is a Republican. Should he be nominated and elected governor of Michigan he would be distinguished among the governors of all the states. Mr. Diekema is a strong advocate of the budget system and would, so The Courier believes, stand uncompromisingly for any laws necessary to enforce the will of a majority of the people.

Luren D. Dickinson of Charlotte, is a farmer and is prominent as a temperance worker. He has been several terms a member of the state senate and as such he was personally identified with the enactment of the primary law. He was one term lieutenant governor and while fair in his committee appointments was always the consistent friend of those opposed to the liquor traffic. As a candidate for governor, Mr. Dickinson denies any purpose on his part to "mix his candidacy with the vote on the prohibition amendment."

Washington Gardner of Albion, is an old soldier, and the only one who is or will be a candidate for governor. He is well known everywhere as an orator of ability, was for two terms secretary of state, later was elected for several terms to congress. He is a man of force, character and education. By business an educator and preacher. A staunch friend of temperance, committed to economy in state affairs, and one who would honor the state and himself if chosen.

Frank B. Leland of Detroit, will have strong support from the metropolis and other parts of the state for this nomination. He is a prominent banker in his home city, has the endorsement of the Republican convention of Wayne county, and many friends in the Upper Peninsula and other parts of the state. He declares himself for closer economy in state affairs and while he has not so far as The Courier knows, declared himself publicly on the temperance issue, he has been for many years identified with the cause of temperance in Detroit.

For four years, Michigan, a strong Republican state, has had a Democratic governor. This failure to elect a Republican was due to dissatisfaction with the Republican nominee. Under the primary system it is much more difficult to secure unity of action than under the convention system. Governor Ferris, who has shown himself to have a great personal following, has repeatedly informed his party that he will not be a candidate for a third term. While he is probably the strongest candidate available for the Democrats, in spite of the third term cry and his recent unpatriotic utterances, yet if he is not a candidate, some other Democrat will be, and probably a man on whom every Democrat can unite. It behooves Republicans for once to lay aside little petty jealousies and vote in August for the very best and strongest candidate, with the steadfast resolution that whether HE is nominated or one of the others, he will have your hearty support in November. For once let us emulate the examples of our consistent and constant Democrat brothers, that whatever they say for Republican consumption about always voting for the "best man" when election day comes they always discover that the BEST men are on the Democratic ticket of course.

ROOSEVELT IS FOR HUGHES

Theodore Roosevelt's letter to the progressive national committee giving his reasons for not accepting the nomination of the third party for the presidency is what was expected of his patriotism. A man swollen with egotism and filled with personal ambitions would not and could not have given himself so unreservedly to the good of his country.

Roosevelt is not thinking of himself, but of the United States, and, having an opportunity to prove it, he has done so. A small man, hurt by the acts of his enemies, enamored of himself and strutting before the mirror, would have been incapable of adopting Roosevelt's course.

Some pin headed Americans have judged Roosevelt by small standards, making their verdict as narrow as their minds, but men who thought they knew this violent, ardent patriot, thought also they knew how he would act.

Col. Roosevelt is for Hughes. He is for a program that will deliver the country from the dangers of Democratic administration. We are aware that in ascribing to Democracy all the errors we do we take the hazard of being regarded as supporting a blind and furious partisanship of the old fashioned kind, long out of use and out of date. It can be proved otherwise.

In a time demanding nationalism the Democratic party is sectional. For the present it cannot be otherwise. It will cure itself, but the nation cannot safely have it in power while it is correcting errors as old as the nation.

The Democratic party is the party of a loose aggregation of states. It is controlled by men who detest the idea of nationalism and who constantly work against the nation. It is unfitted for the work of the nation and has devoted three years to proving it.

Col. Roosevelt sees plainly that the nation cannot have this kind of government and he will not be responsible in any degree for the continuance of it. Progressives who do not follow him in his work for Hughes have a small sense of the needs of the country or of their obligation to it.

In the genuine and conspicuous service Col. Roosevelt has done the United States nothing stands out more clearly than what he has to say of the Democratic attempt to put a German helmet on Mr. Hughes. That attempt reveals a sort of political desperation.—Chicago Tribune.

SUN BROTHERS SHOW HERE ON JULY 20

Will Give Performances Both Afternoon and Evening.

You very often hear the remark that all "tented shows are alike," and "when you see one, you see 'em all." This is an erroneous idea, when applied to the present time, latter-day tented institution. Conditions of times have changed all all around. Where formerly, the old time show, presented a company of say ten or fifteen performers, the show of today gives a program of displays, that are exploited by a hundred or more performers. Every thing else pertaining to the show of today, has radically improved. The tents are larger and better ventilated. They are now so constructed that they are absolutely rainproof, so in case of wet or stormy weather, the entire show can be given with comfort and ease to performer and patron alike, thusby causing no curtailment whatever. The mode of transportation has also improved. The railway rolling stock being such that all shows can make a hundred mile run, during the night and reach their objective point as early as 10 a. m., and have everything on the show grounds in ample time to start the ceremonies of the day, as early as ten o'clock a. m.

The present day shows are all conducted on a strictly business basis, just the same, as some medieval business. The elimination of all obnoxious features. Strict adherence of the utmost courtesy to patrons by the attaches and employees. Respectability and refinement in the presentation of all attractions. All of these methods are in vogue with the Sun Brothers World's Progressive Shows, that are underlined to exhibit at Charlevoix on July 20. This show is practically all new for the present tour. All new acts and performers. A coterie of many added novelties in the "trained animal line." A bunch of the finest horses ever seen with a tented show. Two complete performances will be given here, matinee and night.

Hints on Road Building.

When you build a road, don't forget to "build the maintenance into the road." In doing this your first cost will be a little greater, but if you don't do it, your after cost will grow larger and larger every year until at last you have to rebuild the road entirely and then you will discover that your hindsight was better than your foresight by "another" sight.

CHAPTER VII.

O'Neil Meets Newspaper Woman.

O'NEIL found his "boys" awaiting him when he returned to his room. There was Melien, lean, gaunt and serious minded, with the dust of Chilimuhua still upon his shoes; there were McKay, the superintendent, who had arrived from California that morning; Sheldon, the commissary man; Elkins, Doc Gray and Happy Tom Slater. Parker, the chief engineer, alone was absent.

"I sent Appleton in from Cortez," he told them, "to come down the river and make the preliminary survey into Omar. He cables me that he has filed his locations and everything is O. K. On my way out I stopped here long enough to buy the Omar canner, docks, buildings and town site. It's all mine, and it will save us ninety days' work in getting started."

"I understand those glaciers come down to the edge of the river," the superintendent ventured.

"They do," O'Neil acknowledged, "and they're the liveliest ones I ever saw. You can never get that. One of them is fully 400 feet high at the face and four miles across. They're constantly breaking too."

"Lumps bigger than this hotel," supplemented Slater. "It's quite a sight—equal to anything in the state of Maine."

Melien, the bridge builder, spoke for the first time, and the others listened.

"As I understand it we will cross the river between the glacier and immediately below the upper one."

"Exactly!"

He shook his head. "We can't build piers to withstand those heavy bergs which you tell me are always breaking off."

"I'll explain how we can," said O'Neil. "You've hit the bullseye—the reelver as if had burnt his fingers. 'Say! It's a woman, Murray! She's on the wire. She thinks you sweetly and says she'll wait.'"

"A woman! A newspaper woman?"

O'Neil rose and seized the instrument roughly. His voice was freezing as he said: "Hello! I refuse to be interviewed. Yes! There's no use—His tone suddenly altered. "Miss Appleton! I beg your pardon. I'll be right down."

Turning to his subordinates, he announced with a wry smile: "This seems to terminate our interview. She's Dan Appleton's sister, and therefore—He shrugged resignedly. "Now run along. I'll see you in the morning."

His "boys" made their way down to the street, talking guardedly as they went.

O'Neil entered the modest parlor with a feeling of extreme annoyance, expecting to meet an inquisitive, bold young woman bent upon exploiting his plans and his personality in the usual journalistic fashion. He was surprised and offended that Dan Appleton, in whom he had reposed the utmost faith, should have betrayed his secret. Publicity was a thing he detested at all times, and at present particularly dreaded its effect. But he was agreeably surprised in the girl who came toward him briskly with hand outstretched.

Miss Appleton was her brother's double. She had his frank blue eyes, his straw gold hair, his humorous smile and wide awake look. She was not by any means beautiful—her features were too irregular, her nose too tip tilted, her mouth too generous for that—but she seemed crisp, clean cut and wholesome. What first struck O'Neil was her effect of boyishness. From the crown of her plain straw "sack" to the soles of her sensible walking boots there was no suggestion of feminine frilliness. She wore a plain shirt waist and a tailored skirt, and her hair was arranged simply. The wave in its pale gold was the only concession to mere prettiness. Yet she gave no impression of deliberate masculinized. She struck one as merely not interested in clothes, instinctively expressing in her dress her own boyish directness and her businesslike absorption in her work.

"You're furious, of course. Anybody would be," she began, then laughed so frankly that his eyes softened and the wrinkles at their corners deepened.

"I fear I was rude before I learned you were Dan's sister," he apologized. "But you see I'm a bit afraid of newspaper people."

"I knew you'd struggle, although Dan described you as a perfectly angelic person."

"Indeed!"

"But I'm a real reporter, so I won't detain you long. I don't care where you were born or where you went to school or what patent breakfast food you eat. Tell me, are you going to build another railroad?"

"I hope so. I'm always building roads when my bids are low enough to secure the contracts. That's my business."

"Are you going to build one in Alaska?"

"Possibly. There seems to be an opportunity there, but Dan has probably told you as much about that as I am at liberty to tell. He's been over the ground."

She pursed her lips at him. "You know very well, or you ought to know, that Dan wouldn't tell me a thing while he's working for you. He hasn't said a word, but—Is that why you came in frowning like a thundercloud? Did you think he set me on your trail?"

"I think I do know that he wouldn't do anything really indiscreet," Murray regarded her with growing favor. There was something about this boyish girl which awakened the same spontaneous liking he had felt upon his first meeting with her brother. He surprised her by confessing boldly:

"I am building a railroad to the interior of Alaska. I've been east and raised the money. My men are here. We'll begin operations at once."

"That's what Mr. Gordon told me about his scheme, but he hasn't done much so far."

"My line will put his out of business; also that of the trust and the various wildcat promoters."

"Where does your road start from?"

"The town of Omar, on King Phillip sound, near Hope and Cortez. It will run up the Salmon river and past the glaciers which these other men refused to tackle."

"If I weep it is for joy," said the girl. "I don't like Curtis Gordon. I call him Simon Legree."

"Why?"

"Well, he impresses me as a real old time villain with the rilling boots and the whip and all that. 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' is my favorite play; it's so funny. This is a big story you've given me, Mr. O'Neil."

"Nothing doing!" Sheldon spoke into the transmitter. He turned again to his employer. "Operator says the party doesn't mind waiting."

O'Neil frowned impatiently.

"Throw him out!" Sheldon "rected brusquely, then suddenly dropped the

"It has the biggest news value of anything Alaska-wide has broken for some time. I think you are a very nice person to interview, after all."

"Wait! I don't want you to use a word of what I've told you."

Miss Appleton's clearly penciled brows rose inquiringly. "Then why didn't you keep still?"

"You asked me. I told you because you are Dan Appleton's sister. Nevertheless I don't want it made public."

"Let's sit down," said the girl, with a laugh. "I'll tell you the truth. I didn't come here to interview you for my papers. I'm afraid I've tried your patience awfully. A faint flush tinged her cheek complexion. "I just came, really, to get some news of Dan."

"He's perfectly well and happy, and you'll see him in a few days."

Miss Appleton nodded. "So he wrote, but I couldn't wait. Now, won't you tell me all about him—not anything about his looks and his health, but the little unimportant things that will mean something? You see, I'm his mother and his sister and his sweetheart."

O'Neil did as he was directed and before long found himself reciting the details of that trying trip up the Salmon river. He told her how he had sent a young engineer out to run the preliminary survey for the new railroad, and added: "He is in a fair way to realize his ambition of having you with him all the time. I'm sure that will please you."

"And it is my ambition to make enough money to have him with me," she announced. "With an air of some importance she continued: 'I'll tell you a secret. I'm writing for the magazines—'"

"Now wait a minute," she said, back waiting his enthusiasm. When she saw that it was not forthcoming she exclaimed: "My, how you do rave over the idea!"

"I congratulate you, of course, but—"

"Now, don't tell me that you tried it once. Of course you did. I know it's a harmless disease, like the measles, and that everybody has it when they're young. Above all, don't volunteer the information that your own life is full of romance and would make a splendid novel. They all say that."

Murray O'Neil felt the glow of personal interest that results from the discovery in another of a congenial sense of humor.

"I didn't suppose you had to write," he said. "Dan told me you had invested your fortune and were on 'Easy Street.'"

"That was partly license. I fictionized slightly in my report to him because I knew he was doing so well."

"Then your investment didn't turn out fortunately?"

Miss Appleton hesitated. "You seem to be a kindly, trusting person. I'm tempted to destroy your faith in human nature."

"Please don't."

"Yes, I shall. My experience may help you to avoid the pitfalls of high finance. Well, then, it was a very sad little fortune, to begin with, like a boy in grammar school—just big enough to be of no assistance. But even a boy's size fortune looked big to me. I wanted to invest it in something sure—no national bank stock, subject to the danger of an absconding cashier, mind you; no government bonds with the possibility of war to depreciate them, but something stable and agricultural, with the inexhaustible resources of nature back of it. This isn't my own language. I cribbed it from the apple man."

"Apple man?"

"Yes. He had brown eyes and a silky mustache and a big irrigation plan over part of the mountains. You gave him your money and he gave you a perfectly good receipt. Then he planted little apple trees. He nursed them tenderly for five years, after which he turned them over to you with his blessing and you lived happily for evermore. At least that was the idea. You could not fail to grow rich, for the water always bubbled through his little ditch, and it never froze nor rained to spoil things. I used to love apples. And then there was my name, which seemed a good omen. But lately I've considered changing 'Appleton' to 'Berry' or 'Plummer' or some other kind of fruit."

"I infer that the scheme failed."

O'Neil's eyes were half closed with amusement.

"Yes. It was a good scheme, too, except for the fact that the irrigation ditch ran uphill and that there wasn't any water where it started from and that apples never had been made to grow in that locality because of some thing in the soil and that brown eyed Betty's title to the land wouldn't hold water any more than the ditch. Other wise I'm sure I'd have made a success and I'd have spent my declining years in a rocking chair under the fall ing apple blossoms, eating pippins and Jonathan and Northern Spies. I can't bear to touch them now. Life at my boarding house is one long battle against apple pies, apple puddings, apple tipples. Ugh! I hate the very word."

"I can understand your aversion," laughed O'Neil. "I wonder if you would let me order dinner for both of us, provided I taboos fruit. Perhaps I'll think of something more to tell you about Dan. I'm sure he wouldn't object."

"Oh, my card is all the chaperon I need! It takes me everywhere and renders me superior to the smaller conventionalities." She handed him one, and he read: "Eliza V. Appleton—The Review."

"May I ask what the 'V' stands for?" He held up the card between his thumb and finger.

Miss Appleton blushed for all the world like a boy, then answered stiltily: "It stands for Violet. But that isn't my fault, and I'm doing my best to live it down."

On her return to the Review office the managing editor complimented Miss Appleton on her work and surprised her by assigning her to Alaska, to expose the men who were "trying to snatch control of the empire."

CHAPTER VIII.

The Town of Omar.

THE town of Omar lay drenched in mist as the steamer bearing the representative of the Review drew in at the dock. The whole region was sodden and rain-soaked, verdant with a lush growth. No summer sun shone here to bake sprouting leaves or sear tender grasses. Beneath the sheltering firs a blanket of moss exhaled over hill and vale, knee deep and treacherous to the foot.

Omar itself was a mushroom city, sprung up by magic, as if the dampness of its roots had caused it to rise overnight. A sawmill shrieked complainingly; a noisy switch engine shunted rows of flat cars back and forth, tooting lustily; the rattle of steam winches and the cries of stevedores from a discharging freighter echoed against the hillsides.

Dan Appleton, his clothing dewy from the fog, his cheeks bronzed by exposure, was over the rail before the ship had made fast and had Eliza in his arms, crushing her with the hug of a bear.

"Come up to the house, sis, quick," he cried when the first frenzy of greeting was over—"your house and mine!" His eyes were dancing; his face was alight with eagerness.

"But, Danny," she laughed, acquiescing in his arm tenderly, "you live with Mr. O'Neil and all those other men in a horrible, cramping bunkhouse."

"Do I? I'll have you know that our bunkhouses don't crawl. And, besides— But wait! It's a surprise!"

"A surprise?" she queried eagerly. "For me?"

He nodded.

"Tell me what it is, quick! You know I never could wait for a surprise."

"Well, it's a brand new nitra stylish residence for just you and me. When the chief heard you were coming he had a cottage built."

"Danny! It was only five days ago that I cabled you!"

"That's really ten days for us, for, you see, we never sleep. It is finished and waiting, and your room is in white and the paint will be dry tomorrow. He's a wonder!"

Remembering the nature of her mission, Eliza demurred. "I'm afraid I can't live there, Dan. You know—" she hesitated—"I may have to write some rather dreadful things about him."

"What?" Dan's face fell. "You are going to attack the chief? I had no idea of that!" He looked genuinely distressed and a little stern.

She laid a pleading hand upon his arm. "Forgive me, Dan," she said. "I know how you would feel, and to tell the truth, I don't like that part of it. But it was my big chance—the sort of thing I have been waiting years for. I couldn't bear to miss it."

There was a suspicion of tears in her eyes. "I didn't think it all out. I just came. Things got awfully mixed, don't they? Of course I wouldn't attack him unfairly, but I do believe in conservation—and what could I do but come here to you?"

Dan smiled to reassure her. "Perhaps you won't feel like exorcising him when you learn more about things. I know you wouldn't be unfair. You'd dunk the job first. Wait till you talk to him. But you can't refuse his kindness for a time at least. There's nowhere else for you to stay, and Murray would pick you up and put you into the cottage, muckrake and all, if (Continued on page six.)"

I didn't. He had to go out on the work this morning or he'd have been here to welcome you. He sent apologies and said a lot of nice things which I've forgotten."

"Well"—Eliza still looked troubled—"all right. But wait!" she cried, with a swift change of mood. "I've made a little friend, the dearest, the most useless creature! We shared the same stateroom, and we're sisters. She actually says I'm pretty, so of course I'm her slave for life." She hurried away in the midst of Dan's loyal protestations that she was pretty—more beautiful than the stars, more pleasing to the eye than the orchids of Brazil. A moment later she reappeared to present Natalie Gerard.

Dan greeted the new arrival with a cordiality in which there was a trace of shyness unusual with him. "We've made quite a change since you were up here, Miss Gerard," he remarked. "The ships stop first at Omar now, you see. I trust it won't inconvenience you."

"Not in the least," said Natalie. "I shall arrive at Hope quite soon enough."

Dan led the two girls ashore and up through the town to a moss green bungalow, its newness attested by the yellow awnings and fresh shavings which lay about. Amid their exclamations of delight he showed them the neatly furnished interior and, among other wonders, a bedroom daintily done in white, with white curtains at the mullioned windows and a suit of wicker furniture.

"Where he dug all that up I don't know," Dan said, pointing to the bed and dresser and chairs. "He must have had it hidden out somewhere." Eliza surveyed this chamber with wondering eyes. "It makes me feel quite ashamed," she said, "though, of course, he did it for Dan. When he discovers my abominable mission he'll probably set me out in the rain and break all my lead pencils. But isn't he magnificent?"

"He quite overwhelms one," Natalie agreed. "Buck in New York he's been sending me American Beauties every week for more than a year. It's his princely way." She colored slightly despite the easy frankness of her manner.

"You are still working miracles," Natalie told O'Neil an hour later, while he was showing his visitors the few sights of Omar, "miracles of kindness, as usual."

Dan and his sister were following at a distance, arm in arm and chattering like magpies.

"No, no! That cottage is nothing. Miss Appleton had to have some place to stop."

"This all seems like magic," Natalie purred and looked over the busy little town. "And to think you have done it in a year."

"It was not I who did it; the credit belongs to those 'boys' of whom I told you. They are all here by the way—Parker, McKay, Melton, Shelton, Doc Gray—he has the hospital, you know."

"And Mr. Slater?"

"Oh, we couldn't exist without Happy Tom! No, the only miracle about all this is the loyalty that has made it possible. It is that which has broken all records in railroad building; that's what has pushed our tracks forward."

"What?" Dan's face fell. "You are going to attack the chief."

until we're nearly up to one of nature's real miracles. You shall see those glaciers one of these days. Sometimes I wonder if even the devotion of those men will carry us through the final test. But—you shall meet them all to-night—my whole family."

"I can't. The ship leaves this afternoon."

"I've arranged to send you to Hope in my motorboat just as Mr. Gordon sent me on my way a year ago. You will stay with the Appletons tonight and help at the house warming, then Dan will take you on in the morning. Women are such rare guests at Omar that we refuse to part with them. You agree?"

"How can I refuse? Your word seems to be law here. I'll send word to mother by the ship that I am detained by royal decree."

She spoke with a gaiety that seemed a little forced, and at mention of her departure a subtle change had come over her face. O'Neil realized that she had matured markedly since his last meeting with her; there was no longer quite the same effect of naive girlishness.

"This was a very unhappy year for your loyal subject, Mr. O'Neil."

"I'm sorry," he declared with such genuine kindness that she was moved to confide in him.

"Mother and I are ruined."

"Will you tell me about it?"

"It's merely—those wretched coal claims. I have a friend in the land of ice at Washington and, remembering what you said, I asked him to look them up. I knew no other way to go about it. He tells me that something was done, or was not done, by us, and that we have lost all we put in."

"I urged Gordon to obey that ruling last spring," Natalie said, but his face was dark with indignation, and the knowledge that he really cared set her heart to pounding gratefully. She was half tempted to tell about that other, that greater trouble which had stolen in upon her peace of mind and robbed her of her girlhood, but she shrank from having her wounds—above all, a wound so vital and so personal as this—"Does your mother know?" he queried.

"No, I preferred to tell her in Mr. Gordon's presence," Murray noticed that she no longer called the man uncle. "But now that the time has come I'm frightened."

"Never allow yourself to be afraid. Fear is something false; it doesn't exist."

"It seems to me he was—unfaithful to his trust. Am I right?"

"That is something you must judge for yourself," he told her gravely. "You see, I don't know anything about the reasons which prompted him to sacrifice your rights. He may have had very good reasons. I dare say he had. In building this railroad I have felt but one regret—that is the indirect effect it may have upon you and your mother. Your affairs are linked closely with Gordon's, and the success of my enterprise will mean the failure of his."

"You mustn't feel that way. I'm sure it won't affect us at all, for we have nothing more to lose. Sometimes I think his judgment is faulty, erratic, wonderful man though he is. Mother trusts him blindly, of course, and so do I, yet I hardly know what to do. It is impossible that he did worse than make a mistake."

Her dark eyes were bent upon Murray, and they were eloquent with the question which she could not bring herself to ask. He lounged to tell her frankly that Curtis Gordon was a charlatan, or even worse, and that his fairest schemes were doomed to failure by the very nature of his methods, but instead he said:

"I'm deeply distressed. I hope things are not as bad as you think and that Mr. Gordon will be able to straighten them out for you. If ever I can be of service you must be sure to call upon me."

Her thanks were conventional, but in her heart was a deep, warm gratitude, for she knew that he meant what he said and would not fail her.

Dan Appleton, crying Natalie and his chief from a distance, exclaimed admiringly:

"She's a perfect peach, sis! She registered a home run with me the first time at bat!"

"She is nice."

"You know a fellow gets mighty lonely in a place like this. She'd make a dandy sister-in-law for you, wouldn't she?"

"Forget it!" said Eliza sharply.

"That's rank insubordination. Omar Khanym snatched her from the briny and tried to die for her. He has bought her two acres of the most expensive roses and he remembers the date of her birthday. Just you keep your hands off."

"How does she feel about him?"

"Oh, she idolizes him, of course. I don't know just how deep the feeling goes, but I got the impression that it was pretty serious. Two women can't borrow handbags and put powder puffs for a week and remain 'sisters'."

"Then, as for Dan's notion, C.E., good night!" exclaimed her brother ruefully. "If I were a woman I'd marry him myself, provided I could get ahead of the rush; but, being a male of the species, I suppose I shall creep out into the jungle and sulk."

"Right! Don't enter this race, for I'm afraid you'd be a bad loser. Personally, I can't see anything in him to rave about. What scares me pink is the knowledge that I must tell him the wretched business that brings me here. If he strikes me, Danny, remember I'm still your sister."

When the big gun gave the signal for luncheon Appleton conducted Natalie and Eliza to the company mess room, where the field and office forces dined together, and presented them to his fellow lieutenants. At supper time those who had been out on the line during the day were likewise introduced, and after a merry meal the whole party escorted the two girls back to the green bungalow.

"Why, here's a platoon!" Eliza exclaimed upon entering the parlor.

"I borrowed it for the evening from the Elite saloon," O'Neil volunteered.

"It's a dissipated old instrument, and some of its teeth have been knocked out—in drunken brawls. I'm afraid—but the owner vouches for its behavior on this occasion."

At her first opportunity Eliza undertook to make that confession the thought of which had troubled her all the afternoon. Drawing O'Neil aside, she began with some trepidation.

"Have you any idea why I'm here?"

"I supposed either you or Dan had achieved your pet ambition."

"Far from it. I have a felt purpose, and when you learn what it is I expect you to move the piano out—that's what always happens in the play when the heroine is dispossessed. Well, then, I've been sent by the Review to have all the disgraceful secrets of your life!"

"I'm delighted to learn you'll be here so long. You can't possibly finish that task before next spring. His manner, though quizzical, was genuinely hearty."

"Don't laugh!" said the girl. "There's nothing funny about it. I came north as a spy."

"Then you're a Northern Spy?"

"Applied!" she cried. "You remembered, didn't you? I never supposed men like you could be dupes. Well, here goes for the worst." She outlined her conversation with the editor of her paper.

"So you think I'm trying to steal Alaska," he said when she had concluded.

"That seems to be the general idea."

"It's a pretty big job."

"Whoever controls transportation will have the country by the throat."

"Yet somebody must build railroads, since the government won't. Did it ever occur to you that there is a great risk involved in a thing of this sort and that capital must see a profit before it enters a new field? I wonder if you know how badly this country needs an outlet and how much greater the benefit in dollars and cents will be to the men in the interior than to those who finance the road. But I perceive that you are a conservationist."

"Rabid!" Eliza bridled a little at the hint of unadvised superiority in his voice. "I'm a suffragist too! I dare say that adds to your disgust."

"Nonsense," he protested. "I have no quarrel with conservation nor with 'votes for women.' Neither have I anything to conceal. I'm only afraid that, like most writers, you will be content with half information. Incomplete facts are responsible for most misunderstandings. If you are in earnest and will promise to make the time necessary to get at all the facts I'll make an agreement with you."

"I promise! Time and a typewriter are my only assets. I don't intend to be hurried."

Dan approached, drawn by the uncomfortable knowledge of his sister's predicament, and broke in:

"Oh, sis, less time to burn! She's going to write a book on the salmon canneries with her here. It's bound to be one of the six best sellers."

O'Neil waved him away with the threat of sending him out among the mosquitoes.

"I'll agree to show you everything we're doing."

"Even to the coal fields?"

"Even to them. You shall know everything; then you can write what you please."

"And when I've exposed you to the world as a commercial pickpocket, as a looter of the public domain—after congress has appropriated your fabulous coal claims—will you nail up the door of this little cottage and fire Dan?"

"No."

"Will you still be nice to me?"

"My dear child, you are my guest. Come and go when and where you will. Omar is yours so long as you stay, and when you depart in triumph, leaving me a broken, discredited wretch, I shall stand on the dock and wave you a bon voyage. Now it's bedtime for my 'boys,' since we rise at 6 o'clock."

"Heavens! Pity! Why, the sun isn't up at that time!"

"The sun shines very little here; that's why we want you to stay at Omar. I wish we might also keep Miss Natalie."

When the callers had gone Eliza told Natalie and Dan:

"He took it so deeply that I feel more ashamed than ever. One would think he didn't care at all. Do you suppose he does?"

"There's no denying that you appeared at an unfortunate time," said her brother.

"Why?"

"I won't not against my convictions," Eliza declared firmly. "even if it means calamity to everybody."

Natalie spoke for the first time, her voice tuned to a pitch of feeling that contrasted oddly with their conversational tones.

"If you hurt my Irish prince," she said, "I shall hate you as long as I live."

Federal Inquiry or Railroad Strike?

Faced by demands from the conductors, engineers, firemen and brakemen that would impose on the country an additional burden in transportation costs of $100,000,000 a year, the railroads propose that this wage problem be settled by reference to an impartial Federal tribunal.

With these employees, whose efficient service is acknowledged, the railroads have no differences that could not be considered fairly and decided justly by such a public body.

Railroads Urge Public Inquiry and Arbitration

The formal proposal of the railroads to the employees for the settlement of the controversy is as follows:

"Our conference have demonstrated that we cannot harmonize our differences of opinion and that eventually the matters in controversy must be passed upon by other and disinterested agencies. Therefore, we propose that your proposals and the proposals of the railroads be disposed of by one or the other of the following methods:

1. Preferably by submission to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the only tribunal which, by reason of its accumulated information bearing on railway conditions and its control of the revenues of the railways, is in a position to consider and protect the rights and equities of all the interests affected, and to provide additional revenue necessary to meet the added cost of operation in case your proposals are found by the Commission to be just and reasonable; or, in the event the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot, under existing laws, act in the premises, that we jointly request Congress to take such action as may be necessary to enable the Commission to consider and promptly dispose of the questions involved; or
2. By arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Federal law" (The Newlands Act).

Leaders Refuse Offer and Take Strike Vote

Leaders of the train service brotherhoods, at the joint conference held in New York, June 1-15, refused the offer of the railroads to submit the issue to arbitration or Federal review, and the employees are now voting on the question whether authority shall be given these leaders to declare a nation-wide strike.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is proposed by the railroads as the public body to which this issue ought to be referred for these reasons:

No other body with such an intimate knowledge of railroad conditions has such an unquestioned position in the public confidence.

The rates the railroads may charge the public for transportation are now largely fixed by this Government board.

Out of every dollar received by the railroads from the public nearly one-half is paid directly to the employees as wages; and the money to pay increased wages can come from no other source than the rates paid by the public.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, with its control over rates, is in a position to make a complete investigation and render such decision as would protect the interests of the railroad employees, the owners of the railroads, and the public.

A Question For the Public to Decide

The railroads feel that they have no right to grant a wage preferment of $100,000,000 a year to these employees, now highly paid and constituting only one-fifth of all the employees, without a clear mandate from a public tribunal that shall determine the merits of the case after a review of all the facts.

The single issue before the country is whether this controversy is to be settled by an impartial Government inquiry or by industrial warfare.

The Turnip.

The turnip is supposed to be a native of Asia and Europe. It has been cultivated for centuries. The wild East Indian turnip is said to be remotely kin to the edible turnip. It is the size of a walnut and first tasted is sweetish, but in a moment the taster's tongue feels as though it were pricked by a hundred hot needles, and he feels like expectorating for hours after. It is the country boy's favorite medium for a joke on the visiting town boy.—London Tatler.

SPRING PREPARATION.

Don't burn corn or cotton stalks. They furnish the land with soil fertility as well as soil ability and lessen danger from drought. Don't plow land the least bit too wet. It makes and dried bricks, kills soil bacteria and lessens production some times for years. Don't do it. Remember that preparation is half of cultivation and far easier, cheaper and better done before than after planting. Hurry is often like worry. It doesn't pay. —Farm Progress.

ROMANS AS DRY FARMERS.

They Gained Rich Olive Crops From the Hot African Sands.

The problem of dry farming with which our western farmers are struggling was faced also by the ancient Romans and handled by them in a manner from which we moderns can borrow many a suggestion. When the French took control at Tunis they found established there, a legacy from the Roman colonists of old, a system of dry farming as perfect as anything achieved by modern experiments in Australia, South Africa and our own west. Professor J. Russell Smith of the University of Pennsylvania has made a first hand investigation of this remarkable archaeological puzzle, which he describes in the Century in an article entitled "The Dry Farmers of Rome." He says in part:

"Plainly the Romans were master dry farmers to succeed under conditions worse than those under which we have calling. How did they do it? Can we not copy them? Fortunately, we can copy them, for they succeeded by the very simple device of growing tree crops. Since our dry farming has failed with grain crops on ten inches of rain and upward and theirs succeeded with tree crops on ten inches of rain and downward, the lesson is most plain. We, too, should grow tree crops."

"The secret is not hard to find. The perennial plant, of which the tree is the highest type, is nature's great implement for fighting aridity. If there is deep water the tree will send its roots for it. Recently an artesian well digger in Arizona brought up the live root of a small bush from the depth of eighty-three feet. If there is surface water at almost any season the perennial desert plant will seize it as a hungry dog seizes a bone and keep it securely for months or even years, supporting life and if possible maturing a crop of seed. Many and interesting are the devices by which plants have modified themselves to get and hold water in the fierce and merciless processes of adaptation, natural selection and survival. The olive, for instance, is a deep rooter in moist subsoil or a far-reaching, shallow rooter if there is no water in the subsoil. Its leaves are shaped above and hairy beneath. If cut off the foliage will completely shade its trunk, thus protecting it from the rays of the sun. Given one good drink, an olive tree has shown its ability to survive two rainless desert summers with only a single shower between. That is why the dry farmers of Rome succeeded 1,500 years ago, and their successors are succeeding now, while our farmers have often failed through their dependence on the quick growing, quick perishing annuals."

Poultry Feed Trough.

The difficulty in keeping poultry feed clean and dry during continued exposure can be largely overcome by using troughs with slatted sides and broad, detachable roofs. The troughs are from six to ten feet long, with sides five inches high, says a Missouri exchange. The slatted sides are two inches apart, and the troughs are sixteen inches high from floor to roof. The roof projects about two inches at the sides and effectually keep out the rain except when high winds prevail. The roof is very easily removed by lifting one end and sliding it off endwise. The trough can then be filled and the roof drawn back into place without lifting it. This arrangement is economical of feed, keeping it in good condition and avoiding waste. When dry mash is used there may be considerable waste by the floor parts being blown away, and on this account the dry mash trough should be put in a sheltered place out of the reach of the wind.

HOTEL ORIENT IS FILLED TO CAPACITY

Summer Visitors Tax Local Hospitality to Overflowing.

Landlord VanSkiver, of the Hotel Orient, is wearing the smile that won't come off these days. Business is good, in fact it is that good that the habitual smile may turn to a worried look if the number of patrons increase during the next few weeks as rapidly as they have in the past. However, Van is equal to the emergency, and will take care of all who come.

The Hotel Orient has made a great reputation as a place where one can obtain an excellent fish dinner. This fact is known in all sections and the result is that people liberally patronize the hotel.

Fishing in the many lakes near Ellsworth was never better than at the present time, and lovers of the sport make the Orient their headquarters. The genial landlord makes it a point to see that his guests are well taken care of. Competent guides, excellent boats, and the paraphernalia that makes a day on the lakes a successful one is always looked after, with the result that a good catch is usually obtained.

WHY not give your lad the same training?

"When I was a growing lad, and came upon many words in my reading that I did not understand, my mother, instead of giving me the definition when I applied to her, uniformly sent me to the dictionary to learn it, and in this way I gradually learned many things besides the meaning of the individual word in question—among other things, how to use a dictionary, and the great pleasure and advantage there might be in the use of the dictionary. Afterward, when I went to the village school, my chief diversion, after lessons were learned and before they were recited, was in turning over the pages of the 'Unabridged' at those days. Now the most modern Unabridged—the NEW INTERNATIONAL—gives me a pleasure of the same sort. So far as my knowledge extends, it is at present the best of the one-volume dictionaries, and quite sufficient for all ordinary uses. Even those who possess the splendid dictionaries in several volumes will yet find it a great convenience to have this, which is so compact, so full, and so trustworthy as to leave, in most cases, little to be desired."—Albert S. Cook, Ph.D., LL.D., Professor of the English Language and Literature, Yale Univ. April 23, 1911.

The casket was buried in flowers, a mute tribute from her many friends. Mr. Calahan's sister, Mrs. Dean, of Rapid River, Ohio, and his son, Stewart, and wife, of Detroit, were in attendance at the funeral.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. The Bethlehem Steel Company's Offer to Serve the United States

At a time when the expenses of the Government are so enormous—

Isn't it worth while finding out the actual facts before plunging ahead into an expenditure of $11,000,000 of the people's money for a Government armor plant?

To clear up the whole situation, and to put it on a basis as fair and business-like as we know how to express it, we now make this offer to the Government:

The Bethlehem Steel Company will manufacture armor plate for the Government of the United States at actual cost of operation plus such charges for overhead expenses, interest and depreciation as the Federal Trade Commission may fix. We will agree to this for such period as the Government may designate.

The House of Representatives voted down a proposal to empower the Federal Trade Commission to determine a fair price for armor, and allow private manufacturers opportunity to meet that price before the Government built its plant.

Isn't our proposition fair and ought it not to be accepted?

The measure is now before the United States Senate.

"I HAVE REGAINED FORMER ENERGY"

Mrs. Hackley Comes Out Strongly In Favor of Tanlac.

Mrs. Addie Hackley, of Mattawan, Michigan, writes: "Tanalac has given me the first relief from stomach trouble and nervousness I have known in eight years. My nerves have been in a terrible condition and the least little excitement would upset me badly and cause me great distress. I hardly knew what it was to get a good night's rest. My stomach became disordered and my digestion impaired. I lost my appetite and the sight of food would sometimes nauseate me. I was depressed and melancholy.

"After reading about Tanlac I decided to try it and got my husband to get me a bottle in Kalamazoo. Since using the medicine regularly I feel like a different woman. My nerves are steady and my stomach is in good condition. I have a good appetite and good digestion. I have regained my former energy and ambition. I am glad to praise Tanlac for it is a good medicine for all."

Tanalac may be obtained at the store of B. A. Herman.

DEATH OF FORMER ANTRIM COUNTY BOY

Earle Robert Vance Was Well Known in This Vicinity.

The San Jose, California, Mercury recently printed the following obituary of Earle Vance, who was well known here, having spent the most of his life in Antrim and Charlevoix counties.

"The funeral of Earle Robert Vance, a former well known resident of Santa Clara, who passed away on Sunday in San Jose, was held today. The services were conducted at the Santa Clara Baptist church by Rev. George E. Gibbs. The 20th street M. E. church choir of San Jose sweetly sang his favorite hymns, and the members of the Santa Clara W. C. T. U. attended the funeral in a body. The deceased was the oldest child and only son of John R. and Jennie M. Vance of Santa Clara. Earle was born in Echo, Mich., July 29, 1880, and was therefore nearly 36 years of age. In 1908 he removed with his parents to Santa Clara. In 1912 he went to Oilfields, Fresno county, where he took up government land. In November, 1915, he was married to Miss Hope Porter of Batavia, Iowa. He had been ailing for some time, and in April was pronounced incurable at a Fresno hospital. He partially recovered so as to be able to be removed to San Jose, where he found sweet relief on June 18. He was a consistent member of the 20th street M. E. church, and in his last days, though suffering intensely, enjoyed hearing the Bible read, praying and singing the gospel songs learned in his boyhood days in Michigan. He was a loving husband, son and father.

"He leaves a widow, father, mother and four sisters, Mrs. Vera M. Smith of Charlevoix, Mich., Beulah E., Ruth C. and Delila L. of San Jose, besides numerous relatives and friends in California and Michigan."

RURAL CARRIERS NOW IN SESSION

county—Fast Jordan, Boyne City and Charlevoix—with Pine lake in the center; a county of units, all working hand in hand for the benefit of the entire county.

Pine lake is a queen among lakes, of which none is more beautiful, none with purer water and none on which, in palmy lumber days, floated as many vessels carrying lumber to every part of the country. The shores are irregular, the land high and rolling all along the shore and Charlevoix county is destined, because of its unusual advantages in this lake, to become one of the great resorts of the United States. You know it takes time to make a big resort country. Tourists necessarily have to become possessed of the knowledge of the country to which they come and to which they send their families.

Pure water and health-giving climatic conditions enter largely into the making of such a place, for without these advantages any resort is sure of becoming a dead one. Pine lake adds materially in making these qualities and the surrounding farm lands are so located as to make Charlevoix county the natural resort, being so centrally located and easily approached by both rail and steamboat.

Pine lake is entirely within the confines of our own county, with Charlevoix at the extreme west end. It empties into Round lake, one of the best harbors on Lake Michigan. Boyne City, eighteen miles distant at the east end of the lake is one of the large lumber towns still existent in Michigan. On the south side of Pine lake, six miles from Charlevoix, is an arm, extending about twelve miles in a southeasterly direction to East Jordan, another thriving lumber city.

A healthy competition exists between these three cities in their various activities and with the fast and ever growing popularity of this region of the state as a summer resort, their future prosperity and growth is assured.

Now, we come to the vital point of our story. We all know that good roads are absolutely necessary for rural free delivery, in order that the mail matter may be delivered promptly to its destination. If, when you go forth on your daily trips, you try to impress upon someone of your prominent farmer friends the necessity of building the maintenance into the road, you will be conferring a great favor, not only on yourself, but on the farmer and his children, as well. Tell them of the never ending expense that the macadam road is which many counties are now building; the repairs of which will, in a few years, be more than the original cost of the road. There is a road that can be built that will last a lifetime—I mean a long lifetime, fifty years at least, and with but little expense, and that is a concrete road. For ordinary purposes, one ten foot wide, with shoulders of crushed stone on either side four feet in width, is sufficient, thereby giving eighteen feet in width, and this road can be built in Charlevoix county for $5,850 per mile. The rebate from the state is $1,000 for the cement portion. I have not been informed up to the present time what the rebate will be for the extra eight feet of crushed stone, but it is safe to say that it will be at least $200, making the net cost not to exceed $4,650, as against the nine foot road which we are building here at a cost of $3,000 per mile, with a rebate of $500. Really, this is no rebate, because the whole $3,900 is virtually fooled away on account of the big expense of the upkeep. This upkeep of our nine foot road we are now building is like the babbling brook. It runs on forever, until the road is either rebuilt with concrete or brick.

I want to call your attention, when you get outside of this building, to two pieces of concrete road; one at the south end of Bridge street, opposite the Elston House, which was put down several years ago, and, before you look at it, I want to assure you that there is not a crack, nor a break, nor apparently a worn place in it; the other, Dixon avenue, which was paved five years ago, between the bridge and the depot. I make the assertion, without fear of contradiction, that these two pieces of road are subject to a more severe test during the months of either July or August (and have been ever since they were built) than the road between Charlevoix and Boyne Falls or Charlevoix and East Jordan would have to hear in an entire year. On Dixon avenue, you will find a few cracks. This was not the fault of the cement, but we did not know as much about building concrete roads five years ago as we do now. The spaces for expansion should have been down the center and also transversely every fifty feet.

Scientific figuring is the first thing every successful business man does in the management of his business. The cost is always the first thing to be taken into consideration. Now, what is the answer, or the reminder, or the reply to make to the man who says we cannot afford concrete roads? The fact is, we cannot afford anything else. Do you know what the upkeep of a nine foot road, such as is being built between Boyne City and Greensky Hill, will be? Go and look at it, see for yourself and then judge. Nobody will have to be told that in a few, very few years this road will have to be rebuilt and it is not the fault of the commissioner either. It is the fault of the state of Michigan to allow their money to be spent in this unbusinesslike manner. It is a fair sample and compares favorably with what the state did five years ago in sending a lot of six dollar a day men to do fifteen million dollars worth of business. I mean by this, to reassess the property that they did not know a d—m thing about. All they did know was that if they did not add to what the local supervisor or assessor had assessed it at they would lose their jobs, so, of course, they added to it.

Going back to the road proposition; the plain lesson for communities having heavy traffic is to build permanently. It is better to add a small annual mileage of low maintenance roads than to gamble with the future on a less satisfactory type. It has already proven costly.

Earth and gravel roads have their place as feeders to the main highways and for districts too sparsely populated to finance better construction. Light traffic does not demand more.

But where traffic is heavy and the community demands good roads it is economic wisdom to build permanently—a blunder to build less well. For permanence means least cost.

Another thing you rural messengers can do is to urge upon your farmer friends the advantage and the profit that would result to each and every one if they would plant a row of choice, bearing apple trees the entire frontage of their farms along the roadside; also, to have the sides of the road levelled and seeded down. Just imagine all the roads in your county with two rows of splendid apple trees and a long narrow meadow on both sides of the road.

Some farmers will work like the devil on the back part of an old, stumpy field among stones and brush, to get some fodder for next winter and at the same time neglect to cultivate the strip by the side of the road which is already cleared and ready for the crop.

Am I talking nonsense, or is this thought the emanation of a diseased brain—answer me the question. Me thinks I hear a carrier from Emmet county say, "Not by a damn sight." That's right, Mr. Emmett, your sight is good.

Experiences in Driving on Concrete Roads.

Horses are not injured from traveling on a concrete road, because there are no holes nor loose stones on the surface. A concrete road always presents an even surface, which prevents horses from wrenching their knees and shoulders.

Horses slip forward or backward, and sideways. Veterinary surgeons say the side slip is by far the more harmful. The slight crown and the gritty surface of a concrete road prevent side slipping of horses and skidding automobiles.

Minimum resistance to traction, firm foothold for horses, and non-slipperiness, are distinct advantages which a concrete road possesses in greater degree than any other type of road.

Utility of Concrete Roads.

Hauling on a concrete road is easy because of the even surface. A horse can draw practically twice as much on a concrete road as he can on a macadam road; three times as much as on a gravel road and five times as much as on a good clay road. Concrete roads are ready for use during all seasons of the year, in all kinds of weather.

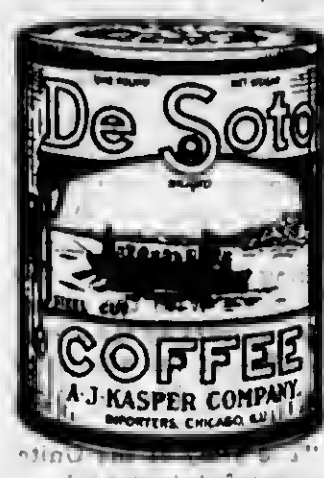

Shape of Road.

Concrete roads need be crowned only slightly in the center to allow surface water to run off. The slight crown makes the entire width of the road available for traffic. Roads of gravel and macadam require a high crown, thus increasing the danger of side slipping both of horses and automobiles. This danger is avoided on a concrete road because of its slight crown. High crown means personal discomfort and makes your wife nervous when you must turn out to pass another vehicle. Low crown means little strain on vehicle wheels, and easy driving.

The science of road building consists in getting the greatest number of miles of permanent highway for the least money. Ultimate cost, however, is not measured so much by the cost of maintenance, the real measure of road economy. The upkeep of certain types of pavement, in a comparatively few years, will equal or exceed the cost of constructing concrete pavement on which the annual cost of maintenance is small.

Permanent roads instead of being a tax on a community furnish new taxable value. In Wayne county (Detroit), Mich., for example, the assessed valuation of townships, villages and cities outside of Detroit in October, 1906, was $62,707,003. Since that time Wayne county has constructed 128 miles of concrete highways and the assessed valuation in October, 1914, was $114,548,122, an increase of $51,841,119 or 82.6 per cent of the original. Instances of the increase in value of farm lands in Wayne county of 200, 300 and even 400 per cent are common. Much of this increase in property value is due to concrete roads.

Promptly Attended To

Among the Players and Caddies

Forty more caddies were added to the register at the golf links last week, numbering from 21 to 60; inclusive. Their names follow in order: John Smith, Harold Pearl, Otto Harrington, Claire Cartier, Franklin Cooper, George Bacon, Marshal Ackert, Jeff Novotny, Cam Krulik, George Jeffries, Roland Lindsay, Elmo Helms, Clayton Hull, Paul Blake, Frank Krulik, Mike Zagorski, Prescott Adams, Daniel McCann, Art Wexstaff, Raphael Gordon, Homer Sanford, Harold Stites, Frank Polinski, Jim Novotny, Stanley McCafferty, Harry Paulson, Earl Smith, Elmer Smith, Jerald McCafferty, Vernard Miller, Floyd Jeffrey, Teddy Loper, Clayton Trimble, Ward Richardson, Vane Smith, George Zagorski, Harold Jones, Clarence Shaw and Joe Gallagher.

There are some boys, otherwise employed through the week, who are enrolling for caddie work on Sunday afternoon. For these a series of numbers has been started commencing at 150. Donald King and Walker Miles are in this registry so far. The players outnumbered the caddies somewhat last Sunday, making some doubles necessary. The Sunday play will be considerable through the better part of the season.

George Bacon went to work for the Western Union last week. His number, 26, was taken by his younger brother, Melvin Bacon.

Harold Usher, who has been a regular caddie for several years, is off on a furlough with Company I, of East Jordan, in which he has enlisted. While not shooting Mexicans or picking up paper and glass around the colonel's tent, he will act as special correspondent to the "Courier."

Kenneth Usher, in the absence of his brother, has been draughted into service in the "Courier" office. Now "he's a devil in his own home town." His number, 9, has been taken by Fritz Brower, whose home is in Mason, Michigan.

Walter Anderson, number 10, was lesson caddie last week. Lester Coblenz has been appointed to the place for this week. Coblenz is number 8.

The basket ball court is complete now and play started this week. The ball and baskets are the best that money can buy. Base ball has dropped into the background, and even "mush" hasn't the following it once had.

A large number of new lads have applied for numbers this season, just as a large number of old fellows have turned their hands to other work. More boys are needed. Sixty will not be enough by far.

Paul Blakemore, number 35, hails from Moline, Illinois, and "tickles the ivories" at the Majestic after supper. Some of the boys insist that he "pounds the horse teeth."

Of the 96 boys registered in the season of 1913, less than 20 are now caddies. Not one of these 75 boys, who was the right stuff to begin with, would say that he was not benefited by his work as caddie, by the money he earned, the good physical exercise he got and by the knowledge of human nature that he acquired in his experiences with the different people for whom he worked.

Any boys having caddie badges are requested to turn them in to the caddie master. Boys who are no longer caddies will be given twenty cents each for badges turned in. The others will be given badges in exchange.

RECRUITING IS ON THE INCREASE

AMERICAN SOLDIER AGAIN IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Thousands Apply to Adjutant General at Washington for Information About Requirements

The American soldier is again in the spotlight. Thousands are thronging the recruiting stations all over the country. Other thousands are writing to the war department, making inquiry as to how they can "get in." With the passage of legislation increasing the army to 250,000 the office of the adjutant-general at Washington has taken on renewed activity.

"The army of the United States is the best fed, best paid and best kept army in the world," said Captain Thomas F. Ryan, of the office of the adjutant-general of the army, in discussing the army as a career. "The soldier's opportunity for advancement, self-improvement mentally and physically, pleasure, or the accumulation of savings, is of the best."

"The pay of a soldier ranges from $15 to $99 a month, according to the grade and length of service. As the soldier receives every necessity free, his pay is practically clear. He should have no difficulty, if he so desires, in saving while he is in the army. The government grants to every soldier the privilege of depositing with the treasurer of the United States any amount not less than five dollars, and allows him four per cent interest."

"Upon the completion of 30 years' service, the soldier may retire on three-quarters of the pay he is receiving at the time of his retirement. For example, if a soldier retires as a first sergeant, the government will pay him for the rest of his life $67.50 a month and require no service in return."

"The advantages of travel which army service affords is an important consideration. The army not only offers but encourages all kinds of clean and healthful sports. Each company has its own amusement room where the soldier may play billiards, pool, chess, checkers. The separate organizations and posts have their base ball and foot ball teams."

"Education is a prominent feature of army life. Men who have not had the advantage of extensive schooling will find in the army facilities for acquiring a good education. At all posts there are schools for the instruction of enlisted men in grammar, arithmetic, geography, history, algebra and other studies comprised in a common school course."

There are also schools where enlisted men can learn the trade of the saddler, horseshoer, baker, cook. Instruction given in the schools fit the men to become good practical firemen, electricians, engineers, draughtsmen, surveyors and wireless operators.

CELEBRATE THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING ON JULY 4

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Webb Renew Vows After Wedded 50 Years.

July 4, 1866, in the village of Reading, Michigan, Mr. William Henry Webb and Miss Harriet Nicely were united in marriage. The fiftieth anniversary of that event was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Webb in Ironton last Tuesday. A large company of friends gathered for the occasion, many of whom had come from a distance. A number of gifts testified to the esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Webb are held.

Mr. Webb is a veteran of the civil war, having seen two years service in the artillery. Both are in excellent health and give promise of living to see many more anniversaries.

They stood up before Rev. C. E. Taggart and renewed the vows which have bound them together for half a century. The perfect day, the splendid dinner which was served under the trees, the large company and the unique character of the celebration, all combined to make the occasion one of much interest and enjoyment.

Clifford Beattie and Wife Drive Through from San Antonio, Tex.

Arthur Beattie, of Marion township, whose serious injuries were noted in these columns some weeks ago, was brought home from the Petoskey hospital, Tuesday, July 4, and is now resting comfortably, showing little effects of the journey.

Mr. Beattie was brought home by his son, Clifford H. Beattie, who, with his wife, arrived from San Antonio, Texas, Saturday night. The trip from San Antonio was commenced June 19. Altogether, over 2,200 miles was covered by automobile. Mr. Beattie reports bad road conditions in Oklahoma, caused by rainy weather. They traveled over the Santa Fe Trail, Lincoln Highway, West Michigan Pike and several other well known roads.

"Michigan roads compare favorably with those in other states," said Mr. Beattie. "In most instances they are better, especially a great improvement over some experienced in the southern states." The trip was a most enjoyable one. Mr. and Mrs. Beattie expect to spend several months in this vicinity.

Church Steeple.

The church steeple was originally designed as a means of advertising the situation of the church. Among the low buildings which originally prevailed the steeple was an impressive beacon, but under modern conditions it is a failure, as even the most towering steeple is lost among the higher industrial structures reared around it. The steeple is really being replaced by electricity, which answers the purpose much more satisfactorily. Electrically illuminated signs are being introduced quite extensively for this purpose.

VanPelt Figuring on Longest Apple Orchard in World.

VanPelt is figuring on the longest apple orchard in the world and it is to be located in Charlevoix county. Further reference will be made to this later.

He wants concrete roads built, over which he can carry the fruit, so that it will arrive at its destination in perfect order. As we all know, the nine foot roads now being built soon become only bad ruts and a lot of thank-you nams or chuck holes and transporting over such roads would bruise the apples, thereby reducing their value and injuring the reputation of "Fruit With a Flavor, Grown in Charlevoix County."

THE ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING

"MUSICAL" ENTERTAINMENT WITH DISCORDANT SOUNDS

Unsuccessful Fight Made to Defeat Trustee Miller for Re-Election Because of Attitude on Music.

The annual school meeting Monday night was a regular "musical" with vocal solos, duets, trios, and choruses. The reports of the officers were received, accepted, and will be printed in full in the Courier next week, with the complete itemized statement of receipts and disbursements for the year. Briefly summarizing the reports show a very satisfactory condition of the finances. In spite of the extra expense of installing the new plan of heating, and the payment in full of the new paving on State street, and of extraordinary repairs, the expenditures were a trifle less than in the previous year, and the board only had to borrow $3,500 during the year, as against ten thousand, and twelve thousand, the two previous years. The district, counting the library, has property valued at nearly $100,000, and the outstanding bonds now total only $13,000.

Ed J. Miller, secretary of the board, was the retiring member this year, and when he was renominated the "music" began. Mr. F. H. Hull was nominated to oppose him, wholly and solely, as the speaker made plain, because the board, of which Mr. Miller was a member, had decided to dispense with the services of the special instructress in music and drawing, and on this point alone the fight was made. Several other candidates were named, but the issue was between Mr. Miller and Mr. Hull, and after several ballots, in each of which Mr. Miller led, the latter received a majority and was elected. This ended the business of the meeting.

The Courier interviewed Will E. Hampton, president of the board, to secure the views of the board on the "sharps and flats" of the musical matter and Mr. Hampton said:

"Those who attended the school meeting a year ago, and last night, know my views on this matter without repeating them. I have said many times that in my opinion, the money paid for a special instructress in music was practically thrown away, so far as real value to the pupils is concerned. If you want your child to be a musician, you must employ a private teacher, for the public schools do not turn out musicians. It was the opinion of the superintendent, of myself and of the entire board, that we could dispense with the special instructress in music, and have music taught in the grades, by the teachers, and obtain practically as good results. The salary thus saved, could be used in the new home-training department for girls, which we have established, and which in the opinion of the board, is the most important step in advance that has ever been taken in the Charlevoix schools. Notice was served on us last night that every member of the present board must 'walk the plank,' and Mr. Miller was to make the first trip, because of the action taken. While the majority of those present, as was shown later by the informal expression of opinion taken, were in favor of employing a special teacher for music, Mr. Miller was re-elected. Less than five per cent of the qualified voters in the district attended the meeting. I believe, if every vote in the district could be counted, that a majority would be found holding the views of the board. The law makes it the duty of the board to decide these matters according to their best judgment. We decided for the 'home-training' in preference to special training in music. And when the people came to realize what the new department is, what it will do, and how much our girls will learn that they cannot be taught even in the homes where the very best of 'housekeepers' hold sway, they would say as we did, between the two, leave out the music. But the board is not only willing, but anxious, to spend the money the tax payers give us, as the majority of the people who contribute it want it spent. I have already consulted with some of the trustees, and I think there is no doubt each and every tax payer will be given the opportunity to express his opinion on this matter, through a postal card referendum. If it develops that a majority want this special instruction in music, I shall vote to employ the very best, most competent teacher we can secure. But even with the most competent teacher, I still insist that the money paid for music in our schools could be expended in other departments with far greater results, so far as real benefit to the scholars is concerned."

DAY DREAMS

MARRIAGE CAME AS A SURPRISE

FRIENDS EXTEND CONGRATULATIONS TO NEWLY WEDS

Miss E. Grace Eldred and Otto L. Hines Married Sunday at Harbor Springs.

A charming but simple wedding took place Sunday, July 9, at high noon, at the very pretty home of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Moss, of Harbor Springs, when their niece, Miss E. Grace Eldred, was united in marriage to Mr. Otto L. Hines, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Hines, of Charlevoix.

Rev. Harry E. Walker, pastor of the M. E. church, of Harbor Springs, performed the ceremony in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends of the bride and groom, using the impressive ring service.

The bride was becomingly gowned in white lace, worn over white tulle and a long veil, and carried an arm bouquet of white rose peonies tied with white satin ribbons. Miss Lois E. Frazier, of Charlevoix, was maid of honor and wore a gown of Quaker grey charmeuse and carried a shower bouquet of pink sweet peas. Little Helen Gokee, of Petoskey, was a dainty little ring bearer, and carried the ring buried in a bouquet of white syringas. Mr. Karl Hines, oldest brother of the groom, acted as best man.

The house was beautifully decorated with flowers and ferns, the color scheme being carried out in pink and white.

Out of town guests were Mrs. M. Eldred, of Jackson, mother of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Hines, parents of the groom; Mr. Karl Hines, Miss Lois Frazier, and Enid Todd and Charles Emery of Charlevoix; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Wood and daughter, Gladys, and little Helen Gokee, of Petoskey.

Both the contracting parties are well known in this city, and the news of the wedding came as a surprise to their host of friends. The bride is manager of the local Western Union office, and since being a resident of the city has become one of the best liked business women of the city. The groom is one of Charlevoix's young men who has lived here practically all his life, and is employed in the drug store of F. G. Hines & Company. They have the congratulations of the entire community.

Much Improved in Health.

Mrs. George Taylor has returned to her home at 212 Antrim street very much improved in health, after spending six months with her son, Frank and family, of Iron Mountain, who is employed by the Von Platen Lumber Co., formerly of Boyne City, as lumber inspector. She wishes to thank her friends and neighbors for the many kindnesses shown her during her long sickness of over a year after returning from England.

The date for their intended visit has been for the week of July 17-22. See announcement on another page.

BROKE TWO RIBS AS RESULT OF FALL

H. S. Harsha Seriously Injured at His Home Monday.

H. S. Harsha received injuries Monday that will confine him to his bed for some time. The accident happened in a peculiar manner and Mr. Harsha himself can hardly give an accurate statement of what really happened.

From what we can learn, he was passing from one part of the house to another, and in going through the door stumbled on the sill, and in falling, struck the corner of a box. The result was two fractured ribs and other bruises of a more or less painful nature.

The nature of his injuries, while not serious, are extremely painful and will confine him to his bed for some time.

NEWS FROM THE BOYS IN CAMP

CO. I MUSTERED IN UNITED STATES MILITIA

Soldier Boys Made Ill by Injection of Typhoid Serum—Ready to Move

(BY HAROLD W. USHER.)

CAMP FERRIS, July 8.—With tomorrow night we have been in Grayling two weeks, and from the outlook will be here for some time yet. We had examinations the other day and I was the only Charlevoix recruit to get through, but I guess my shoulders are broad enough to keep "Charlevoix the Beautiful" well represented. It will be rather lonely, though, without some of the home fellows here to keep company with.

This morning we mustered from the Michigan National Guards into the United States militia. From the present outlook, we will lose about half of our company under the provision of the new law. A number of the fellows think that the government is trying to get them into the regular army, but little definite is understood regarding it.

The 31st regiment left camp this morning for Nogales, Arizona, I think, as we know but little here concerning the movement of the troops. I suppose and hope that we will move soon, as things are getting rather monotonous here.

Both Brial, the Ellsworth school teacher, and Stewart Baar, of the Ellsworth bank, failed to pass the examination. Brial is sick today on account of a big feed we had in his tent last night. Someone had slipped him a big box of civilized grub. Gee, it was good—and you ought to have seen us lay it away.

A fellow in the company next to us got intoxicated and pretty near broke up the whole works. They put him in the guard house and he will be court martialed. He will get it handed to him right.

Last night a report was current in camp that the 32nd regiment was coming up to clean up on the 33rd regiment. All the men turned out with clubs to meet them, but their officers made them quit. They were informed that if they wanted to fight they would have to use their fists. The 32nd didn't like this, so went back. You would have seen a liberal spreading of "eye blacking" if they had put in their appearance, as the boys were ready for them.

On July 3 the members of Company I received their first treatment as a precaution against typhoid fever. All received a shot in the arm, and many, including myself, felt under the weather for several days from its effect.

A day or so ago we went for a hike on the range. Jumped three bunches of deer, the first many of us ever saw in their wild state. There is an ugly bull elk over on the reservation, and seven cows and calves. They claim there are also some 200 hundred deer on the reservation, besides a number of wild turkeys.

Talk about hot weather. You people in Charlevoix do not have the slightest idea of what it means. Next door to Hades, so the boys say. Just heard that a member of the cavalry dropped dead from the effects of the heat and vaccination.

A few people from Charlevoix have visited camp, and believe me, their presence was most welcome. We have no idea when orders will come to move south, but when they do come, we are all ready to go. Taps have sounded, so will have to close for this time.

CAMP FERRIS, July 11.—Saturday morning at 4:00 a. m. the 31st regiment left for the border. The first detachment entrained at 7:00 a. m., the second at 11:30, and the third at 1:00 p. m.

Friday night everything was packed and loaded upon the seventy cars which had arrived the day before. Friday night the officers slept in the Pullman cars and the men in pup tents on the grounds. There is nothing left now to show where but a few hours ago, 1,500 soldiers had been in camp. Every scrap of paper or rubbish has been picked up and all garbage buried.

The departure was much different than any previous one. No crowds were there to see them off and bid them God-speed, and the only tears shed were by an old lady who had

SUN BROTHERS' SHOW

HERE THURSDAY, JULY 20

Big Show Said to Be Better Than Ever—Watch for Parade.

The Big Show is coming. Yep! Sun Brothers. This show will come by train bright and early, with a long string of handsome steel cars and will bring a retinue of the World's latest and strangest wonders.

The advertising car and advance agents have been to town and have billed the attraction very heavily for two performances to be given at Charlevoix on July 20th.

There will be exhibited for the first time many new animal features, but the monkeys are the same, and the elephants, too, as in the days of long ago. However, the latter are now doing a new routine of acts, notable original tricks, being a satire on the great American craze, the tango dance. These big giants are certainly "some dancers." They must be seen to be fully appreciated. They also do a great base ball scene and a new and novel brass band stunt.

The equestrian and riding seals and sen lions are also among the new novelties this season. The big show programme is rich and fairly teems with the finest foreign and American feature aerialists, acrobats, jugglers, contortionists, equilibrists and general performers.

The clowns are a predominating attraction and they are better than ever, with a routine of new funny scenes, and are this season headed by Billy Zanfretto, the well known Hippodrome clown and pantomimist.

As a special free attraction the Sun Brothers' will present at noon-time, on the show grounds, a great European "thriller," said to be the greatest free attraction ever offered by a tented aggregation.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

I have decided to be a candidate for the office of Register of Deeds on the Republican ticket at the primary election, August 29th. I have been a resident of Charlevoix county 35 years. Have held the office of supervisor of Eveline township 10 years and clerk 6 years. If nominated and later elected I will attend the duties of the office to the best of my ability. Your support is respectfully solicited.

Many people suffer the tortures of lame muscles and stiffened joints because of impurities in the blood, and each succeeding attack seems more acute until rheumatism has invaded the whole system.

GLYCERINE AND BARK PREVENT APPENDICITIS

The simple mixture of buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., known as Adler-ika, astonishes Charlevoix people. Because Adler-ika acts on BOTH lower and upper bowel, ONE SPOONFUL relieves almost ANY CASE constipation, sour stomach or gas. It removes such surprising foul matter that a few doses often relieve or prevent appendicitis. A short treatment helps chronic stomach trouble. The INSTANT, easy action of Adler-ika is astonishing. No Smoking in Garages.

John T. Wlnship, state fire marshal, has added a new section to the fire marshal regulations prohibiting smoking or the use of matches in all garages. This action was brought about by the recent fire at Charlotte, where a life was lost, besides large property damage caused by lighting a match in a garage.

Route Pack of Wolves.

An Upper Peninsula exchange contains the following experience of James Warner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Warner of Milton township, with a pack of wolves in Chippewa county:

"Thirty dollars looks good to James Warner of Stalwart, but the fact that he dispersed a pack of six wolves, with death to one, without being attacked by them means more to him. To say that Mr. Warner was frightened is putting it mildly. Nine shots were fired at the oncoming pack of wolves before they wheeled around and made for shelter. Mr. Warner does not regret the experience but says that $30 could not tempt him to go through it again.

"Mr. Warner appeared at County Clerk Parsille's office with his trophy and was given an order on the county treasurer for $30, this being the bounty paid by Chippewa county for wolves.

"It appears that a pack of wolves have been harassing farmers in the vicinity of Stalwart for some time. The largest loss was suffered by Angus McLeod, who lost three sheep and a calf. Traps were set in many places, but the wily prowlers of the forest could not be caught. Mr. McLeod enlisted the services of Mr. Warner, and the first night that the latter set out to rout the wolves he met with success."

Advance Pioneer Dies.

Robert Neil, a pioneer resident of Advance, died at his home there Sunday, July 2nd, of dropsy of the heart.

The deceased was 72 years of age and had lived at his late farm home for more than 21 years.

Mr. Neil was a native of Ireland having come to this country in the late 60's and worked for a time in Pennsylvania after which he went back to Ireland and came back a few years later with a bride, taking up his residence again in Pennsylv-vania. About 35 years ago Mr. Neil came to Michigan and settled at Mancelona where he lived until he moved to Advance.

He leaves to mourn his loss, his wife and a sister, Mrs. Harriet Neal, five nephews, Nelson Benjamin, Robert John and David Neil, all of this county besides two nieces, Mrs. Ted Ecker of Boyne City, and Miss Rachel Neil of Advance.

Bay Shore Indian Killed By Cars.

James Kewagoshkum, of Bay Shore, an Indian of about 41 years of age, was struck by a C. R. & I. passenger train Monday night of last week about three miles south of Mackinaw City and literally cut to pieces. He was identified by letters in his coat pocket. The first the trainmen knew they discovered a coat on the front of the engine when the train arrived in Petoskey. The pieces of the body were gathered up by the section crew and brought to Petoskey the following Wednesday.

Petoskey Evening News.
Kewagoshkum is the same man who about ten years ago was injured in the same manner by a Pere Marquette train. He was found one morning by the yardmen with the whole top of his scalp and skull literally cut off. Dr. George Ryevecraft and the late Dr. Calkins, of Petoskey, were called and spent more than two hours picking the cinders out of the top of his brain. He had laid beside the track during most of the night and the top of his skull was filled with rain water. After standing him on his head to let the water run out of the top of his head, he was taken to Lockwood hospital where his skull was put back together and nailed in place with small wire nails.

The scalp was then pulled down over the skull again and sewed into place. During the entire operation the Indian remained unconscious and did not become conscious for some time later. A day or so after this he leaped from the hospital window and walked to Horton's Bay and the next day walked from there to Bay Shore. He was brought back to the hospital again but within a week again leaped from the window.

When again found he was placed in the jail, then located at Harbor Springs, and kept there until his head healed. In the last mixup with a train he did not get off as easily as he was literally cut to pieces.

WHAT YOUR NEIGHBORS SAY OF TANLAC IS WHAT COUNTS"A FRIEND OF MINE TOLD ME ABOUT TANLAC"*"NERVOUS WOMAN UNABLE TO SLEEP"*Grand Rapids Woman Explains How "Master Medicine" Has Been of Great Benefit.

"A friend of mine first told me about Tanlac," said Mrs. Telgenhof, of 431 Cedar street, Grand Rapids, while talking to the demonstrator a few months ago.

"I was all sick and run down following a long siege of liver and stomach trouble and when Tanlac gave me such instant relief I was over-joyed," she went on to say.

"Hardly a day passed that I did not suffer from headaches, and bad ones too. I also had backache, and sometimes could hardly move about on account of the pain I was suffering.

"My stomach was very badly out of condition and I suffered to a great extent from gas on my stomach. I ate very carefully, choosing only such foods as I thought would agree with me, but even then I suffered just the same.

"I slept so badly that I would always wake up feeling tired and listless. I sometimes hardly had the energy to dress and the thought of doing any work would be almost too much.

"After I had heard Tanlac recommended so highly by my friend I purchased a bottle and began using it. I improved almost from the first time I have increased in weight from eighty-nine to one hundred sixteen pounds. I now recommend Tanlac because of the great good it has done for me, and because I want others to know that it will do for them what it has done for me. I cannot speak too highly of Tanlac as a system builder."

Mrs. M. Histed, of Mungor, Mich., near Bay City, made the following statement while talking to the demonstrator in October last:

"Tanlac is a wonderful medicine. It has improved my condition wonderfully.

"I was generally run down in health before I started taking it, and I suffered from nervousness, headaches, loss of appetite, loss of energy, indigestion and sour stomach.

"My general health was extremely bad. I could eat scarcely anything, and was so nervous that it was almost impossible for me to sleep. I had no ambition to do my work, and it was even an effort for me to dress when I would wake up.

"I began taking Tanlac because I saw it advertised in the newspapers, and because it was so highly praised to me by friends who had taken it.

"Since using Tanlac I have been relieved from my severe headaches. I can sleep much better, and I am now able to eat heartily. I have taken three bottles and during that time I have increased in weight from eighty-nine to one hundred sixteen pounds.

"I now recommend Tanlac because of the great good it has done for me, and because I want others to know that it will do for them what it has done for me. I cannot speak too highly of Tanlac as a system builder."

Right Now is THE TIME

Right now is the time to talk about your heating plant. Don't wait until you can look into the sky and see the snow flakes coming down as big as base balls and the wind blowing 57 miles an hour, and the house 10 degrees below zero. Now is the time to make up your mind and have the plant installed and ready for business. If you do this you will not be obliged to go out into some outdoor building and dig up that old heating stove and set it up on three legs and a couple of bricks. Then it turns up that Johnnie had the door during the summer to make a fire under and had left it on the back alight. The stove pipe turns up missing and some is forced to make a drive to town for a new one. Then come the "cuss words" putting up the pipe.

Now is the time to do away with all of this trouble. Let me explain to you the merits of the heating plants I sell. I will install a plant in your home and will not ask for a cent in payment until you acknowledge that you are entirely satisfied with it. What could be more fair.

I installed nearly a hundred plants last year and you cannot show me a dissatisfied customer. That is the way our plants work. Drop me a card or call at the house and see me. Look over what I have in the heating plant line. Can furnish all material, brick, etc. Furnaces with brick jackets or iron, any kind you may want. Let me explain them to you and you will buy.

"Madame X" has played its melody on the heart strings of the American theatre going public for seven seasons, and the five reel adaptation of this Henry W. Savage production which Pathe has made will be shown at the Majestic, Saturday, July 13.

That no artist of the stage is better adapted to the delicate handling of the difficult role of "Madame X" is evidenced by that tug and grip Miss Donnelly's performance gives to the emotions.

The play by Alexander Bisson is the old story of the heart hungry wife, craving love and attention and the wrapped-in-his-business-inattentive-husband.

Jacqueline, now known to the police as "Madame X" has drunk of all the dregs in the cup of life until she finds herself on trial for the murder of one of her lovers.

Her own son, now a promising lawyer is appointed to defend "Madame X" and the famous court room scene which has the reputation of possessing more dramatic intensity than anything seen in years follows.

Dorothy Donnelly's art bares the soul of a woman of the underworld.

DEMOCRATS UNDER BIG HANDICAP

Some of the Democratic leaders are coming emphatically to the opinion that the initial advantage in this campaign lies with the Republican party.

The most capable Democratic statistician can figure no more than 202 votes in the Electoral College which by any possibility, near or remote, can be claimed for Wilson; while the same Democratic lead pencil sets down 248 electoral votes as reasonably certain for Hughes. A majority of the Electoral College is 266 votes. According to these Democratic figures, therefore, Wilson must win 64 votes from states which the Democrats class as doubtful, whereas Hughes needs only 18 from the same source.

The four states which the Democrats look upon as doubtful and wherein they purpose to concentrate their heavy fighting during this campaign are New York, with 45 electoral votes; Indiana with 15; New Jersey with 14, and Connecticut with seven. To elect Wilson, under these conditions, requires that he carry three of these states—and one of the three must be New York—whereas Hughes can win by carrying New York alone, or by carrying any combination of two out of the other three.

In studying the problem, the figures of the two preceding presidential elections are most interesting.

New York in 1908 gave Taft 870,000 votes, Bryan getting 667,000. In 1912 Wilson had 655,000, and the combined Taft and Roosevelt strength was 845,000.

In 1908 Indiana was carried by Taft against Bryan by 348,000 to 38,000. In 1912 the Hoosier Democrats gave Wilson 281,000 votes to 313,000 polled for Taft and Roosevelt together.

New Jersey gave Bryan, in 1908, 182,000; and to Taft 265,000. Four years later Wilson received home support of 178,000, while Taft and Roosevelt together had 234,000.

Connecticut in 1908 was carried by Taft to the tune of 112,000 to 68,000. In 1912 Wilson got 74,000 Nutmeg voters on his side, while Taft and Roosevelt counted up 102,000.

In other words, in the four states which Democratic south-sayers count as "doubtful," there is only one—Connecticut—where Wilson received more votes in 1912 than Bryan had in 1908; and in not one of these four states was the combined Taft and Roosevelt vote of 1912 as great as that which Taft received alone in 1908.

That is to say, united Republicanism was thousands of votes stronger in 1908 than the total vote of divided Republicanism in 1912; while Wilson was not as good as a vote-getter as Bryan showed himself. To put it exactly as the figures show, Wilson was 67,000 weaker than Bryan, while there were 101,000 more men who voted for Taft in 1908 than voted for Taft and Roosevelt together in 1912.

These 101,000 Republicans who were disgusted with the internal party warfare of 1912 and who refused to vote at all, will be called to the polls this year by the reunion of the Republican elements. Thus, in the four states which Democrats admit to be doubtful, Mr. Wilson confronts the necessity of making up the 67,000 votes which constitute the Bryan excess of 1908 as compared with the Wilson vote of 1912, and at the same time he must overcome the Republican reserve of 101,000 which is disclosed by the figures of the two elections. His handicap, therefore, is 168,000 in the race for the 81 electoral votes which these four "doubtful" states will have to give.

He can never overcome that handicap.

THE MEXICAN VOLCANO

The Mexican volcano is now in the most serious eruption that has ever been developed yet.

The United States government has shown its utmost patience and leniency in dealing with that unfortunate country, cursed as it has been with selfish, grafting and incompetent rulers. The limit of our patience has been reached and it would seem that the avoidance of war is well nigh impossible. In 1898, the peace-loving McKinley had confidently hoped to avoid a war with Spain until the battleship Maine was blown up, and after that event, he entertained but the slightest hope that war could be avoided between the two countries.

The recent attack on a small detachment of General Pershing's forces is very likely to result in rendering war inevitable, just as the blowing up of the battleship Maine did in 1898.

As every well informed person knows Mexico has no munition factories of any consequence, nor has she the skilled workmen with which to either construct or operate them, and as all of her arms have been obtained from this country, which have now been cut off, and as our navy can easily blockade her coast, it will be seen that Mexico would be entirely at our mercy.

The 1916 campaign will be Woodrow Wilson versus the Republican party. Democracy is Wilson; he dictates its every policy; he uses the club on the Democratic house of representatives; he uses the whip on the Democratic senate; he writes the party platform. He is the party. Of course, Mr. Wilson is an asset. Democracy without him would not today figure in the running, but Woodrow Wilson is also a liability, as will be shown as the campaign proceeds.

Another fascinating thing about the politicians is the extreme seriousness with which they view themselves and their interests.

What has always puzzled us, though, is how the fool and his money happened to get together in the first place.

It's hard to realize that Charles E. Hughes was once a little shaver.

And what has become of Henri Richardi and his threatened suit for damages against the city?

Hear the peace dove twitter. The DuPont cotton and gun works have discharged 3,500 men.

"Five hundred cows to be sold at $25.00 apiece." The writer heard the following remark between two farmers in the city of Charlevoix the other day. Meaning, that unless there was a change in the price of butter and cream, there would be five hundred cows for sale in northern Michigan this fall at $25 apiece.

That don't sound good, Brother Farmer. I think there is a better way out of it. Do you know or realize that every pound of butter that you make and sell at 20 or 25 cents per pound, that if the same milk that makes the pound of butter would make two and one-half pounds of cheese, which is now being shipped in and sold to you, and me, Brother Farmer, as high as 25 cents a pound, or if you want a pound of cheese you can trade a pound of butter, if it is No. 1, for a pound of cheese, by adding a few cents to the purchase price. Don't that sound good, when the same milk that made your pound of butter would make two and one-half pounds of cheese—a full cream cheese, too.

You say "how do you know it?" Well, I have made cheese, also was a partner in a co-operative cheese plant. In northern Dakota and New York state, is made the cheese that is shipped to Charlevoix. We sent it, pay the freight, and give away our own material. Sounds fine, don't it. No wonder they say a hard working farmer is a fool.

Right in this vicinity thousands of gallons of cream is being weekly shipped to the Blue Valley Creamery located at Grand Rapids. There they use 30 pounds or better of milk for a pound of butter fat. Do you know that 30 pounds of milk would make three pounds of cheese, which would be worth in Charlevoix, today, 70 cents. How much do you realize in cash for this amount from the Blue Valley company? About 31 cents, making in all a loss of about 40 cents on one pound of butter.

Still, some folks groan, claim they are always hard up, but at the same time do not realize what they are doing. We cannot blame the grocer in Charlevoix because butter is 20 cents a pound and cheese 25 cents. The middleman must be paid and also the freight.

We must also keep in mind that when the grocer buys more butter than he can dispose of to home trade, he is compelled to dump it into tubs and dispose of it to outside parties at the best price he can obtain. We would be compelled to do the same thing if we were in his place.

The thing for us to do, Mr. Farmer, is to get together and build a co-operative cheese factory, hire our own cheese maker, have our own sales manager and secretary, and work together like brothers. Instead of selling our milk for 75 cents per hundred, we will get $2.00.

I, myself, will donate a site for the plant if the location is thought suitable. I would like to hear from all who are interested in this matter. We can work together the same as they do in other states. They do it there—why not here? Don't get it into your head that we will be unable to obtain enough milk—we will have plenty if the plant is built.

In one plant of which I was a member, it took two days' milk to make the first cheese. But inside of two years the plant was getting the milk from 500 cows. Voice your views on the matter, either through these columns or direct to me.

Beaver Tales.

The Indians say that if a beaver seal out from the parents' lodge fails to find a mate he is set to repair the dam. If he fails a second time he is banished.

An Arab writer has the same story. He tells us that those who buy beaver skins can distinguish between the skins of masters and slaves. The latter have the hair of the head rubbed off because they have to pound the wood for their masters' food and do it with their heads.

The 32nd and 33rd regiments are being completely fitted out and expect to leave soon. Monday, the second dose of typhoid serum was given. There now remains one more injection and the vaccination. Many of the boys are sick from it, one of them being yours truly. However, high spirit still prevails in camp and a majority of the boys are in good health.

Won Their First Fight

CAMP FERRIS, July 11.—Michigan troops fought their first battle today and won.

The artillery consisted of shovels, picks, axes, gunny sacks and water. The enemy, a fire, was effectively annihilated, after it had threatened to take the offensive, and sweep the entire reservation, an area of thousands of acres, covered with timber and underbrush, which is unusually dry because of the lack of rain. In no place in Mexico could the heat have been more intense than on the battlefield, three-quarters of a mile northeast of brigade headquarters.

It was ten o'clock Sunday morning, when smoke, arising from over a hill, aroused the suspicion of Adjutant General Daniel W. Smith. An orderly, sent to investigate, reported that the forest was on fire. Adjutant General Smith dispatched two troops of cavalry, the engine ring company and a part of the artillery to the scene. After a battle of three hours the fire was extinguished, although, when the troops arrived, several big trees and dry logs were blazing, and it was almost impossible to approach within fifty feet. By execution of a flank movement, digging a trench, and throwing the dirt on the combustible material in the path of the flames, it was completely checked. Had the fire received a much better start, it is probable that the entire brigade would have been pressed into service.

CHAPTER IX.

FAIRLY at Hope were nearly if not quite as prosperous as those at Ouar, for Curtis Gordon's advertising had yielded large and quick returns. His experiment during the previous summer of bringing his richest stockholders north had been a great success. They had come ostensibly at his expense and, once on the ground, had allowed themselves to be fairly hypnotized.

He entertained them on a scale that was almost embarrassing, and when they returned to their homes they could only another in their praise of the financial genius who was leading them to the promised land of profits and preferred stock. As a matter of course they one and all advised their friends to buy, vouching for the fabulous richness of Hope "consolidated," and, since their statements were backed by a personal examination of the property, subscriptions came pouring in.

All in all, the excursion had proved so profitable that Gordon had arranged for another, designed to accommodate new investors and promising "prospects." Preparations for their welcome were under way when Natalie arrived.

The girl and her mother talked late that evening, and Gordon saw on the following morning that Gloria at least had passed a trying night, but he gave himself no uneasiness. Emotional storms were not unusual. He always disregarded them as far as possible, and usually they passed off quietly. During breakfast he informed them:

"I received a letter from Miss Gordon yesterday's mail. She is to be one of the new party."

"Did you invite her to return this summer?" Mrs. Gerard inquired.

"Yes."

"I remember her very well," said Natalie, "too well, in fact. I thought her very bold."

"She is one of our largest investors, and she writes she would enjoy spending a fortnight here after the others go back."

"Will you allow it?"

"Allow it? My dear Gloria, I can't possibly refuse. In fact, it would be the height of indiscreteness not to urge her to do so. She is welcome to stay as long as she chooses, for these quarters are as much hers as ours. I hope you will be nice to her."

Mrs. Gerard made no answer, but later in the morning sought Gordon in his private office.

"I preferred not to discuss the Golden woman before Natalie," she explained coldly. "But you don't really intend to have her here, do you?"

"Most assuredly."

"Then I shall have to tell her she is not welcome."

"You will do nothing of the sort, my dear. You will assume the duties of hostess, for which no one is more charmingly qualified."

Mrs. Gerard's lips were white with anger as she retorted:

"I shall not allow that woman under the same roof with Natalie."

"As usual, you choose the most inconvenient occasion for insisting upon your personal dislikes."

"My dislike has nothing to do with the matter. I overlooked her behavior with you last year, as I have overlooked."

"I shall not allow that woman under the same roof with Natalie."

ed a good many things in the past, but this is asking too much."

Gordon's coldness matched her own as he said:

"I repeat, this is no time for jealousy."

"Jealousy! It's an insult to Natalie."

"Miss Golden is one of our largest stockholders."

"That's not true! I had Denny look up the matter."

"So?" Gordon dared up angrily. "Denny has been showing you the books, eh? He had no more right to do that than you had to pry into my affairs. While Miss Golden's investment may not be so large as some others, she has influential friends. She did yeoman service in the cause, and I can't allow your foolish fancies to interfere with my plans."

"Fancies!" cried the woman furiously. "You behaved like a schoolboy with her. It was disgraceful. I refuse to let her associate with my daughter."

"Aren't we drawing rather fine distinctions?" Gordon's lip curled. "In the first place, Natalie has no business here. Since she came, uninvited, for the second time, she must put up with what she finds. I warned you last summer that she might suspect."

"She did. She does. She discovered the truth a year ago." Mrs. Gerard's usually impassive face was distorted, and she voiced her confession with difficulty.

"The devil!" ejaculated Gordon. "The woman nodded. 'She accused me last night. I tried to lie, but—God! How I have lived through these hours I'll never know.'"

"Hm-m!" Gordon reflected briefly. "Perhaps, after all, it's just as well that she knows. She would have found it out sooner or later, and there's some satisfaction in knowing that the worst is over."

Never before had his galling cynicism been so frankly displayed. It chilled her and made the plea she was about to voice seem doubly difficult.

"I wish I looked upon the matter as you do," she said slowly. "But other people haven't the same social ideas as we. I'm—crushed, and she—Poor child! I don't know how she has the courage to face it. Now that she has heard the truth from my own lips I'm afraid it will kill her."

Gordon laughed. "Nonsense. Natalie is a sensible girl. Disillusionment is always painful, but never fatal. Sooner or later the young must confront the bald facts of life, and I venture to say she will soon forget her schoolgirl morality. Let me explain my views of—"

"Never!" cried the woman, aghast. "If you do I shall—"

"She checked herself and buried her face in her hands. 'I feel no regrets for myself—for I drifted with my eyes open—but this—this is different. Don't you understand? I am a mother. Or are you dead to all decent feeling?'"

"My dear, I am the most tender hearted of men. Of course I shall say nothing, if you prefer, for I am subservient to your commands in all things. But calm yourself. What is done cannot be undone."

In more even tones Mrs. Gerard said: "You seem to think the matter is ended, but it isn't. Natalie will never allow us to continue this way, and it isn't just to her that we should. We can't go on, Curtis."

"You mean I must marry you?"

She nodded.

He rose and paced the room before answering. "I always supposed you understood my views on that subject. Believe me, they are unalterable and in no way the result of a pose."

"Nevertheless, for my sake and Natalie's, you will do it. I can't lose the one thing I love best in the world."

"It would seem that Natalie has filled your head with silly notions," he exclaimed impatiently.

"She has awakened me. I have her life to consider as well as my own."

"We are all individuals, supreme in ourselves, responsible only to ourselves. We must all live our own lives. She cannot live yours nor you hers."

"I am familiar with your arguments," Mrs. Gerard said wearily, "but I have thought this all out, and there is no other way."

He frowned in his most impressive manner, and his chest swelled ominously.

"I will not be coerced. You know I can't be bullied into a thing. I deny that you have any right to demand—"

"I'm not demanding anything. I merely ask this—this favor, the first one I have ever asked. You see, my pride is crumbling. Don't answer now; let's wait until we are both calmer. The subject came up—at least she approached it by asking about the coal claims. She is worried about them."

"Indeed?"

"She was told by a friend in the land office that our rights had been forfeit—" ed. I assured her—"

"I refused to heed the absurd rulings of the department if that is what she refers to."

"Then we have lost?" Mrs. Gerard's pallor increased.

"Technically, yes. In reality I shall show that our titles were good and that our patents should issue."

"But—the woman's bloodless fingers were tightly interlaced—"all I have, all Natalie has, is in those claims."

"Yes! And it would require another fortune the size of both to comply with the senseless vagaries of the interior department and to protect your interests. I grew weary of forever sending good hard earned dollars after bad ones merely because of the shifting whim of some theorist 5,000 miles away."

"Then I am afraid—" Mrs. Gerard's voice trailed off miserably. "It is all we have and you told me—"

Gordon broke in irritably: "My dear Gloria, spare me this painful fault-finding. If I can win for you I shall do so, and then you will agree that I acted wisely. If I lose—it will merely be the luck of the average investor. We played for big returns and, of course, the risks were great."

"But Mr. O'Neill told her his claims—" Gordon's blinding eyes warned her.

"O'Neill, eh? So he is the 'friend in the land office'! No doubt he also gave Natalie the suggestion that led to her association with affairs which do not concern her and more with her own conduct. Her actions with that upstart have been outrageous."

"What about your own actions with the Golden woman?" cried Mrs. Gerard, reverting with feminine insistence to the subject of their first difference. "What are you going to do about her?"

"Nothing."

"Remember, I refuse to share the same roof with her. You wouldn't ask it of your wife."

Now this second reference to a disagreeable subject was unfortunate. Gordon was given to the widest vagaries of temper, and this interview had exasperated him beyond measure, for he was strained by other worries. He exploded harshly:

"Please remember that you are not my wife! My ideas on matrimony will never change. You ought to know by this time that I am granite."

"I can't give up Natalie. I would give up much, for we women don't change, but—"

"A fallacy!" he laughed disagreeably. "Gordon me, Gloria, if I tell you that you do change; that you have changed; that time has left its imprint upon even you—a cruel fact, but true." He took a savage pleasure in her trembling, for she had roused all the devils in him and they were many.

"You are growing tired?"

"Not at all. But you have just voiced the strongest possible argument against marriage. We grow old. Age brings its alterations. I have ever been a slave to youth and beauty, and the years bring to me only an increasing appreciation, a more critical judgment, of the beautiful. If I chose to marry—well, frankly, the unattractive charms of a woman of my own age would have slight attraction for me."

"Then I will go," said Mrs. Gerard faintly.

"Not by any wish of mine," he assured her. "You are quite welcome to stay. Things will run along in the usual way—more smoothly, perhaps, now that we have attained a complete understanding. You have no place to go nor means with which to insure a living for yourself and Natalie. I would hate to see you sacrifice yourself and her to a Puritanical whim, for I owe you much happiness, and I'm sure I should miss you greatly. Some one must rule, and since nature has given me the right I shall exercise it. We will have no more rebellion."

Mrs. Gerard left the room dazed and sick with despair.

"We must go! We must go!" she kept repeating, but her fragile look alarmed Natalie far more than her words.

"Yes, yes!" The girl took her in her arms and tried to still the ceaseless trembling which shook the mother's frame, while her own tears fell unheeded.

"We must go! Now?"

"Yes, dearest! But where?"

"I suppose you need me, too, don't you? I haven't thought of that."

"Every hour!" The round young arms pressed her closer. "You won't think of—of leaving me."

Mrs. Gerard shook her head slowly. "No! I suppose that must be part of the price. But—pardonless! Friendless! Where can we go?"

"Mr. O'Neill—my Irish prince," faltered the daughter through her tears. "Perhaps he would take us in—"

"Omar Khayyam!" said Eliza Appleton, entering O'Neill's office briskly. "You are the general trouble-man, so prepare to listen to mine."

"Won't the kitchen due draw, or has a blizzard come off the hangar door?" Murray smiled. He was harassed by endless worries, a dozen pressing matters called for his instant attention; yet he showed no trace of annoyance.

"If so, I'll be right up and fix it."

"The kitchen chimney has a draft that threatens to draw Gus's salary out with the smoke every time I cook a meal, and the house is dandy. This is a real man's size tribulation; so, of course, I run to you. Simon Legree is at his tricks again."

"Leave it!"

The girl nodded her blond head vigorously.

"Yes; he's stolen Mrs. St. Claire's staves, and she and little Eva are out in the cold."

"What the deuce are you talking about?"

"Gordon, of course, and the two Germans, Natalie and Gloria. Town hall tonight. Come one, come all!"

"Oh!" O'Neill's eyes brightened.

"There have been terrible goings on over at Hope. I went up yesterday in my official capacity, to reconnoiter the enemy's position and to give him a preliminary skirmish, but the great man was sulking in his tent and sent word by a messenger for me to begone or look out for the bloodhounds. I can't be the haughty thing? I don't like to 'begone.' I refuse to quit when I'm told; so, of course, I paid my respects to Natalie and her mother. But what do you think I found? Mrs. St. Claire desolated. Eva dissolved in tears and her hair down."

"Will you talk sense?"

"Just try a little nonsense and see. Well, the great eruption has taken place, and the loss of life was terrible. Among those buried in the cinders are the dusky eyed heroine and her friend mother. It seems Eva had a hand in the over-seer's exposure."

"Yes, yes! It's about those coal claims. I knew it was coming."

"She told her mother of the horrid treachery, and mother lugged the complaint to Gordon and placed it in his lap. Result, confusion and odium from him. Even the family jewels are gone."

"Is Gordon broke?"

"He's wailing in money, but the coal claims are lost, and he wants to know what they're going to do about it. The women are ruined. He magnanimously offers them his bounty; but, of course, they refuse to accept it."

"Haven't he made any provision for them?"

"Coffee and cakes three times a day. That's all. He won't even provide transportation, and the troupe can't walk home. They refuse to stay there, but they can't get away. I've cabled the Review, overdraw my salary scandalously, and Dan is eager to help, but the worst of it is neither of those women knows how to make a living. Natalie wants to work, but the extent of her knowledge is the knack of frosting a layer cake, and her mother never even sewed on a button in all her life. It would make a lovely Sunday story, and it wouldn't help Curtis Gordon with his stockholders."

"You won't write it, of course."

"Oh, I suppose not, but it's maddening not to be able to do something. Since there's a few against manslaughter, the pencil is my only weapon. I'd like to jab it clear through that ruffian. Eliza's animated face was very stern, her generous mouth was set firmly."

"You can leave out the personal element," he told her. "There's still a big story there if you realize that it runs back to Washington and involves your favorite policy of conservation. Those claims belonged to Natalie and her mother. I happen to know that their locations were legal and that there was never any question of fraud in the titles; hence they were entitled to patents years ago. Gordon did wrong, of course, in refusing to obey the orders of the secretary of the interior even though he knew those orders to be senseless and contradictory, but the women are the ones to suffer. The government froze them out. This is only one instance of what delay and indecision at headquarters have done. I'll show you others before we're through. As for those two—You say they want to do something?"

"It's not a question of wanting. They've got to do something—or starve. They would scrub kitchens if they knew how."

"Why didn't they come to me?"

"Do you need a cook and a dish-washer?"

Murray frowned. "Our new hotel is (Continued on page six.)" nearly finished. Perhaps Mrs. Gerard would accept a position as—hostess."

"Hostess! In a railroad camp hotel? Who ever heard of such a thing?" Eliza eyed him incredulously.

O'Neill's flush did not go unnoticed as he said quietly:

"It is unusual, but we'll try it. She might learn to manage the business with a competent assistant. The salary will be ample for her and Natalie to live on."

Eliza laid a hand timidly upon his arm and said in an altered tone: "Omar Khasyam, you're a fine old Persian gentleman. I know what it will mean to those poor women, and I know what it will mean to you, for, of course, the salary will come out of your pocket."

He smiled down at her. "It's the best I can offer, and I'm sure you won't tell them."

"Of course not. I know how it feels to lose a fortune, too, for I've been through the mill. Don't laugh. You have a load on your shoulders heavier than Mr. Stinbad's, and it's mighty nice of you to let me add to the burden. I—hope it won't break your poor back. Now, I'm going up to your bungalow and lock myself into your white bedroom, end—"

"Have a good cry," he said, noting the supple moisture in her eyes. "Certainly not!" Eliza exclaimed indignantly. "I'm not the least bit sentimental."

CHAPTER X.

O'Neill's Men Have Faith.

NEIL'S talk with Mrs. Gerard upon her arrival from Hope was short and businesslike. Neither by word nor look did he show that he knew or suspected anything of the real reason of her break with Gordon. Toward both her and Natalie he preserved his customary heartiness, and their first constraint soon disappeared. Mrs. Gerard had been plunged in one of those black moods in which it seems that no possible event can bring even a semblance of happiness, but it was remarkable how soon this state of mind began to give way before O'Neill's matter of fact cheerfulness. He refused to listen to their thanks and made them believe that they were conferring a real favor upon him by accepting the responsibility of the new hotel. Pending the completion of that structure he was hard pressed to find a lodging place for them until Eliza and her brother insisted that they share the bungalow with them. A thing O'Neill had not felt at liberty to ask under the circumstances. Not was the fact of the brother and sister less than his. They received the two unfortunates as honored guests.

They Discussed the Wonderful Change in Their Fortunes.

Gradually the visitors began to feel that they were welcome, that they were needed, that they had an important task to fulfill, and the sense that they were really of service drove away depression. Night after night they lay awake discussing the wonderful change in their fortunes and planning their future. Natalie at least had not the slightest doubt that all their troubles were at an end.

One morning they awoke to learn that O'Neill had gone to the States, leaving Mr. Gray in charge of affairs at Omar during his absence. The physician, who was fully in his chief's confidence, gravely discussed their duties with them, and so discreet was he that they had no faintest suspicion that he knew their secret. It was typical of O'Neill and his "boys" that they should show this chivalry toward two friendless outcasts. It was typical of them also that they one and all constituted themselves protectors of Natalie and her mother, letting it be known through the town that the slightest rudeness toward the women would be promptly punished.

While O'Neill's unexpected departure caused some comment, no one except his trusted lieutenants dreamed of the grave importance of his mission. They knew the necessities that bounded him, they were well aware of the trembling insecurity in which affairs now stood, but they maintained their cheerful industry, they pressed the work with unabated energy, and the road crept forward foot by foot, as steadily and as smoothly as if he himself were on the ground to direct it.

Thus for O'Neill's rivalry with the trust had been friendly, if spirited, but his action in coming to the assistance of Mrs. Gerard and her daughter raised up a new and vigorous enemy whose methods were not as scrupulous as those of the Heldemans.

Gordon was a strangely unbalanced man. He was magnanimous, his gentleness was really heart warming, yet he was perfectly cold blooded in his selfishness. He was cool and calculating, but interference roused him to an almost insane pitch of passion. Fickle in most things, he was uncompromising in his hatreds. O'Neill's generosity in affording sanctuary to his defiant mistress struck him as a personal affront, and it fanned his dislike of the rival into a consuming rage. It was with no thought of profit that he cast about for a means of crippling O'Neill.

Dan Appleton entered the bungalow one evening, wet and tired from his work, to find Eliza peering the floor in agitation.

"What's the matter, sis?" he inquired, with quick concern.

His sister pointed to a copy of the Review which that day's mail had brought.

"Look at that!" she cried. "Read it!" "Oh, your story, eh?"

"Read it!"

He read a column and then glanced up to find her watching him with angry eyes.

"Gee, that's pretty rough on the chief, kid! I thought you liked him," he said gravely.

"I do! I do! Don't you understand, dummy? I didn't write that. They've changed my story—distorted it. I'm furious!"

Don whistled softly. "I didn't suppose they'd try anything like that, but they did a good job while they were at it. Why, you'd think O'Neill was a grafter and the S. I. and N. nothing but a land grubbing deal!"

"How dared they?" the girl cried. "The actual changes aren't so many—just enough to alter the effect of the story—but that's what makes it so devilish. For instance, I described the obstacles and the handicaps Mr. O'Neill has had to overcome in order to show the magnitude of his enterprise, but Drake has altered it so that the physical conditions here seem to be insuperable, and he makes me say that the road is doomed to failure. That's the way he changed it all through."

"It may topple the chief's plans over. They're very insecure. It plays right into the hands of his enemies, too, and, of course, Gordon's press bureau will make the most of it."

"Heavena, I want sympathy, not abuse!" wailed his sister. "It's all due to the policy of the Review. Drake thinks everybody up here is a thief. I dare say they are, but how can I face Mr. O'Neill?"

Dan shook the paper in his fist. "Are you going to stand for this?" he demanded.

"Hardly. I cabled the office this morning, and here's Drake's answer."

She read: "Stuff colorless. Don't allow admiration warp judgment." Can you beat that?"

"He thinks you've surrendered to Murray, like all the others."

"I hate him!" cried Eliza. "I detest him!"

"Who? O'Neill or Drake?"

"Both. Mr. O'Neill for putting me in the position of a traitor and Drake for presuming to rewrite my stuff. I'm going to resign, and I'm going to leave Omar before Murray O'Neill comes back."

"Don't be a quitter, sis. If you throw up the job the paper will send somebody who will lie about us to suit the policy of the office. Show 'em where they're wrong; show 'em what this country needs. You have your magazine stories to write."

Eliza shook her head. "Both the magazines and the whole business! I'm thinking about Mr. O'Neill. I—I could cry. I suppose I'll have to stay and explain to him, but—then I'll go home."

"No! You'll stay right here and go through with this thing. I need you."

"You? What for?"

"You can perform a great and a significant service for your loving brother. He's in terrible trouble!"

"What's wrong, Danny?" Eliza's anger gave instant place to solicitude.

"You—haven't stolen anything?"

"Lord, no! What put that into your head?"

"I don't know, except that's the worst thing that could happen to us. I like to start with the worst."

"I can't sulk in the jungle any more. I'm a bad loser, sis."

"Oh! You mean—Natalie? You—like her?"

"For a writer you select the most foolish words. Like, love, adore, worship—words are no good anyway. I'm dippy; I'm out of my head; I've lost my reason. I'm deliciously happy and miserably unhappy. I—"

"That's enough!" the girl exclaimed,

"I can imagine the rest."

It was a fatal mistake for her to come to Omar and to this very house of all places, where I could see her every day. I might have recovered from the first jolt if I'd never seen her again, but— He waved his hands hopelessly. "I'm beginning to hate O'Neill."

"You miserable traitor!" gasped Eliza.

"Yes; that's me! I'm dead to loyalty; lost to the claims of friendship; I've fought myself until I'm black in the face, but it's no use. I must have Natalie."

"She's crazy about O'Neill."

"Seems to be for a fact, but that doesn't alter my fix. I can't live this way. You must help me or I'll lose my reason."

"Nonsense! You haven't any or you wouldn't talk like this. What can I do?"

"It's simple. Be nice to Murray and—end win him away from her."

"Is that all? Just make him love me?"

Dan nodded. "That would be fine if you could manage it."

"Why—you—say—!" She gasped uncertainly for terms in which to voice her indignant surprise. "Idiot!" she finally exclaimed. "You simply can't be so earnest."

"I am, though." He turned upon her eyes, which had grown suddenly old and weary with longing.

"You poor, foolish boy! In the first place, Mr. O'Neill will hate me for this story. In the second place, no man would look at me. I'm ugly!"

"I think you're beautiful."

"With my saub nose and big mouth and—"

"You can make him laugh, end when a woman can make a fellow laugh the rest is easy."

"In the third place, I'm mannish end vulgar, end besides—I don't care for him."

"Of course you don't, or I wouldn't ask it. You see, we're taking no risks. You can at least take up his attention, and—end when you see him making for Natalie you can put out your foot and trip him up."

"It wouldn't be honorable, Danny."

"Possibly. But that doesn't make any difference with me. You may as well realize that I've got beyond the point where nice considerations of that sort weigh with me. If you'd ever been in love you'd understand that such things don't count at all. It's your chance to save the reason end happiness of an otherwise perfectly good brother."

"There is nothing I wouldn't do for your happiness—nothing. But—oh, it's preposterous!"

She continued to scout suggestions that she could help him by captivating O'Neill and stoutly maintained that she had no attraction for men. Nevertheless when she went to her room she examined herself critically in her mirror.

In the days before O'Neill's return she suffered constant misgivings and qualms of conscience, but the sight of her brother revelling, expanding, fairly bursting into bloom beneath the influence of Natalie Gerard led her to think that perhaps she did have a duty to perform.

She was greatly embarrassed nevertheless when she next met O'Neill and tried to explain that story in the Review. He listened courteously and smiled his gentle smile.

"My dear," said he finally, "I knew there had been some mistake, so let's forget that it ever happened. I brought you a little present."

Slowly she unwrapped the parcel and then with a gasp lifted a splendidly embroidered kimono from its box.

"Ob—!" Her eyes were round and astonished. "Oh—! It's for me?"

It was a regal garment of heavy silk, superbly ornamented with golden dragons, each so cunningly worked that it seemed upon the point of taking wing.

"Why, their eyes glitter!" And they'd been the fire if I jabbed them! Oh—!" she stared at the gift in helpless amazement. "Is it mine, honestly?"

He nodded. "Won't you put it on?"

"Over these things? Never!" Again Miss Appleton blushed, for she recalled that she had prepared for his coming with extraordinary care. Her boots were even stouter than usual, her skirt more plain, her waist more stiff and her hair more tightly smoothed back. "It would take a thief's person to wear this. I'll always keep it, of course, and I'll worship it, but I'm not designed for pretty clothes. I'll let Natalie wear it."

"Natalie has one of her own done in underwear, and I brought one to her mother also."

"And you bought this for me after you had seen that foolish story over my signature?"

"Certainly!" He quickly forestalled her attempted thanks by changing the subject. "Now, then, Dan tells me you are anxious to begin your magazine work, so I'm going to arrange for you to see the glaciers and the coal fields. It will be a hard trip, for the track isn't through yet, but—"

"Oh, I'll take care of myself! I won't get in anybody's way," she said eagerly.

"I intend to see that you don't by going with you. So make your preparations, and we'll leave as soon as I can get away."

When he had gone the girl said aloud:

"Eliza Violet, this is your chance. It's understanding and mean, but you're a mean person, and the finger of Providence is directing you. She snatched up the silken kimono and ran into her room, locking the door behind her. Hurriedly she put it on, then posed before the mirror. Next down came her hair and a shower of pins. She arranged it loosely about her face and, rippling an artificial flower from her party hat, placed it over her ear, then awaited grandly to and fro while the

BOYNE CITY MEN TURN ROBBERS

HOLD UP PEDESTRIAN AND TAKE HIS ROLL

Later Arrested and Now in Otsego County Jail—Will Get Stiff Sentence.

On the evening of July 5th a party of local men motored to Gaylord in John Dornberg's car. Just out of Gaylord they passed a Polish lumberman whom they stopped and invited to have a drink. Two of the party got out of the car and one held the man while the other "went through him," relieving him of $22.00.

The party went on into Gaylord where they stopped at a saloon. The Pollock met another car coming out of Gaylord which stopped and drove him back to the village. The sheriff was notified and a deputy dispatched to arrest the men.

The party was found at a bar but Cobb, who has been mixed up in several escapades, stood a little apart and got away unnoticed.

Upon being questioned all four, Billy Vaughn, Steven Marble, John Dornberg and Ole Nelson, maintained ignorance of the escapade. Their stories conflicted however and a little third degree caused one to break and tell the entire story. Marble, Dornberg and Nelson were released, they having taken no active part in the hold up, but Vaughn, who held the Pollock while Cobb robbed him, was held.

Cobb showed up here the following day and word was sent to local authorities to arrest him. Officer McNally deputized Frank Kuhns and called at the Cobb residence. The man was located but asked to put on his shoes and stepping into another room slipped out and away. He has not yet been found.

The charge is a serious one and will mean a severe sentence upon conviction, for Cobb and Vaughn, and possibly the other three.—Boyer Citizen.

MERCHANTS REFUSE TO RENEW CONTRACT

Free Distribution of Petoskey Independent Thing of Past.

Petoskey merchants, who for the past three or four years have been financing the scheme of sending the Petoskey Independent free of charge to a large number of people in this and surrounding counties, have refused to renew their contract with the Churchill Publishing company, and hereafter those who desire the paper will be compelled to come across with the regular subscription price.

The object of the scheme on the part of the Petoskey merchants was to give as much publicity to their home town as possible, and at the same time draw what trade they could from neighboring territory.

The paper had a large circulation and went into homes on this basis where no other paper was read. In many instances its readers refused to take other papers, when to obtain them they would be compelled to pay the regular subscription price. The scheme proved too expensive on the part of the Petoskey merchants to maintain any length of time, and from now on the regular subscription price will be charged.

WEARIE WILLIES TOLD TO MOVE OUT OF TOWN

Told There is No Room in Charlevoix for Them.

Monday afternoon a complaint was made to Sheriff Novak and Chief of Police Jefferies that a gang of tramps were making their headquarters in the little grove just north of the Inn.

A trip to the grove revealed that five or six "weary Willies" had made a permanent camp there. They had procured an old stove from a nearby rubbish heap to be used to cook their meals, and also had a fine collection of boxes for chairs and tables.

They were given until nine o'clock that evening to get out of town or be picked up and placed in the county jail. All made their get away within the time limit and the residents in that section are relieved of their anxiety. Charlevoix cannot afford to harbor men of this class for a minute and the officers are to be congratulated for their efforts to keep the city a safe place to live.

FIRE AND RUNAWAY CAUSES EXCITEMENT

Team and Wagon Make Exciting Run Down Antrim Street.

Between the fire and the runaway, Antrim street and the west end of town furnished a thriller late last Thursday afternoon.

The fire was in the roof of a house owned by Jim Withers and occupied by a family named Thorpe. The roof was badly burned before the fire ladders could extinguish the flames.

The fire cart was drawn to the fire by one of Hooker's teams. Upon arriving at the fire, they were left standing close to a fence a short distance away. On the wagon was a hay rack, making a fine place for the kids to sit and watch the fire. Matters went smoothly until the team became frightened, and made a mad dash down the street, onto Antrim, thence east to the corner of Bridge, where they ran into a tree, stopping further progress. A number of kids were on the rack when the team began to run. All got off but three, and they were too frightened to make an effort to get off until the wagon struck the tree.

Even then they did not seem to realize the danger they had gone through.

DELIVERY CAR GOES OVER EMBANKMENT

Driver Claims Brakes Failed to Work—Narrow Escape.

One of C. Danto & Sons' delivery cars, driven by James Parsons, Jr., took a high dive over the embankment opposite the Fountain City house Monday afternoon.

Parsons, who was driving the car, had delivered a grocery order and was making the turn at the top of the hill. In backing up, the weight of the car proved too much for the brakes and went over the embankment. The driver stuck to his post, and turned over twice with the car, which finally came to a stop against the revetment. His escape from serious injury was marvelous. The top of the car was broken off, but otherwise no damage was done.

A team from the Argo Milling company pulled the car to the road, and the Ford "rambled right along."

ADVERTISING MICHIGAN PEACHES

HOME GROWN FRUIT NEEDS MORE PUBLICITY

Housewives Pay More for Outside Fruit Than is Asked for Home Grown Product.

It has been pointed out that many a Michigan housewife fills her fruit jars with peaches that come from regions other than the Michigan fruit belt, and if this custom is not to gain in popularity some money will need to be spent in advertising. Hence it is that Michigan peach growers are being urged to consider the matter of raising funds for publicity purposes.

Twenty-two states come to market with peaches before the Michigan product takes on color. Many of these twenty-two states have within their borders marketing associations that are comprehensive enough and efficient enough to reach every town in the country that can use peaches in carlot quantities. Because of this fact peaches are seen on the fruit stands and in the grocery stores soon after the cars begin rolling northward from the orchards in the southern states. Long before the middle of August, when the Michigan peach begins to soften, peaches are an old story everywhere but in the smaller towns and villages. In the larger cities of the state peaches are in the market in such quantities, and the prices are so reasonable, that not a few of the housekeepers conclude that the season is at hand to fill their fruit jars and accordingly so do, to the consternation of the Michigan growers.

It is argued that if ten or more thousands of dollars were expended in advising the Michigan women to postpone their peach canning operations until the home grown article was ready that the market for Michigan peaches would be greatly strengthened.

SHOWING UP CLAIMS OF "WETS"

MICHIGAN DRYS ARE PROBING RECORDS

Claim of "Wets" Concerning Being Friend of Working Class Proved Untrue.

The Michigan Dry Campaign Committee has made an investigation of the records of the legislature to learn whether it is true, as frequently stated in the present state-wide prohibition campaign, that "the liquor forces, brewers, etc., are the real friends of the workingman and therefore should receive the votes of the workingmen on this issue." In denying this view, the Michigan Dry Campaign Committee has issued the following statement:

Tireless efforts have been put forth by the "wets" in the present campaign to enlist the support of workingmen, and to prevent a "dry" landslide this fall. The "wets" have attempted to convey the impression that wet legislators have ever been the friends of the common people.

As a matter of fact, the performances of wet senators and representatives in the capitol have from beginning to end been a story of ceaseless endeavor to stifle everything that in any way has been progressive, or has been aimed at giving the people a voice in the government.

Investigations conducted by the Michigan Dry Campaign Committee, in the hope of ascertaining just how much untruth there is in the charges made by the wets, have brought to light the fact that the present campaign by the so-called Liberty Leaguers is but another of their campaigns of misrepresentation. Records on file in the journals of the Michigan senate and house prove that in the past ten years, year in and year out, the "wets" have fought to the finish every law which would change the old order of machine politics.

Wets Oppose Compensation Law.

Of all legislation upon the statute books of Michigan intended for the betterment and amelioration of the conditions of workingmen, the workingmen's compensation law holds highest place. This was passed in 1912. Every dry man in the house and senate voted for this bill. The only two ballots cast against it were by Senators Murtha and Scott of Detroit, the wet leaders.

This is the way the "wets" attempted to promote the interests and the welfare of the workingman of Michigan. This is but one of many such efforts by the wets to kill those measures which would help the man who has to earn his bread and butter by the sweat of his brow. This is the sort of friendly interest the wets have been showing in the welfare of their "brothers."

But the legislative crimes of the wets, as set forth in the journals of the Michigan house and senate, on file in the law library at the capitol, are practically without number.

When the question of the initiative and referendum was up in 1907 and 1908, it was the wets who fought it. It is unnecessary to name any names. Every wet in constitutional convention, when this issue was submitted, fought it. Every man who wanted to drive the liquor traffic out of the government was for it. The wets, to further their own interests, would have barred the voters of the state from any active participation in the affairs of government if they could, but luckily they were unsuccessful. They used every means within their power to stem the tide, and it wasn't through any fault of theirs that they didn't succeed.

Would Limit Public Control.

In 1909, when the question of the passage of the primary election law was before the house and senate, wets were again the only active opponents of the measure. This law, which was drawn up by Lieut. Governor Dickinson, has made it possible for the people to choose their own candidates for public office. It has given the workingmen's candidates a chance to be elected to office, where formerly they were locked out of the machine-controlled conventions.

But the wets didn't want any workingmen's representatives in the legislative halls. They wanted only their own machine-controlled, hand-picked mouthpieces, and when the law came up for final passage it was wet votes that cast against it. Of the few votes balloted in opposition to it, every one was cast by men with sympathies for the liquor interests. These were Senators Bolt, MacKay, Moriarty and Whitney.

In 1915 there was a law passed compelling railroads to provide sanitary camps for their construction crews. There was one vote in the senate against this law and it was cast by a wet. This was Senator Verdier's vote, and furnishes but another proof of the fact that the wets are for the wets first, last and all the time, and for no one else, notwithstanding the fact that for some time they have been attempting to pose as friends of the common people.

Dry Leaders Work for People.

On the other hand, in every instance where there has been any question up involving the interests of the workingman of Michigan, the drys have been back of these measures and have fought for them session after session.

It was the dry leader, Mr. Dickinson, who put through the primary law; the drys, all of them, in 1915 supported the law which provided for the organization of a state board of mediation and arbitration, to help solve labor difficulties in time of strikes. Again when the 54-hour law for women and children was passed, every dry in the house and senate cast his vote for it. This law forbids employers of women to compel them to work more than 54 hours a week, and forbids employment of children until they are past school age.

This has been the record of repeated sessions—the drys year in and year out have sponsored and striven with all their energies to put laws on the books which would give the people greater voice in the government, and afford them more opportunity for bettering their own conditions and earning a living. The wets, on the other hand, with equal consistency, have fought these measures and all measures which would remove machine influence from politics. They never at any time gave a rap for the interests of the workingmen, and they don't now. They simply think the people don't know enough about their legislative record to know whether or not the liquor interests have opposed or befriended the people.

Morris Richie and son, of Lebanon, Indiana, who have been spending some time at the Hotel Orient, left Thursday for their home.

HOW TO KILL OFF QUACK GRASS

PROCESS NOT COMPLICATED NOR DIFFICULT

Should Prevent Seed From Maturing and Starve Out Underground Parts.

The methods advocated for the control or eradication of quack-grass are more or less similar for all sections, according to data from the various state experiment stations and the department.

In the eradication of any weed which propagates by underground parts and also by the production of seeds, the fundamental principles to be recognized are, first, to prevent the plants from maturing seeds, and second, to starve out the underground parts by preventing the formation of leaves.

The roots of quack-grass growing on sod or pasture land are much nearer the surface than where the grass is growing in a cultivated field. For this reason, when it is desired to clear a field of quack-grass, it is often advisable to first utilize the field as a pasture or meadow, keeping the grass grazed or cut rather close for a year or so before attempting to kill it.

The process of killing quack-grass is not complicated nor difficult, but requires thorough, conscientious work and perseverance. The work should start in mid-summer by plowing the infested land only deep enough to turn over a furrow containing most of the grass roots. On sod or pasture land, 3 or 4 inches is usually the proper depth. On land which has not been in hay or pasture, the plowing should usually be slightly deeper. Ten days or two weeks after plowing, this sod should be thoroughly pulverized with a disk harrow, which will destroy any growth the plants may have made. Repeat this harrowing every 10 days or two weeks until fall, when the grass will be completely killed out.

In case of excessive rainfall after the land is plowed the grass may start growing again to such an extent that the harrow will not be effective in killing it. Under such circumstances it is advisable to plow the second time and break the land slightly deeper than at the first plowing. The following spring the land should be plowed to a good depth, in order to bury the many dead roots on the surface. In case a few sprigs of the grass are still alive, it is advisable to plant the fields in some intertilled crop, as corn or potatoes, or to sow some smother crop, as buckwheat or millet.

On very small areas, the grass may be destroyed by digging out all parts of the plant by hand or by smothering with tar paper. This, however, is practicable only for very small areas.

Earliest Theater.

What was probably one of the earliest theaters built was the theater of Dionysus, which was begun five centuries before Christ. The seating capacity of this remarkable building is said to have been 30,000, nearly four times that of our largest amusement palace. The theater of Dionysus was erected when Greek art and literature were in their prime. Here were presented to appreciative spectators the wonderful works of Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides.

Increase in Nut Growing.
The pecan, the chestnut and the hickory nut are the only native nuts domesticated, but sometimes forest and waste places can be planted not only to the nuts named, but to improved varieties of acorns, beechnuts, butternuts, gilberts, hazels, chinquapins and nut pines, to utilize waste lands, to diversify diet and to furnish articles of food that can be shipped long distances and be kept from year to year. The fad of today which substitutes nuts for meat may become a necessity tomorrow. Meanwhile it is interesting to note that the pecan has become within a few decades so important a crop that optimistic growers predict in another half century that pecan groves will be second only to the cotton fields in the south. There are sixty-seven varieties, of which more than a million and a half trees have been planted.—U. P. Hendrick, New York Experiment Station.

DO IT NOW

Charlevoix People Should Not Wait Until It Is Too Late.

The appalling death-rate from kidney disease is due largely to the fact that the little kidney troubles are usually neglected until they become serious. The slight symptoms often give place to chronic disorders and the sufferer may slip gradually into some serious form of kidney complaint.

If you suffer from backache, headaches, dizzy spells; if the kidney secretions are irregular of passage and unnatural in appearance, do not delay. Help the kidneys at once.

Doan's Kidney Pills are especially for kidney disorders—they act where others fail. Over one hundred thousand people have recommended them. Here's a case at home:

Mrs. John Hull, 102 W. Lincoln Ave., Charlevoix, says: "About a year ago I had a severe attack of lumbago. I suffered greatly and tried many remedies, but got no relief until I took Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store. Later I was again having trouble from weak kidneys and backache. I again took Doan's Kidney Pills and they acted promptly in bringing me relief."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Hull had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

New Crimper For Blasting Fuses.

It is quite evident that a crimper which depends on flattening the sides of the copper shell to contract the diameter of a detonator is wrong in principle. A new crimper recently placed on the market by manufacturers of explosives operates on an entirely different principle. The salient feature of this crimper is that on crimping the top of the detonator is contracted uniformly, and a groove is formed in the copper shell about one-eighth of an inch wide. The shell is pressed firmly and uniformly into the fuse, but not far enough to break or separate the powder train.—Engineering Magazine.

To Lengthen a Twist Drill.

Sometimes when drilling a hole in a difficult piece of work it is found that the drill is just a little too short. The drill can be easily extended to cut through the metal by wrapping the shank with a layer of fine emery cloth or several layers of paper before inserting it into the taper hole.

RURAL CARRIERS CLOSE CONVENTION

MEET AT BATTLE CREEK NEXT YEAR

W. F. Jehnzen, of Rodney, Elected President—Rex Anthony Vice President.

The Michigan Rural Carriers' association concluded its fourteenth annual convention in this city last Thursday. In all, over a hundred delegates and their wives were in attendance.

As we went to press last week, the convention was being addressed by George H. VanPelt on the subject of good roads. Van made a hit with the carriers and his speech will appear in a future number of the "R. F. D. News," the association's official publication. He was also made an honorary member of the association.

The report of the credentials committee revealed that 34 counties of the state were represented at the convention. At Thursday morning's session occurred the yearly election of officers, also of delegates to the National convention held in Chicago, with the following result:

President—W. F. Jehnzen, Rodney.

Vice president—Rex Anthony, Ada.

Secretary—F. A. Butler, Charlevoix.

Treasurer—T. E. Abbs, Eau Claire.

Delegates to national convention—L. P. Royce, Owosso; A. F. Korneck, Saginaw; G. E. Coon, Ashley; Nelson Mattison, Genesee; and Robert Walker of Wayne.

Battle Creek was chosen as the place where the next state convention will be held. The first rural route in the state was established near Battle Creek, and the coming convention will be in the form of an anniversary in memory of the occasion.

Several resolutions were passed, one of which was direct to the United States department, asking that no routes be established with a carrying distance of over 25 miles.

Charlevoix and its citizens also were remembered, as the following resolution will testify:

"Resolved, That we heartily thank the citizens of Charlevoix, and particularly Postmaster Finucan and Brother Butler, for the splendid entertainment provided and for the cordial hospitality shown us during our stay in the beautiful city of Charlevoix."

OWNERS OF AUTOMOBILES MUST PROVIDE DIMMERS

State Law Will Be Enforced and Prosecutions Made.

Hundreds of automobile accidents have occurred in the state this year which could have been prevented by the motorist living up to the state law which provides that all cars shall be equipped with some apparatus whereby the lamps may be dimmed. The police officials in all cities have been notified to see that this law is enforced, and Chief of Police Jeffries urges that all local motorists acquaint themselves with this law and equip their car accordingly. The following is the law taken from the Michigan Motor Vehicle law, section 16:

"Every motor vehicle or other vehicle equipped with and using electric light or lights upon any of the public highways of this state, shall be provided and equipped with some practical and efficient device or devices whereby the forward light or lights of such vehicle may be dimmed or lessened at the will of the driver or chauffeur to such an extent that such electric light or the reflection therefrom through said forward light or lights will not interfere with the sight of nor temporarily blind the vision of the driver of an approaching vehicle; and it shall be the duty of every chauffeur or driver of such a motor vehicle or other vehicle equipped with and using electric lights upon the public highways of this state to effectually apply such dimmer to the forward light or lights of the vehicle being driven by him and cause such light or lights to be dimmed or lessened so as not to interfere with the sight of nor temporarily blind the vision of the driver of any approaching vehicle."

It is the intention of the police department to see that this law is strictly enforced."

Died Wednesday.

Mrs. Josephine Deikiwicz died at her home on Antrim street, Wednesday, July 5, from cancer.

Funeral services were held from the home Friday afternoon. Burial at Brookside cemetery.

Among the Players and Caddies

The following boys have been added to the caddie register at the golf course: Joe Allard, Clyde Solomon, Archie Johnson, William Walker, Harold Daniels, Edward Shanahan, Percy Fuller, Clayton McFarlane, Joe Hamilton, Charles Mann, Tom Nowland, J. C. Marshall, Carlton Oberlin, Harold Stites, Archie Shearer, Thaddeus Brown, Arden Ulrich, Harold Geiken, Vincent Olach, Frank Vandicar, Paul Miles, Jack Waterman, Will Hampton, Charlie Barnhart, Dick Hammet, Floyd Brown and Aubrey Block. To the Sunday registry the names of Charles Ilyck has been added as member 152.

Mike Zagorski, number 37, has gone to work at the Geiken fisheries. His number was taken by Otto Harrington and Harrington's 23 by Leon Wilson. Virle Crandle has been given number 19.

Caddies must remember that working only a day or two at the links is not enough to entitle them to a job eating on that caddie excursion. What we want is steady caddies. And although the work is not quite as heavy this year as at this time last year we want the boys to stay on the job until the full swing is on, when there will be lots of work for every boy.

Last year the club printed a folder containing golf rules and suggestions for players and caddies. This is a good thing to have all the time on the course. Each caddie is requested to have one in his pocket constantly for reference, and to learn what is in it far as possible. Any boy who knows what the folder says and works by what he knows will make a good caddie.

The boys are reminded of the 10 per cent given on money saved and banked in one of our local banks. The deposits must be made frequently, not all at once at the end of the year. This should be remembered.

Harold McCafferty and Carl Gor-

dan are carrying ice for the cooler again this year. There is to be a sanitary fountain installed this week.

There are many number of requests from the players to be allowed to hire some lad or another steadily. Caddies are reminded that these must be taken seriously. When a player falls in love with you, that's a good sign that you have been a good caddie, it is no sign that he would be a good man to work for always. The caddie who makes the most players want to hire him "steady" is the one who has the best slant at some prize money this fall. Remember that.

Alcox and Gaskin announce scores of 72 and 76 respectively on the course, the new 9-hole putting course.

Mr. William Watson, the professional, has his days well filled with lessons now, making the days valuable (and strenuous) for the lesson caddie, who is Martin Halverson this week. Halverson is number 5.

Ernie Olney, patrolman, has been setting up the new Durand steel lockers purchased for the club house. Ernie says that being in the right church but the wrong pew wouldn't bother him much, if Alcox would help him occasionally.

The caddie master's mother and sister, Mrs. T. L. Rickaby and Dorothy, came on the Manitou last Saturday to spend July and August in Charlevoix.

Are all the badges in now? If not, let's have them.

New boys are asked not to be disappointed when they are refused numbers these days and asked to return a few days later. It would be worse than useless to keep taking on new caddies when there is hardly work for those who are already registered. There will be work for all in a day or two, surely.

NEW COUNTY AGENTS FOR U. P.

SCHOOLCRAFT AND MENOMINEE HIRE ADVISERS

Upper Peninsula Counties Set Example for Entire State—Charlevoix Should Get in Line.

Two more upper peninsula counties, Schoolcraft and Menominee, making eight altogether, have hired county agents who began their work July 1. These positions were filled by two Michigan men, E. G. Amos of Henderson, and Eldon B. Hill of Davison.

In proportion to its size, the upper peninsula has more county agents to its credit than the lower peninsula. These northern counties where agriculture is still in its infancy are determined to start right and avoid the mistakes of many of the older counties.

Advantages from Farm Bureau.

The farmers in these newer counties, under the direction of their agricultural advisers, will establish three and four year rotations of crops and, in this way, escape the evil results of "soil-mining." They will attempt to produce only those crops adapted to their soil and climate. "Scrub" cattle and "scrub" seed will be replaced with pure blooded stock and good seed which will not only yield more but will also command a better price on the market. The county agent will be in a position to bring the farmers of his county in touch with the best producers of stock and seed and he will also be able to point out the best outlets for their surplus. Plant and animal diseases will be met and checked in their beginning through organized efforts instead of being allowed to rage rampant as hog cholera and late blight of potatoes have done in some unorganized counties. Through demonstrations on a few selected farms, the value and economy of tiling, the use of lime, the application of commercial fertilizers, and the use of green manure crops will be shown.

No farmer in these counties will be forced to do anything he doesn't want to do. Neither will the county agent bother a man unless he asks for assistance. The farmer who is willing to be helped, however, will be shown how he can improve his business, and, if the agent and the farmer together cannot solve some of the difficult problems which arise on a farm, the agent may, with no expense to the farmer, call on the United States department of agriculture or the state agricultural college for assistance. The county agent is the link which may now connect the practice of agriculture, represented by the farmer, and the science of agriculture, represented by the college and the United States department of agriculture. Without the county agent, as in the past, the science and the practice of agriculture have been too far apart to be of any mutual service.

Some Comparisons.

Menominee is larger and has a few more farms and about one-fifth more population than Charlevoix county, but Charlevoix has three times as many farms as Schoolcraft, twice the population, and the value of our farm property is over three times as great. Charlevoix also has the advantage of better climate and markets than either of these counties. Cheboygan county on our east has a county agent and the question of hiring one is under discussion in Antrim and Emmet. No one of these three counties has a population as large as Charlevoix. Will the farmers of Charlevoix remain inactive and indifferent to this matter while other smaller and less prosperous counties around us are reaping the reward of their greater progressiveness? This county is not backward in other lines. Why allow our agriculture to remain in the old rut while other lines of business are keeping pace with the progress of the age?

Charlevoix county has excellent schools for the children, she has fine hotels and resorts for her summer visitors, the streams and lakes are kept stocked with game fish for the wielders of the rod, and she is building miles of splendid highways which are very attractive to would-be resorters and settlers alike—but the farmer who has to help pay for all of these improvements is left, or permits himself to be left, to his own devices in the matter of improving his own conditions. How long, Mr. Charlevoix Farmer, will you remain blind to the requirements of your own advancement?

WARNS CITIZENS AGAINST BUYING

PIQUA TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY A HOAX

Such is Opinion of Gaylord Advance, Who Advises People to Spend Money at Home.

Below is published an item clipped from the Gaylord Advance, the leading newspaper of that thriving city. We want to congratulate the Advance on its willingness to protect its readers against fraud, even if it is a rather humiliating thing to do. The Advance accepted an advertising contract from the rubber company, and later finds good reason to believe that the firm is fraudulent, has no financial or moral responsibility. As soon as these conditions were found to be true, the paper, true to its duty, warns the public against patronizing the company. Following is the article in full:

A Warning to Our Readers—
“The Advance feels it a duty to warn its readers against sending any money to the Piqua Tire & Rubber Company, whose advertisement has been published in this and other Michigan weeklies for the past several weeks. We have good reasons for believing this firm is fraudulent, as we have received no response to our letters written to their references, and until such time as the firm can establish its financial and moral responsibility to our satisfaction we shall refrain from giving them further space in the columns of the paper. Do not pay them in advance for any goods you may order from them. It is better and far more satisfactory, anyway, to patronize the home dealer who protects you fully.”

The Courier received an advertising contract from the same firm some time ago. The rate offered for advertising was enticing. They promised to pay weekly, monthly, semi-annually, or any way to get the space. The Courier management investigated before accepting the contract, with the result that we could not find them rated with any of the number of responsible agencies. The contract was relegated to the waste paper basket, and no more thought given it until our attention was called to the above article. Reading this, we deemed it our duty to publish the article in full, knowing that other papers in the county had accepted the advertising contract and was publishing their advertisements each week.

Newspaper publishers are up against propositions of this nature every day. Advertising propositions of all kinds come to our desk, some bad, many worse. Invariably we give them a thorough investigation before acceptance. If the result is an acceptance. Everything that can be done to protect the public against fraudulent propositions of this nature is given our closest attention, with the result that advertisements appearing weekly in the Courier are bona-fide—from responsible firms who will back up all statements or offers made.

We have no use for the publisher of a newspaper who continually howls about his loyalty to the home community, and then falls for every fake advertising scheme that appears in his daily mail. Loyalty to home advertisers is very creditable to every newspaper publisher—but don't allow the glitter of an extra dollar blind you astary.

NO MORE LETTERS FROM CAMP FERRIS

Such is Information Received From Courier Special Correspondent.

For military reasons it has been decided that no one connected with the Michigan National Guard, either officer or private, shall supply news of any nature to newspapers of the state.

When the boys of Co. I went to Camp Ferris, the Courier made arrangements with Private Usher, a son of the editor, for weekly letters, containing all news of the camp and relating incidents of camp life. The letters of the past few weeks have been read with considerable interest, as the information published was authentic and reliable.

Just how the Courier will receive reliable news in the future is a problem, but if it can be secured, it will be published weekly.

BADLY INJURED IN RUNAWAY ACCIDENT

Horse Runs Away and Throws Bay Shore Woman Out of Buggy.

On Wednesday afternoon of last week Mrs. Bert Jones and three-year old son, who reside at Bay Shore, were thrown from their buggy when their horse ran away and were seriously injured. Mrs. Jones was injured internally and had several ribs broken. The baby had his right arm broken above the elbow.

They were taken to Petoskey hospital where Mrs. Jones' condition is reported serious. Pneumonia is now threatening and with her injuries places her in a critical condition.

Mrs. Jones and son had driven to the farm of a friend southeast of Bay Shore, the horse they were driving being usually very gentle and not afraid of anything. On their way home Mrs. Jones had raised her umbrella to protect them from the hot sun, and the horse noticing this became frightened and ran away.

He turned into the yard at what is known as the old Ramsby farm near Carpenter's corner, upsetting the buggy and throwing Mrs. Jones and baby out against a post.

INSTALLING NEW MACHINERY

McCann's Bakery to Greatly Increase Its Output.

As previously announced in these columns, McCann's bakery is about to install new and modern machinery which will not only greatly increase their output, but place them in a position to furnish the people of Charlevoix steam made bread, which is now being bought from outside houses and seems to be in great demand here.

A new Thompson Electric Molder is now here and ready for installation. The machine is one of the latest models and will do a large amount of work. New boilers will also be installed to be used for preparing the bread for market. This will place the bakery on an even basis with any in northern Michigan, not only in capacity, but quality of goods produced.

ROBBERS AT MACKINAW CITY

JEWELRY WORTH $700 WAS TAKEN

Jackson Cottage on the Beach Entered and Jewelry and Cash Lifted.

The cottage of George A. Jackson, on the beach at Mackinaw City, was entered last Thursday while the family were away and more than $700 worth of jewelry and $35 in money was taken. The officers are working on the case but so far have no clues.

The Jackson cottage is one of many pretty summer places on the Straits of Mackinaw.

Sheriff Purple, of Petoskey, who investigated the robbery says there are no clues to work on. The person, or persons, who robbed the cottage appeared, by their work, to have been ordinary cottage robbers for they left jewelry and diamonds valued at more than five hundred dollars, valuable papers, etc., taking only diamonds, money, watches and rings. A professional house robber would have taken the whole layout. The thirty-five dollars secured gave the men who accomplished the job means of getting out of this part of the country without first selling any of the loot. The family was away for the day and the robber entered the rear door, which was fastened with an ordinary lock, and with an ax cut the lock off a trunk where the small money box containing the jewelry was kept. A part of the loot was Masonic emblems set with diamonds, diamond rings, watches, etc., gifts to members of the family from friends.

Mr. Jackson is past grand master of the Grand Lodge F. & A. M. of Pennsylvania, the family home being in Pittsburgh. His wife, Mrs. N. Luella Jackson, as she is known here and in lodge circles, is past grand matron of the Order of the Eastern Star of Pennsylvania.

CLOSE CONTRACTS FOR LIGHTING SYSTEM

Work to Start on Dixon Avenue Lighting System in Fall.

The council at a special session last week, closed with the C. J. Litcher Electric company for 12,000 feet of cable to be used for the boulevard lighting system on Michigan and Dixon avenue. Practically all of the remaining supplies necessary to complete the work was given to the Westinghouse company.

The above companies will furnish the material, but the work will be done under supervision of the city officials. Some objections were made on account of not being able to secure the material and fixtures at once, but some of the company's representatives who did not get in on the deal, stated that they could promise nothing in the supply line for from six to ten months.

However, the supplies contracted for will be on the ground within 90 days, and work will begin on the lighting system late in the fall.

COMMISSION FORM OF GOVERNMENT

PETITION BEING CIRCULATED FOR ITS SUBMISSION

Voters of Charlevoix Will Render Their Decision at Fall Election—Many Signers.

Whether or not the citizens of Charlevoix desire to adopt a commission form of government, will be decided at the election this fall. A petition has been circulated during the past week and the required number of signatures placed thereon to submit the question this fall.

With reference to the power of the commission to transact the business of the city promptly and wisely, it has been the experience of the cities where the plan is now in use, that the business can be carried out more promptly and satisfactorily than is possible under the council plan. When a commission announces that the weeds must be cut, that the taxes must be paid, that the roads must be taken care of, the people expect results and hasten to observe the law. In other words the commission appears to exert salutary influence for law enforcement.

Instead of holding long night meetings and having lengthy debates and wranglings among councilmen, the commission meets in the day time, and attends to the business of the city the same as a board of directors transact the business of any corporation.

The problem of municipal government is perhaps the most important question before the American people today. It affects us in every phase of our daily life; through the health, water, fire, police and sewer departments. Every city government directly affects the health, life and property of the man, woman or child living within its limits, and the success of this government depends to what degree it actually touches the lives of the citizens. In many cities in the country steps have already been taken to solve this problem by the adoption of the commission form of government, and in every case where it has been permanently established it has proven a success. The commission form of government was first started by the City of Galveston in 1901 and the plan adopted by that city has been the nucleus around which most of the cities have built their commission governments.

The commission form of government is approved by so many cities because it is a change from a political form of government to a business form of government, and it is no less democratic for that change.

The commissioners are elected by the entire city not by wards as under the mayor and council plan. The wards and other divisions of the city are retained, but are used for conveniences in holding conventions and elections. With reference to the interests of the city, and the welfare of the people the division into wards is merely arbitrary. It is seldom that a man carries his business in the same ward in which he votes. In many cases men own more property in some wards than they do in

RAILROAD INSPECTS CRAWFORD FARMS

High Officials Study Needs for Future Development of District.

Grayling, Mich.—High officials of the New York Central lines have made an official inspection of the agricultural regions of Crawford county and also the Hanson State Military Reservation, says the Detroit Free Press.

The company is studying the future development of Northeastern Michigan and wants to understand the agricultural resources. The men were pleased at some of the fine clover, alfalfa and other crops.

The above shows what the New York Central lines are doing for Michigan. Let's take off our hats to this wonderfully large, important and influential railroad for what they are doing. This means that they are bringing their people right to our very doors. They have already got their line built through Crawford county.

New let Charlevoix county build a concrete road to meet them, so when they get off from there we can bring them over here easily and get them into the best county in the state.

This bulletin will undoubtedly attract much attention of the passer-by during the coming weeks, as it will have a message worth reading every day. Watch it for hot shots at the liquor traffic during the fight for state-wide prohibition.

BOAT OVERTURNS IN PINE LAKE

SEQUENOTA BUNCH SPEND SOME TIME IN WATER

Sitting in Overturned Boat in Water Up to Their Armpits When Rescued.

Four young Sequenota resorters had an experience on Saturday last that will be remembered the balance of their lives.

Jack Carpenter, a companion, and two young lady friends started out for a sail. When they had reached about the middle of Pine Lake, between Sequenota and the north shore, what little breeze had existed, died out entirely, and the boat lay becalmed on the placid water. However, the young people were out for a good time, and wiled away the time by signing, lunching, etc.

Their attention being taken up along other lines, they paid little attention to weather indications. All of a sudden a heavy gust of wind came down the lake, striking the sails of the boat, overturning it in an instant. The occupants were thrown into the water, and a scramble began to get upon the overturned boat. All but one of the party could swim, and with the assistance of other members of the party, she was pulled up on the upturned boat.

They remained upon the upturned boat for sometime before their plight was observed from shore. Rescue parties started both from the north shore and the Sequenota side about the same time, those from the north side of the lake reaching them first. The sail boat was partly submerged, the water reaching up to their arm pits as they sat upon the boat.

The bedraggled bunch were taken to their boarding houses at Sequenota none the worse for their experience, although having no desire to repeat it.

B. Y. P. U. Entertainment.

An amusing and educational exhibition will be a feature of the entertainment and refreshments will be served. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come and spend a pleasant evening.

CO. I OFFICERS TO RECRUIT MEN

ROOM FOR AT LEAST EIGHTY IN COMPANY

Lieutenant W. C. Spring, Sergeant L. W. Ellis and Private Potter Spent Two Days in City.

Lieutenant Spring, of Company I, 33rd Infantry, M. N. G., in company with Sergeant L. W. Ellis and Private Potter, all of East Jordan, were in the city on Thursday and Friday of last week, in an effort to obtain recruits for Co. I, which is some eighty men short.

Lieutenant Spring stated that the boys from Charlevoix, Norwood and East Jordan were in fine condition and ready on a moment's notice to entrain for the Mexican border or any place designated them. He was particularly anxious to get men from this city for his own company, although recruiting for the entire regiment. During the two days stay, however, he failed to obtain even one recruit from this city, which is to the regret of all. In an interview he stated:

"East Jordan is not a large place and we took more men than we had any right to out of there when we went a few weeks ago," said Lieut. Spring. "We are very anxious to have Charlevoix and Petoskey help us out as we are so closely connected in a business and commercial way and each place is much interested in the welfare of the other."

"The regiment is badly in need of recruits at the present time and it seems rather difficult to get them. The country is just marking time at the border to get men and get them uniformed and trained ready for service before telling Carranza to come across, and I feel certain that our regiment will either be sent to El Paso or to Honolulu where we will relieve a regiment of regular seasoned troops, who will be sent into Mexico."

"In either case we will see active service for our country but perhaps no actual firing line service at present. We have a number of good prospects at present and hope to secure a number of men for Company I within a short time."

Dr. Antrim Will Speak.
Red Letter Day for the Methodist church next Sunday. In the morning, Dr. Eugene Antrim, of Decatur, Ill., will preach. In the evening the pastor will preach on "The Call of the World."

Dr. Antrim is pastor of one of the largest churches in the United States. His Sunday school has a enrollment of 3,000. The public are cordially invited to hear this eloquent man.

Good Cooks

are a blessing to mankind.

Properly selected and well cooked food is positive protection against dyspepsia and a hundred other ills.

The bread winner's earning capacity is increased 50% by the right kind of food properly cooked.

So we say "blessings on the good cook." She generally earns a lot more than she is paid.

There are numerous types of good cooks with various opinions but they are all agreed upon one subject—that pure, well made materials are essential to good results, and were a very important factor in their success.

Lily White

"The Flour the Best Cooks Use."

is a decided favorite with them.

They believed in the theory "a workman is judged by the quality of his tools" so started using Lily White flour.

Their experience with Lily White was delightful and they told their friends about it.

That is how Lily White flour secured its excellent reputation.

We did not give to Lily White the popularity it enjoys. We did make the quality right and have kept it right.

The Women of Michigan gave Lily White Flour its reputation.

Because Lily White flour baked the best bread and pastries. It will do the same for you. Do not be put off any longer; demand Lily White "the flour the best cooks use."

HARBOR BOY WAS KILLED BY TRAIN

CAR SMASHED TO BITS AT CROSSING

Percy Bennett Badly Injured and His Son, Leo Bennett, Dead at Harbor Springs.

Harbor Springs, Petoskey and all of Northern Michigan was saddened Sunday evening by the terrible accident at the Harbor Springs Lumber company crossing at Harbor Springs, where Leo Bennett, age seven years, was almost instantly killed and his father, Percy Bennett, chief engineer at the Harbor Springs Lumber company mill, was so badly injured that his chances for recovery are slim.

The accident happened at just 6 o'clock when the Harbor Springs train, leaving Petoskey at 5:30 o'clock and carrying a large number of summer tourists as well as residents of this district, struck the automobile being driven by Mr. Bennett and with the young son riding in the rear seat.

As near as can be learned from witnesses Mr. Bennett evidently is not what people term an experienced driver, or one who has been through many tight places and knows what to do with a car in a pinch. Running onto the track from the south from the mill, as the Harbor train was approaching from the east, he evidently did not see it or hear it until he was onto the track, lumber piles and buildings making it impossible to see down the track either way.

He stopped the car and evidently becoming confused, stepped on the wrong foot lever and instead of backing off the track, he evidently shot ahead and was struck by the engine of the train.

The car was thrown quite a distance away, possibly thirty or forty feet. It struck a telephone pole and broke this off. The car was completely demolished and Mr. Bennett, still in the wreckage was smashed up badly about the body and head.

The son was thrown clear of the car and his body badly crushed. He died almost instantly.

Physicians say they will be unable to determine the exact extent of the injuries of Mr. Bennett for a day or

WOMAN GAINED GREAT DEAL BY VISIT OF HER FRIEND, SHE AVERS

Grand Rapids Woman Was Told About Tanlac and Took It With Good Results.

"A friend of mine on a visit here first recommended Tanlac to me," said Mrs. Alvin Burgin, of 919 Ottawa Street, Grand Rapids, "and I made up my mind to use the medicine."

"It has helped me so much that I want to help others by telling them about it," she continued, "and I know that it will do wonders if used regularly."

"I was in pretty bad shape," Mrs. Burgin then went on to say, "suffering from ulceration of the stomach. Nothing ever afforded me the least relief, although I tried time after time to get something that would help me. I suffered from much soreness in my stomach, gas, palpitation of the heart, and severe headaches. I always had a full feeling after eating and sometimes felt as if I could not get my breath. I was very nervous, in fact—and slept very poorly at night. I often would wake up several times during the night."

"I had very little appetite and less energy. It was work for me to move even. I felt simply terrible all the time."

"Not long ago a friend came here on a visit and one day while I was complaining about feeling so badly she said, 'Have you tried Tanlac?' Everybody at home is taking it and it is helping a lot of people. When I replied that I had not used it she advised me to get a bottle and I did. Not long after I had begun taking Tanlac I began to feel very much better. I kept using the remedy and kept getting better all the time. I feel fine now. I am strong, energetic, and my stomach is in such good condition that I can eat what I want and digest it. I feel that I owe a great deal to my friend for giving me this piece of friendly advice."

Tanlac may be obtained at the store of B. A. Herman.

Tanlac may also be obtained at the following places: Hite Drug Co., at East Jordan, W. A. Hyslop at Boyne City.

so. He regains consciousness for short periods but most of the time does not know what is going on.

Later reports are to the effect that he was slightly deaf and it is thought that he never saw or heard the train until it struck his car.

The funeral of the little boy was held from the home at 2 o'clock Tuesday.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment—pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Right Now is THE TIME

Right now is the time to talk about your heating plant. Don't wait until you can look into the sky and see the snow flakes coming down as big as base balls and the wind blowing 57 miles an hour, and the house 10 degrees below zero. Now is the time to make up your mind and have the plant installed and ready for business. If you do this you will not be obliged to go out into some outdoor building and dig up that old heating stove and set it up on three legs and a couple of bricks. Then it turns up that Johnnie had the door during the summer to make a fire under and had left it on the back eighty. The stove pipe turns up missing and some is forced to make a drive to town for a new one. Then come the "cuss" words" putting up the pipe.

Now is the time to do away with all of this trouble. Let me explain to you the merits of the heating plants I sell. I will install a plant in your home and will not ask for a cent in payment until you acknowledge that you are entirely satisfied with it. What could be more fair.

I installed nearly a hundred plants last year and you cannot show me a dissatisfied customer. That is the way our plants work. Drop me a card or call at the house and see me. Look over what I have in the heating plant line. Can furnish all material, brick, etc. Furnaces with brick jackets or iron, any kind you may want. Let me explain them to you and you will buy.

THE SUMMER HOTEL BUSINESS

It is quite an eye-opener to travel around to the summer resorts and see the lavish and enormous palaces built for the summer vacation business. When you consider that most of these places can do a good business not over two or three months in a year, it does seem as if many of them must run at a loss.

Not merely do they have as heavy an operating expense as a fine city hotel, but they must pay interest on capital, depreciation, repairs, and taxes, out of the profits of a very short season. The managements may save something by transferring their force of employees from winter resort houses run alternately with the summer places. But at least there must be long between season periods when things go slow.

The modern wealthy American is a free spender, and he demands and is willing to pay for high standards of service and luxuries. Probably the servants in these places get their pay largely out of the free tipping prevalent, which must help a lot.

Smaller hotels run for people of moderate means look like a less risky proposition. These are very apt to depend for their service on school teachers or college students living near by, who can be hired at moderate rates and need be engaged only for a short season. Their equipment seems rather primitive to people used to high class hotels. There may be no electric bells and the guests may have to depend on oil lamps. But at the present cost of living a great many people are willing to put up with the lack of modern conveniences.

There are thousands of these small hotels in attractive scenes that get just about the same crowd of people year after year. If they provide good home cooking, comfortable beds, pure water, and good sanitation, a great many other lacks are overlooked. People return year after year, and the pleasure of meeting old friends counts more than the niceties of service.

HOT? HUH!

So you think it's hot, do you, at 80 to 85 degrees, with your electric fans and daily ice wagons. Well, if you think it's hot, what do you think the militia boys down along the lower Rio Grande are thinking about their climate?

There they have dust storms every evening and no electric fans; 100 to 110 degrees in the sun, and very little shade; sweaty garments that stick and itch, and nary a bathtub!
If they could happily be transported to this summer resort, they'd call for their winter underwear!

Moral: Heat is a comparative thing, anyway, and it isn't hot unless you think it is. So think it isn't!

Many Republicans have the idea that Frank B. Leland, of Detroit, candidate for governor, is a motor car manufacturer. This is not true.
Frank B. Leland is an Oakland county farmer who became a lawyer and is now engaged in the banking business in Detroit. He is not related to Henry M. Leland, of Detroit.

Some day when we have ample time, we are going to compute the exact amount of money this year's candidates would have saved if they had paid for their advertising in the first place, instead of mailing in so much press agent dope to be run free, and which never got into print.

Music students are reminded that if their names are Smith or Jones, they are sure to fail, but if they change them to Bobrowski or something like it, they have every chance of success.

We suppose that some ingenious hobo will be approaching us with a tale that he is a former national guardsman who wants money to work his way to rejoin his regiment at the border.

Now that we are safely past the usual season for killing the fruit crop, we suppose the calamity howler's next theme will be the corn crop.

If your competitor talks about you put him on the pay roll. Never mind what he says as long as he talks.

A man never appreciates the full sweet joys of motoring until he has a blowout on a piece of newly oiled road.

It's a deplorable fact that about the time the average man becomes able to vote intelligently, he dies.

And still it remains hot.

WHY NOT ELECT A BUSINESS MAN?

Why can't we have a business man in the governor's chair next time?

A man who does big things in a big way; not a man who talks big things in a loud voice, therefore a business man.

State government is a business and a big business.

Taxation, rate regulation, good roads, the budget system, more centralized control of state institutions, departmental and clerical expenses and safeguarding of the rights and interests of capital and labor, the regulation of penal institutions, the betterment of social conditions, etc.
—what are all these but pure business problems demanding the same trained and capable executive direction that the great business concern demands.

Big business concerns seek big business men with big business brain to be executive chiefs.

The state of Michigan is a big business corporation in which every one of us, big and little, is a stockholder.

Suppose that for once by way of experiment we gently, but firmly and positively set aside the politicians orators and theorists and put a big, brainy, experienced and successful business man, who has done big things all his life in the chair as governor of Michigan?

What do you think about it Mr.
Voter?

Below are some things Albert E.
Sleeper has said about our state government and how he thinks it ought to be run:

"I don't mean to infer that the average Michigan voter, farmer and business man wants to shirk his taxes or that his habit is to grumble about them, but neither you nor I can blame them, if they kick when they do not see proportionate benefits from this large increase of taxes.
Neither do I wish to be misunderstood as to the growing needs of this great state and its great institutions.
None of them should be crippled or stated, but what the taxpayers want, what I want and stand pledged to secure if possible, IS FOR A DOL-LAR'S WORTH OF SERVICE TO GO OUT FOR EVERY DOLLAR OF TAXES THAT GOES INTO THE STATE TREASURY. When this becomes true the people will not complain of their taxes. This is but fair, and just, and honest and who would think of ruining his private business in any other way. And why should the state's business be run in any other way?"

The candidacy of Mr. Sleeper for governor is being received with great favor by the press of the state, and in his canvass he has received a cordial welcome.

He stands for many things and needed reforms which will be given a hearty response by taxpayers. His experience in public office should place him in a position to readily see the needs of the state, and judging from past activities, he is fully qualified to make the necessary changes.—Adv. 1911.

DON'T CUSS THE WEATHER--NO USE

FINE FOR CROPS--CAN HEAR CORN GROW

Means Good Crops for Farmers and Prosperity to All Business Men.

Though the pavements may sizzle and there may appear to be no breath of air around the buildings of the business section, there is one man who isn't muttering a word of complaint.

He is the man who is far away from paved streets and business blocks--the farmer.

"Cawn weather," he says and smiles all the time the perspiration trickles down his forehead. You can almost hear the "cawn" growing these days, and as for other crops, nearly any kind of vegetation has got the mushroom going for rapidity of growth.

Here is what C. F. Schaeider, observer of the Grand Rapids weather bureau, says of the weather in his weekly bulletin:

"Warm, dry weather has been very timely and beneficial in promoting the growth of backward crops, and permitting the rapid and safe harvesting of hay and clover.

"Corn and beans have made splendid growth and are rapidly reaching normal condition. Oats, potatoes and garden truck are doing well, having been much improved during the past week.

"The weather has been ideal for haying and a heavy crop is being well secured in stack and barn.

"Winter wheat and winter rye are in excellent condition. Wheat is turning and will soon be ready to harvest."

Lorch Announces Candidacy.

In another column of this issue will be found the announcement of Edward Lorch, of Boyne City, for the office of county road commissioner to succeed himself. During his term of office, Mr. Lorch has to his credit a number of the best miles of road built since the county adopted the present system. He is a hard, conscientious worker, and no doubt will have the flowing of a large number of people in the county.

Would Count in the Score. Two bitter rivals were playing in the final round of a golf tournament and were even on the eleventh hole. One of them, a carelessly old gentleman, had talked incessantly during the match, to the great annoyance of his opponent.

"Look here, Logan," burst out the latter, "if you don't stop your infernal chatter I'll crack you over the head with this brassie."

"All right, Jones; swing away," was the calm response, "but remember this--it's going to cost you a stroke."--Ladies' Home Journal.

Changed Conditions. "It used to please me," said the old man, "when the barber asked if I wanted a shave when I was a youngster."

"Indeed?" "Yes, and now he sometimes flatters me by asking if I want a hair cut."--London Telegraph.

In Agreement. "How is your boy Josh getting along with his employer?" "Well," replied Farmer Contossel, "they have come to an agreement at last. Josh said he was going to quit, and the boss he said so too."--Washington Star.

Repertee. "Beauty is only skin deep," she sneered. "Yes, my dear," retorted the other. "But wouldn't you like to change skins with me?"--Detroit Free Press.

Announcement.

To the Qualified Voters of Charlevoix County: I wish to announce that I will be a candidate for the office of County Road Commissioner, at the primaries August 29, to succeed myself. I ask your support on the grounds of efficient and faithful work performed during the past years in office. I also believe that I am now better fitted to perform the work of road commissioner than ever before, and the county would benefit from the experience I have gained. All I ask is that you carefully inspect the record I have made. If, after doing this, it is your opinion that I deserve being retained in office, your support will be greatly appreciated. FIGURES ON COUNTY TAX EQUALIZATION

As Set by Board of Supervisors at Recent Session.

At the meeting of the board of supervisors the last of June the equalization of the assessments in the several townships, of Antrim county, was the chief duty. The assessments made under the supervision of the state tax commission in Central Lake, Chestonia, Kearney, Mancelona, Star and Warner townships were left unchanged. The remaining townships were raised as follows: Banks $100,000, Custer $30,000, Echo $50,000, Elk Rapids $40,000, Forest Home $72,170, Helena $79,025, Jordan $65,000, Milton $81,960, and Torch Lake $40,000.

Central Lake is now assessed at $692,585, ranking fourth in the county.

The total valuation of the county as equalized by the supervisors is $8,827,138; as equalized by the state, $9,100,000.

It might be of interest to the general public to know the relation of the assessment of Central Lake township in regard to the village and country districts. The total valuation inside the corporation is $318,575; outside the corporation $374,010. The village pays thirty-two sixtieths of the state and county tax and the county thirty-seven sixtieths.

The valuation of School District No. 1 is $380,000 or more than one-half of the valuation of the entire township.

Oil in Saw Handle.

The carpenter, amateur or professional, who undertakes to do any extensive amount of sawing soon learns that an occasional application of oil to the work greatly facilitates the work. An inventor who believes in making hard work easy has invented a new thing in the way of saws, making use of this principle. The charge of oil is stored away in the handle of the saw and at a point within convenient reach is an operating lever. Without the necessity of stopping his work it is possible for him to touch the button and cause a squirt of oil to be ejected from the handle on either side of the blade by which the passage of the saw through the wood is rendered much easier.

Lignite in Alaska.

The lignite coal reserves of the Bonfield region, Alaska, are estimated by the United States geological survey to be nearly 10,000,000,000 tons, which exceeds by near 3,000,000,000 tons the estimate made a few years ago on the information then available of the total quantity of lignite coal in the territory. The new estimates, which are very moderate, indicate that the quantity of coal available in the Bonfield region is greater than that of all the other surveyed fields of the territory.

China Mending Cement.

One pound best white glue, two pounds dry white lead, one quart soft water, one-half pint alcohol. Put the first three articles in a dish in a pot of boiling water, let it boil until dissolved, then add the alcohol and boil again until mixed.

one in which they live, and yet some person will be elected as councilman or representative for the ward, and control the expenditures in that ward and the improvements, when the man who owns property has no voice whatever in his election and can exert no influence as a voter.

Responsibility is fixed upon the commission. If the law is violated the people know who is to blame and can put their finger on the offender. The responsibility is so great that either the commissioners have got to enforce the law or resign. The first thing that the commission does is to establish the city's business on a cash basis, pay in cash its bills in the same manner as bills are paid by any other business concerns. It is the statement from cities under the commission form of government that by this method the affairs of the city are transacted more satisfactorily, more expeditiously, more economically. The objection has been raised that the commission form of government places too much power in the hands of a few men. The objection arises from a misapprehension of what commission government provides. It does not increase power and influence, but increases responsibility.

No business corporation would consent to conduct its business on the plan of the present management of city governments and hope to succeed. Why then should cities continue to manage city governments on the present plan? In the business corporation we have a president and board of directors working for the best interest of the corporation. In the government of our cities we should have a mayor and fixed number of directors. A body limited in number so as readily to fix responsibility, elected from the city at large and paid a good compensation for their services should secure the best results. This plan of city government copied after methods of successful business enterprises insures good government and greater economy in the expenditure of city funds.

This form of city government was first adopted by the City of Galveston in 1901 after the great disaster in 1900. It was followed five years later by Houston, which adopted the plan with various modifications. In 1907 at least five other cities, Fort Worth, Dallas, Greenville, Denison and El Paso secured the commission by a popular vote of the people. In the same year, Iowa, Kansas, North Dakota and South Dakota; in 1908, Mississippi; in 1909, Minnesota, Texas and Wisconsin, in 1909 Illinois passed laws providing for the organization of city governments under the commission plan. This plan may be adopted in any of the "home-rule" states, among which is the state of Michigan.

During the first year the commission form of government at Big Rapids did not prove the success as had been anticipated by those who were influential in securing its adoption. The trouble was not in the plan of commission government, but because Big Rapids did not hire a city manager of any great experience. This spring a change was made and now the system is receiving many compliments from those who were pessimistic as to its success. Mayors of various towns under the commission form state that no town could do better than to adopt the commission form of government. It results in an efficient carrying out of all the city's business affairs and places the city on the same basis as any other corporation.

PRESENT HIGHWAYS ARE OBJECT LESSONS

Shows Heavy Traffic and Are Already Giving Out Says VanPelt.

What can you not afford? Why, to build concrete roads. Let me tell you something. You cannot afford not to build concrete roads and you can't afford to build any more nine foot roads, for those you already have built will keep you scratching to raise money sufficient to keep them in repair, filling in the chuck holes and ruts and when you have it at its best you haven't much. Because, like the babbling brook, the ruts and holes run on forever.

You have two object lessons in this county and this county is the best county in the state of Michigan.

gan. Don't forget that. The possibilities are greater here than anywhere else. The concrete pavement on Dixon avenue has now been down five years and it is not only with all the resort traffic but also with all the coal, grain and merchandise that has been brought into the city for that number of years that it has been maintained with little or no expense and that expense was caused because the foundation was not properly prepared when it was originally built. Another object lesson is the strip opposite the Elston hotel at the south end of Bridge street which has been down seven years and has cost absolutely not a dollar for maintenance. It is generally conceded that there is more traffic over Dixon avenue, in either the month of July or August than there is in a whole year between Boyne City and Charlevoix and the same thing is true of the piece at the south end of Bridge street, that there is more traffic over it in either the month of July or August than there is in a whole year between East Jordan and Charlevoix.

Here is a case where the maintenance was built into the road. Our slogan should be, "Build the Maintenance Into the Road When Building New Roads."

$17,000.00 FIRE AT EAST JORDAN

CABINET COMPANY'S FACTORY—ROOM A TOTAL LOSS

Stock Room and Boiler and Engine Room Saved by Fire Walls and Good Work.

About two o'clock Friday morning the night crew of the E. J. & S. railway round house discovered that the plant of the East Jordan Cabinet Co. close by was in flames and had spread through the entire machinery floor. The alarm was given and was quickly responded to by the fire department and others, but the fire had made such headway that the only thing gotten out was Wm. Supernaw's tool chest that chanced to be near the door.

The plant was built in three sections separated by fire walls, the factory floor in the center, the boiler and engine room at the north end and the stock room and office at the south end. There was little wind, fortunately, as the fire was terribly hot, and the fire department bent all energies, successfully, to keep the flames from spreading, and by using all available means they soon had nine streams playing on the fire.

This was one of the best promising industries in East Jordan. Their sales of tables had doubled in the past year and the orders increasing right along, and there must be no question of the rebuilding. The firm coming just now is most discouraging not alone in the property loss over and above the insurance but to destroy the industry at its most busy season and at the same time the man at the head who has built up the business, B. E. Waterman, is having serious trouble with his eyes. This is a time that our board of trade and all of our people should make him feel that we appreciate what he has done in the past and if necessary give material aid for the future of the industry.

We understand that about 400 finished tables were destroyed besides all of the machinery. The most conservative estimates of the actual loss put it at about $17,000, about two thirds covered by insurance.

The E. J. & S. railroad shop and roundhouse, the East Jordan Iron Works and the electric plant were all in the "fire zone" but all saved, though the glass in Malpass Bros. building was badly shattered by the heat.

A number of the workmen lost valuable kits of tools which could not be gotten out.

Our fire department are deserving of highest praise for their excellent work at this fire.—East Jordan Enterprise.

Twenty Years from Today a Bald-headed Man will Be an Unusual Sight

One of the most prominent druggists of America made a statement a few weeks ago which has caused a great deal of discussion among scientists in the medical press. He said: "If the new hair grower, Mildredina Hair Remedy, increases its sales as it has during the past year, it will be used by nearly every man, woman and child in America within eight years."

"When Mildredina Hair Remedy is used almost universally, dandruff will disappear and with its departure baldness, itching scalp, splitting hair and all scalp diseases will follow and twenty years from now a bald head will be a rarity." 82,259,750 FOR STATE ROAD WORK

MICHIGAN TO GET THIS FROM GOVERNMENT

National Fund of $75,000,000 to Be Distributed in Next Five Years—Among First Five.

Michigan is to receive $2,259,750 of the Federal fund of $75,000,000 to be expended during the next five years upon the nation's roads. Michigan's allotment is the fifth largest of that of all the states.

Co-operation between the national government and the states in highway improvement has begun on a country-wide program.

In the next five years $150,000,000 will be expended on a half-and-half plan, upon arterial roads selected by the highway authorities of the 48 states, subject to the approval of the secretary of agriculture.

Wilson Signs Bill.

The co-operative plan became effective when President Woodrow Wilson attached his signature to the concrete proposition which resulted in the merging by the conferees of the two bills passed by congress, the senate and house having adopted different measures. In greater degree the senate bill found approval, for it directed quite positively the expenditure of the money and required the maintenance of the roads after construction by imposing a discontinuance of further funds for neglect in this important matter.

In the amalgamation of the two measures the conferees of the senate were Senator John H. Bankhead, chairman of its committee on post offices and post roads, and Senators Claude A. Swanson of Virginia and Charles E. Townsend of Michigan. Representatives D. W. Shackelford, chairman of the committee on roads, and E. W. Saunders of Virginia, were the spokesmen of the house.

Move Launched in 1912.

With the Federal Aid convention conducted by the American Automobile association in Washington, January 16-17, 1912, started the effort which finally resulted in the law just enacted. Congress answered this first gathering by the creation of a joint committee of the senate and house, authorized to investigate upon the desirability and feasibility of federal aid to the states. Its report was distinctly favorable.

Combining their energies, the American association urged the fundamentals contained in the Bankhead-Shackelford legislation accomplished.

Diehl Comments on Plan.

Chairman George C. Diehl of the A. A. A. good roads board thus comments on this new policy of combining federal and state funds in roads building:

"The majority of the states have provided for definite systems of state highways, which are constructed as rapidly as available means permit. Every effort should be directed now toward having the federal funds apply on these state systems and not frittered away on countless little disconnected local roads. It is the duty of those who wish to shape public sentiment so as to have it solidly back of the policy of applying federal aid to the completion of the state highway systems and to the connecting up of these systems with each other so that, while serving the primary interests of each state, we shall proceed rapidly toward the acquirement of a comprehensive national system."

Added to the $75,000,000 from the federal treasury will be a like amount from the several states. The federal distribution is on the basis of area, population, and rural delivery and star routes. The first year appropriation is $3,000,000, with a yearly increase of the same amount during the five year period.

A supplement to the bill which survived the report of the conferees gives an additional $10,000,000 to be expended at the rate of $1,000,000 a year, on roads within or adjacent to federal forest reserves, the money to be repaid ultimately out of the sale of timber and from other sources of revenue. The western states were particularly interested in this phase of the question and successfully contended that the national government should protect and develop its own property.

AUTO TAX TOTAL

IS $1,466,985.38

Wayne Gets Largest Share, $213,494.47; Kent is Second.

Secretary of State Vaughan last Thursday reported to Auditor-General Fuller the amount of money each county will receive from automobile license sales.

Up to July 1st, a total of $1,466,985.38 was collected by the state department, half of which goes to the various counties where the application for licenses originated, and half to the state highway department. Wayne receives the largest share, $213,494.47, while Kent ranks second with $42,781.71.

The amounts the various nearby counties, including Charlevoix, will receive as their share to be used in building and improving roads, are as follows:

Alpena	$2,497.52

MAKING HANDSAWS.

Tools of the "Finest Quality Are of Hammered Cast Steel.

Handsaws are made of three different kinds of material—sheet iron, shear steel and cast steel. Those of the better quality are of the last mentioned kind and will serve to exemplify the others, says the Blacksmith and Wheelwright. Jagged cast steel are first rolled or milled into sheets having the proper thickness for saws, and these sheets are cut up into strips by means of a machine, which is, in fact, a pair of shears mounted on a frame. The cut edges are made smooth by applying them to a grindstone, and one of the edges is then provided with the teeth which give it the character of a saw. This is effected by a kind of punching. There is a small press having a triangular punch at its lower extremity. A man holds the saw beneath it and by the action of his right hand brings down the punch forcibly on the surface of the steel, cutting out a little piece equal to the intended size of the teeth. He then moves the saw a little and makes a second tooth in a similar way, proceeding thus from end to end of the saw with great quickness. The size and form of the punch depend on the kind of tooth to be made and vary greatly in different instances.

After the teeth are cut the saws are hardened by being heated in a kiln or oven and suddenly cooled by being plunged into a tank of oil. They are then slightly heated again, and while yet warm they are hammered at various parts to remove any crookedness which the previous process may have given them. Next they are rested on a polished steel anvil and hammered repeatedly over every part, by which the substance of the steel is made uniformly dense, even and regular.

Then comes the grinding. This consists in attaching the saw to a flat board and applying it to the edge of a grindstone so as to grind off all roughness and make the saw perfectly flat.

Another hammering is required to remove the twisting caused by the grinding and another beating to restore the temper. Another but very slight grinding is given to remove the hammer marks, after which the set is given to the teeth—that is, the lateral bending which every tooth of a saw presents.

The workman rests the flat part on a smooth anvil, and by means of a small hammer held in the right hand he gives a blow to every alternate tooth, thereby bending it out of the straight line. He then turns the saw over and strikes all the other teeth so that every other tooth may be bent in a different direction.

"Is this true? Were you beating your wife, sir?" the judge demanded.

"Yes, yer honor."

England's Smallest House.

The smallest house in Great Britain is in the quaint old town of Coway, north Wales. This house is 300 years old and consists of two rooms, one above the other, each of which is just two yards square. The upstairs room, which is reached by mounting a tiny ladder, has in it a four foot bed and a washstand, leaving but little room for the occupant to move about.

ROAD QUESTION A SERIOUS ONE

INVOLVES LARGE EXPENDITURE OF MONEY

Highways That Will Stand Up Under Heavy Traffic Are Kind to Build.

The good roads question, which is one of the hardest problems before the taxpayers of Charlevoix county today, has been discussed through the columns of the Courier from various standpoints.

At the present time George H. Van Pelt is carrying on a publicity campaign in favor of roads built of concrete, claiming that, while the cost more per mile at the start, they are the cheapest in the end when the yearly maintenance of gravel roads are taken into consideration.

Road building, the same as former street building, has been in the experimental stage for a number of years past in this vicinity. Streets have been built at considerable cost, which have within a few years been found to be utterly inadequate, for the heavy traffic subjected them every year. And now the same thing applies to rural roads being yearly built.

The writer drove over the new gravel road completed last fall, or early this spring, running to Boyne City on the shore line. In several places the road is in bad condition, full of deep ruts, and in at least two places the crown of the road has been torn off, leaving a stretch of loose gravel, which in a short time, with the present heavy traffic it is being subjected to, will result in a chuck hole that will be dangerous to all vehicles.

We do not want our readers to infer that we are in any manner criticizing the work of our county road commissioners. They have all built as good gravel roads as can be found in the state. But we are calling your attention to the fact that gravel roads will not stand up under the heavy traffic they are yearly given. Even the roads that have been built of crushed hardheads are beginning to give away under the hard pounding they are receiving.

Roads of northern Michigan must be built to stand traffic equal to the largest cities in the United States. With the hundreds of heavy automobiles driven by people who spend their summer here, a majority of them property owners, roads must be built that will stand the wear and tear. If it means concrete roads—start to build them at once. There is little economy in building roads that the cost of yearly maintenance and upkeep within a five year period will exceed the cost of concrete roads.

Below is reproduced a letter that throws a great deal of light on the road question, especially the cost of concrete roads in comparison with those of gravel:

June 15, 1916.
Mrs. George H. Van Pelt, City.

Dear Sir:
I have given some considerable time and study to the proposition of the most efficient roads available for this locality and, after considering all from the standpoint of first cost, cost of maintenance and economical traffic conditions, my conclusion centers on the one course concrete road and, in case under consideration, my recommendation would be nine feet in width. This, together with a four foot shoulder of good gravel or crushed stone, will, I believe make the ideal road for this territory and, in support of this conclusion, the following reasons are given:

First—Many of the roads have been and are being graded and some built with gravel and stone with permanency in view; others, temporarily only and such roads are particularly well adapted to the construction thereof of the permanent concrete road.

Second—The cost of a concrete road, nine feet in width, with four feet shoulders of gravel or crushed stone, making a width of 17 feet over all of travel track, in this territory should not exceed, exclusive of grading but including preparation of sub-grade (such as leveling up and rolling) $5,850 per mile, as against the present cost of a nine foot gravel road of about $3,000 per mile.

Third—The upkeep of the well built concrete road, based on city of Charlevoix experience on the cost of maintenance of the two concrete streets in use now five and six years respectively, it is so much less than on gravel or macadam roads that the increase cost may be entirely compensated for in this one item of maintenance for the first ten year period.

Fourth—In this particular locality, material for an ideal aggregate is obtainable at a minimum cost and there are also the natural conditions of thorough sub-drainage, relieving the necessity of excessive reinforcement.

I am handing you hereto attached a cross section of such road as I would recommend, together with condensed specifications therefor and, if I may be of further service in this do not hesitate to call on me. I quote the following from the annual report of the Wayne county road commissioners:

"With about 45 miles more of road to look after, part of it two years and part of it a year older, we have spent a small sum, by $5,179.04 over our maintenance cost of 1913. This has been brought about by the replacement of a number of miles of bituminous macadam with the more durable and less expensive maintained concrete. The wisdom of building of concrete, in our judgment, stands out conspicuously when maintenance cost involved in keeping all other types of roads under our jurisdiction in usable condition is compared with the actual cost of maintaining concrete. We have over 125 miles of concrete roads in Wayne county, some of it is in its seventh year of service, all of it is in good condition and we have never taken up and replaced a 25 foot section since we have been building and developing this type of road, which, we think, speaks volumes for our low annual maintenance costs."

The above is respectfully submitted.

Bungalows.

A bungalow is primarily never more than one story high. In addition to this, it must be surrounded by verandas, and it must be built of either thatch or tile. The type was introduced into India from Bengal, and it was called a "banga," or Bengal house, because that was the kind of modest homes the Bengalese erected. It is so well suited to the climate of India that it is generally used by even the better class of British residents. It is also used by the government for the accommodation of travelers along the public roads. Oak bungalows are erected at intervals of about fifteen miles, and here any traveler can get accommodation at 40 cents a day. At the end of twenty-four hours if his room is demanded by some later comer he is compelled to give it up and move on.—Exchange.

Examiner Who Encouraged Faking. Bank clerks in England nowadays have to pass stiffer tests than their predecessors of a century ago. A candidate for a clerkship at the Bank of England in 1813 records that the only test set him was to sort up five of silver into 41 stacks, and the kindly examiner whispered, "Never mind, my lad, so long as you get 20 shillings in the last pound!"—London Standard.

HOW

To Keep the Windmill In Good Running Order

A GREAT many people seem to have the idea that a windmill is some sort of a perpetual motion machine which needs little or no care. As a matter of fact, a windmill is a machine, and as such, needs a reasonable amount of care particularly in the way of lubrication.

The windmill should be gone over from time to time with a wrench and the bolts tightened up and kept in shape so that there will be no possibility of the windmill or tower twisting in the heavy breezes.

The oil holes in the windmill some times become gummed up and need to be cleaned out. A good grade of oil will help this. When the oil holes become gummed up oil may be put in from above, and yet the bearings may run dry for a long time.

Nothing so damages the looks of a farm and gives such a "down and out" appearance as a disreputable windmill. The windmill kept up in good shape and painted gives a trim, neat effect to the place. The steel windmill tower when first put up with a new coat of paint presents a very pleasing appearance, and with ordinary care the metal itself will last a lifetime. If paint is not used from time to time it will soon become rusty and gradually work toward the junk heap.

It is well when getting a windmill to get one with a stop attachment so that it will be easy to get up to the platform of the tower.

Keeping the windmill up in shape and keeping the bearings well oiled will make the windmill run in light breezes in the summer when it is used the most.

FOR AUTOISTS.

How to Spare Your Time When You Feel Like Speeding.

Rough streets tempt one to drive in car tracks. It is more comfortable for the passengers and may be economy to protect the car from bumps and vibration. The tires won't be injured noticeably by doing this occasionally—it is continued practice that shortens the mileage. Quite often the pavement along inside edges of rails is rough and may result in cuts to the rubber and bruises to the fabric. Driving over street car track switches at the point of frogs may cut the tires seriously. Rails on hills are to be avoided as much as possible, as they usually have sharp, thin splinters on the edges, which are liable to cut or puncture the tires. Be careful when driving on wet rails. Quick twisting of the front wheels may result in accident from rear of car skidding sideways when leaving rails. Edges of the rails wear away the tread rubber and cause a sharp bending action of the fabric, which will usually develop cracks in the side. It is just a matter of time until the rubber cover loosens underneath and the fabric weakens from moisture and decay. Later an unusual bump or shock may result in a blowout while running on a perfectly smooth street or road. It is careless, indeed, to spoil a tire in this manner when possible to secure so much more mileage from it if used correctly, or if reversed on the wheel—namely, the worn side turned toward the car. A competent workman can make satisfactory repairs if only the tread rubber be worn and the tire has not been neglected too long.

HOW TO SEND FLOWERS THROUGH THE MAIL WITHOUT WILTING THEM.

If the flowers are to be sent to town in the morning cut them during the very late afternoon of the day before and keep them all night in a large pail or pitcher of cold water. Then pack them in the morning in a box with layers of wax paper, and they will travel for hours and remain perfectly fresh. A flower is like a camel—give it a long, deep drink of water and it can go without water for a long time. Dahlias require a peculiar treatment. When first cut plunge their stems into a vessel of hot water and allow them to remain until the water has cooled off; then put the flowers in cold water for the night, and so treated the dahlias will remain stiff and travel safely.

How to Cure Hives That Annoy Your Peace of Body.

Hives are not dangerous if you avoid taking cold. Either soda, starch or vinegar baths are curative, soothing and grateful. The soda is prepared by adding a tablespoonful of bicarbonate of soda to the bath. The starch bath, which is also effective for hives and chafing, is made by simply adding one-half cupful of powdered laundry starch to the bath. These baths may be given daily. The vinegar bath is made by putting a tablespoonful of pure vinegar into one-half pint of warm water. Sponge off parts of the body distressed and allow to dry in without using a towel.

How to Odorize Saucepans After Cooking Strong Vegetables.

After cooking onions, cabbage or fish try this plan: Wash and dry the pan, then place a piece of thick brown paper on the stove, set fire to it and turn the saucepan over the blaze. After a few minutes remove it and the odor will not be noticed.

CHAPTER XI.

A Place of Many Wonders.

CURTIS GORDON'S men broke camp upon his return from Omar, and by taking the east bank of the Salmon river pressed through to the upper valley. Here they recrossed to the west side and completed their survey, with the exception of the three mile gap which Dan Appleton held.

Gordon continued to smart under the sting of his defeat, however. O'Neill had got the better of him in argument, and Natalie's simplicity had proved more than a match for his powers of persuasion. At no time had he seriously considered making Mrs. Gerard his wife, but he had thought to entice the two women back under his own roof in order to humble both them and their self appointed protector. He felt sure that Natalie's return to Hope and her residence there would injure her seriously in the eyes of the community, and this would be a stab to O'Neill. Although he had failed for the moment he did not abandon the idea.

Gordon's business career had consisted of a series of brilliant manipulations whereby, with little to go upon, he had forced financial recognition for himself. No one knew better than he the unstable foundation beneath his Alaskan enterprises, yet more than once he had turned as desperate ventures into the semblance of success. By his present operations he sought not only to hamper O'Neill, but to create an appearance of opposition to both him and the trust that could be coined into dollars and cents. There are in the commercial world money wolves who prey upon the weak and depend upon the spirit of compromise in their adversaries. Gordon was one of these.

By purchasing for a song the McDermott rights at Kyak he had placed himself in position to share in the benefits of the Hiedemann breakwater, and by rapidly pushing his tracks ahead he made his rivalry seem formidable. As a means of attack upon O'Neill he adopted a procedure common in railroad building. He amended his original survey so that it crossed that of the S. R. and N. midway between the lower bridge over the Salmon river and the glaciers and at that point he ran the busy erection of a grade.

It was at the cost of no little inconvenience that he rushed forward a large body of men and supplies and began to lay track across the S. R. and N. right of way. If Appleton could hold a hillside, he reasoned, he himself could hold a crossing. If not permanently at least for a sufficient length of time to serve his purpose. His action came as a disagreeable surprise to Omar. These battles for crossings have been common in the history of railroading, and they have not infrequently resulted in sanguinary affrays.

Toward Gordon's stronghold Murray O'Neill's men worked, laying his roadbed as straight as an arrow, and as the intervening distance decreased anxiety and speculation at Omar increased.

Among those who hung upon the rumors of the approaching clash with greatest interest was Eliza Appleton. Since Dan's departure for the front she had done her modest best to not let the part he had forced upon her, and in furtherance of their conspiracy she had urged O'Neill to fulfill his promise of taking her over the work.

She was greatly excited when O'Neill announced one evening.

"I'm ready to make that trip to the front if you are. I have business at Kyak, so after we've seen the glaciers we will go down there, and you can take in the coal fields."

"I'm ready to leave at a moment's notice."

"Then perhaps you'd better help Natalie."

"Natalie?" exclaimed Eliza, seeing nil her well laid plans tottering. "Is she going?"

"Oh, yes. It's an opportunity she shouldn't miss, and I thought it would be pleasanter for you if she went with us."

O'Neill had puzzled her greatly of late, for at times he seemed wrapped up in Natalie, and at other times he actually showed a preference for Eliza's own company. He was so impartial in his attentions that at one moment the girl would water in her determination and in the next would tell herself succeeding beyond her hope. The game confused her emotions curiously. She accused herself of being overbold, and then she noted with horror that she was growing as sensitive to his apparent coldness as if she were really in earnest. She had not supposed that the mere getting of a sentimental role could so obsess her.

To counteract this tendency she assumed a very professional air when they set out on the following morning. She was once more Eliza Appleton, the reporter, and O'Neill in recognition of this fact explained rapidly the difficulties of construction which he had met and overcome. As she began to understand there came to her a fuller appreciation of the man and the work he was doing. Natalie, however, could not seem to grasp the significance of the enterprise. She saw nothing beyond the even gravel roadbed, the uninteresting trestles and bridges and cuts and fills, the like of which she had seen many times before, and her comment was childlike. O'Neill, however, appeared to find her naïveté charming, and Eliza reflected bitterly:

"If my nose was perfectly chiseled and my eyebrows nice he wouldn't care if my brain was the size of a rabbit's. Here am I, talking like a human being and really understanding him, while she sits like a Greek goddess, wondering if her hat is on straight. If ever I find a girl uglier than I am I'll make her my bosom friend." She jabbed her pencil viciously at her notebook.

The engine finally stopped. It was in the midst of a steep village beside which flowed one of the smaller branches of the Salmon. In the distance the grade stretched out across the level swamps like a thin, lately healed scar, and along its crest gravel trains were slowly creeping. An army of men like a row of ants were toiling upon it, and still farther away shone the white sides of another encampment.

"Oh! That's Gordon's track," Eliza cried quickly. "Why, you're nearly up to him. How do you intend to get across?"

O'Neill nodded at the long thin line of malling men in the distance.

"There's a loose handle in each one of those picks," he said.

"Somebody will be killed in that kind of a racket."

"That rests with Gordon. I'm going through."

"Suppose he had said that when Dan stopped him at the canyon?"

"If he'd said it and meant it he'd probably have done it. He bluffs, I don't. I have to go on, he didn't. Now lunch is served, and since this is our last glimpse of civilization I advise you to fortify yourselves. From here on we shall see nothing but the wilderness."

He led them to a spotless tent which had been newly erected at the edge of the spruce. It was smoothly stretched upon a framework of timber, its walls and floor were of dressed lumber, and within were two cots, all in clean linen. There were two washbasins also, and dressers and rocking chairs, a table and a stove. On the floor beside the beds lay a number of deep, soft bear rugs. A meal was spread nigh glass and figured china and fresh new napery.

"How cozy! Why, it's a perfect dear of a house!" exclaimed Natalie.

"You will leave everything but your necessities here, for we are going light," Murray told them. "You will stop here on our way back to Kyak, and I'll warrant you'll be glad to see the place by that time."

"You built this just for us," Eliza said, needlessly.

"Yes; but it didn't take long. I phoned this morning that you were coming." He ran a critical eye over the place to see that its equipment was complete, then drew out their chairs for them.

A white coated cook boy served a luncheon in courses, the quality of which astonished the visitors. For there was soup, a roast, delicious vegetables, crisp salad, a cake and fruit. O'Neill had imported for his own private use, and his own particular blend of coffee.

At last the party reached Jackson glacier. Murray O'Neill had seen the glacier many times, but always he experienced the same feeling of awe, of personal insignificance, as when he first came stumbling up that gorge more than a year before.

For a long time the girls stood gazing without a word. They seemed to have forgotten his presence.

"Well?" he said at last.

"Isn't it big?" Natalie faltered, with round eyes. "Will it fall over us?"

He shook his head. "The river is too wide for that, but when a particularly big mass drops it makes waves large enough to sweep everything before them. This bank on our right is sixty feet high, but I've seen it inundated."

Turning to Eliza, he inquired:

"What do you think of it?"

Her face as she met his was strangely glorified, her eyes were shining, her fingers tightly interlocked.

"I'd like to cry or—wear," she said uncertainly.

"Why, Eliza?" Natalie regarded her friend in shocked amazement, but Murray laughed.

Progress was more difficult now, for the river shore was paved with smooth, round stones, which rolled under foot, and the boats required extreme attention in the swift current. The farther they proceeded the more the ice wall opposite increased in height until at last it shut off the mountains behind. Then as they rounded the first bend a new prospect unfolded itself.

At last there came a sound like that of a cannon shot, and far ahead of them a fragment loosened itself and went plunging downward. Although it appeared small, a ridge promptly leaped out from beneath the splash and came racing down the river's bosom to ward them.

"Better go up a bit," O'Neill called to his charges.

The men at the ends of the towlines scrambled part way up the shelving bank and braced themselves, then wrapped the ropes about their wrists like nuclear men on a tug of war team. Their companions waded into the flood and fouled the boats off the rocks.

The wave came swiftly, lifting the skiffs high upon the bank, then it sucked them back amid a tangle of arms and legs. A portion of the river bottom suddenly bared itself and as suddenly was submerged again. The boats ploughed and rolled and bent themselves upon the shore, wrenching the anchor men from their posts. They were half filled with water, too, but the wave had passed and was scudding away downstream.

Eliza Appleton came stumbling back over the rock strewn bank, for during the first mad plunge she had seen O'Neill go down beneath one of the rearward craft. A man had helped him out.

"Nothing but my ankle," he reassured her when she reached his side. "I was dragged a bit and jammed among the towlines." He sank down, and his lips were white with pain, but his gray eyes smiled bravely. The boatman removed his chief's boot and fell to rubbing the injury, while the girls looked on helplessly.

"Come, come! We can't stay here," Murray told them. He drew on the boot again to check the swelling.

"Can you walk?" they asked him anxiously.

"Certainly. Two feet are really unnecessary. A man can get along nearly as well on one." He hurried his men back to their tasks and managed to limp after them, although the effort brought beads of sweat to his lips and brow.

"If I'd known the river was so high I'd never have brought you," O'Neill told them. "It's fortunate we happened to be above that break. You see, the waves can't run up against the current." He turned to his men and spurred them on.

It was not until the travelers had reached the camp at the bridge site that all the wonders of this region became apparent. Then the two girls, in spite of their fatigue, spent the late afternoon sightseeing. At this point they were able to gain a comprehensive view, for at their backs lay Jackson glacier, which they had just passed, and directly fronting them, across a placid lake, was Gardfield, even larger and more impressive than its mate. Thirty, forty miles it ran back, broadening into a frozen sea out of which scarred mountain peaks rose like bleak islands, and on beyond the range of vision was still more ice. They were surrounded by ragged ramparts. The Salmon river ran through a broken chalice formed by the encircling hills, and over the rim of the bowl or through its cracks peered other and smaller ice bodies. The lake at its bottom was filled by as strange a navy as ever sailed the sea, for the ships were bergs, and they followed each other in senseless, ceaseless manœuvres, forced by the currents which swept through from the cataclysm at its upper end. They formed long battle lines, they assembled into flotillas, they died about the circumference of a devil's whirlpool at the foot of the rapids, gyrating, bobbing, bowing until crowded out by the pressure of their rivals. Some of them were grounded, like hulks defeated in previous encounters, and along the guardian bar which imprisoned them at the outlet of the lake others were huddled, a mass of slowly dissolving wreckage.

O'Neill was helped into camp, and when his boot had been cut away he sent news of his arrival to Dan, who came like an eager bridegroom. Appleton found his employer with one foot in a tub of hot water and his lap full of blueprints. O'Neill explained briefly the condition of affairs down the river.

"I want some one to make that crossing," he said.

"A volunteer?" asked Dan, with quickened pulses.

"Yes."

"Will I do?"

"I sent for you to give you the first chance, you've been chafing so at your idleness. We must have steel laid to this point before snow flies. Every four counts. I don't risk Mellen or McKay, for they might be disabled. I intended to take charge myself, but I won't be able to walk now for some time." He swore a little, and Dan nodded sympathetically. "I wouldn't send anybody where I'd refuse to go myself. You understand?"

"Of course."

"If either McKay or Mellen were hurt I couldn't build the bridge, and the bridge must be built."

"If Gordon stands pat somebody may be hurt."

"I don't look for anything worse than a few broken heads, but, of course, I can't tell. I'll stand behind you with my last dollar no matter what happens."

Dan laughed. "As I understand the situation, you won't have a dollar unless we make the crossing."

"Right!" O'Neill smiled cheerfully. "The life of the S. R. and N. depends upon it. I'd give $10,000 for your right ankle."

"You can have it for nothing, chief. I'd amputate the whole leg and present it to you," Dan declared earnestly.

Murray took his hand in a hearty grip. "Perhaps I'll be able to serve you some time," he said simply. "Anyhow I'll look out for the chance. Now, spend the evening with the girls and leave in the morning. I'll be down as soon as I can travel to watch the fight from the side lines."

The past school year has been a very successful one both from an educational and financial standpoint. Our schools under the management of Superintendent Craig and his very efficient force of teachers have shown a decided improvement and we have graduated one of the finest classes in the history of the school. Appreciating the conscientious and careful supervision he has given them the Board has again secured his services for the coming year, which with the co-operation of a very able corps of teachers that have been secured we may look forward to still better results for the coming year.

At the time of the last annual meeting we had just let the contract for the reconstruction of our heating system at the Central and High School buildings as per plans and specifications which were secured from Professor Bissell, Dean of the Engineering Department of the Michigan Agricultural College, an expert in heating and ventilating. In making this improvement we expected to secure better service from our plant with a reduction of fuel consumption. In one of these details we have succeeded, as we now have a system which is furnishing the best of service, which is very gratifying. But the fuel consumption has not been lessened materially and probably never will be until modern boilers are installed in these buildings. It is not contemplated that we will make any changes in this respect for some time, however.

The Central and South Side grounds show a marked improvement in appearance. The seeding on the east side of Central grounds is doing nicely and in time our school yard may assume an air of thrift and beauty. We have placed the much needed shade trees upon the south side grounds and the greater percentage of them are doing nicely. The corner lot near the city tool shed which was a source of distress to all who saw it has been put in good condition and seeded. And while the returns as yet from these expenditures are small we are pleased to state that we expect these grounds to be self-sustaining, at least, in the future.

The Library is increasing in popularity and with the able efforts of the Librarian its usefulness to the community is becoming more apparent each year. While to the casual observer it might seem that the cost of maintaining it is rather high it is a source of much gratification to know that it is becoming more and more popular each year and is putting forth every effort with the resources at hand to meet the requirements of, and to serve, each particular individual and the wants of the community in general.

You will notice that our repairs account has been rather large the past year but taking into consideration the cost of the heating plant and its accessories you will find that it compares favorably with former years, considering the amount of work done. We had the Central and High School buildings put in good shape by making some necessary changes in the Central and by redecorating the walls throughout and also some painting outside which was very badly needed. It was necessary to reshingle the Washington building and make other needed repairs there. On the south side there has been but slight expenditure. The one redeeming feature of this large expenditure is the result that it will not have to be done the coming year which will make the account much smaller next year.

The Board has spent considerable time and effort in trying to do the advisable of adding a course in "Home Economics" or "Home Training" to our curriculum and after corresponding with a number of schools of about our own size and finding that in all cases they were very much pleased with the results they were obtaining in endeavoring to give the pupils something practical and of practical benefit, we decided to add this department and have secured the services of Mrs. Georgiana Clapper who comes very highly recommended as a capable and competent instructress in this work. While we do not expect to make this department the equal of the ones maintained in the schools of the larger cities, the first year, we have, however, started by purchasing some equipment which is of the best with an idea of making this department a success.

In our investigations we took into consideration the cost of maintaining this department and found that by discontinuing our department of music and drawing, and having these branches taught in the grades, which would give the pupils the elementary essentials of these arts the same as they have been receiving that we could in our expenditures, and still give to the pupils something which will be of everlasting benefit to them. We are teaching our boys and girls arithmetic, history, geography, morality and hygiene, and practically everything worth while excepting "Practical Thrift," which must be considered essential to their preparedness for future citizenship.

In summing up this report in a general way and comparing it to last year you will find that we had $6,327.84 less receipts than one year ago. Spent $809.07 more for teachers, remodeled our heating plant at an approximate cost of $800.00, voted to pay the Secretary and Treasurer $50.00 each for their services, have paid our full assessment of $170.97 for State Street paving for the library, have had an exceedingly large repairs account, have taken care of our usual amount of Bonds with the accrued interest, have cut down our current loans from $10,000.00 to $3,500.00 and now have on hand $770.65 or $53.24 more than we had at the corresponding time last year.

In our correspondence with the various schools in our immediate vicinity we find only one with a lower rate of taxation and one nearly double ours. We hope to be able to make a still further reduction in our rate this fall which you will no doubt consider very good news.

Respectfully Submitted,

E. J. HILLER, Secretary.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

John Joe Piant Drowned.

John Joe Piant, who disappeared from town on the evening of July 4th, at Harbor Springs, was found in the water near the N. M. T. dock, Tuesday morning of last week. Search had been made for him at Petoskey, Mackinaw and Cheboygan after his disappearance by Village Marshal Ernest Russell, but it was finally concluded he had fallen off the dock, as that was the place where he was last seen. At first foul play was suspected, but there were no marks on the body to indicate it, and he had $6.59 in change, his watch and other articles. Piant was born in Harbor Springs, June 23, 1862, the son of Joseph Piant, a French trader. He was an honest, industrious man, well thought of by his associates. He leaves a wife and one daughter to mourn his untimely death.

Drowned in Six Mile Lake.

Six Mile Lake was the scene of a tragedy last Sunday, July 9, when Ernest Deforest, a youth of 20 years, was drowned while in swimming. With several companions from Camp Seven, Mr. Deforest went down to a place in the lake about a mile above Dingham's bridge, for a swim. He entered the water first, and after swimming for a few minutes, was seen by his friends to turn over and sink, and fail to come up again. The water at that place was muddy and very deep making it impossible to render any help. The alarm was immediately spread, and a number of men began to search for the body. It was three hours before it could be located and taken from the water.

The remains were taken to the Deforest home near Torch Lake, and the funeral the following Tuesday at 10 o'clock, Rev. Wintz conducting the service.

Mr. Deforest had lived there all his life, and had finished his freshman year in the Central Lake high school, where he was popular among his classmates.

The prostrated parents and friends have the sympathy of the community in their bereavement.

Caught in Coal Shuttle.

When he released the drop doors on the bottom of a coal car Taylor Stockton, of Petoskey, came near being crushed to death last week. He forced the doors from the inside of the car by pushing a long iron bar down through the coal. The doors gave way without any warning, and he was shot down through the opening with 30 tons of coal.

Men working nearby heard his cries for help and dug him out. It was several minutes before they reached him, and in the meantime he came near suffocating.

He was badly cut in 15 places, and it will be some time before he will be sufficiently recovered to work.

Narrowly Escaped Drowning.

But for the plucky work of 13-year-old Lewis Tripp, of Traverse City, Jesse Nichols, aged 16, would have drowned when seized with cramps while swimming in West Bay off Peninsula street near the forks last Friday.

The boys had been enjoying a swim and had started toward shore from a raft. After going a short distance Nichols cried out in alarm several times, sank and failed to come up again. Young Tripp swam to the spot where his companion had disappeared and after diving several times found him lying on the bottom, resting upon his elbow and both arms rigid. Though Nichols is much larger than his rescuer, Tripp managed to bring him to the surface.

Tiger Superstitions.

In India the people believe in very many old fairy tales. One of these is that the ghost of a man killed by a tiger rides on the head of the beast that slew him to warn him of danger and to guide him to new victims. It is declared that Providence provides for the tiger's daily wants to the amount of 1 rupee (2 shillings) a day—that is to say, if a tiger kills a calf worth 6 rupees he will not be allowed another victim for five days. Eating the flesh of a tiger is supposed to give one great courage and alertness, but the whisks must first be shaved off the beast or his spirit will haunt the man who fed off him, and he is likely to be turned into a tiger in the next world.

TRACTOR VS. HORSE

Government Experts Give Results of Investigations.

United States Department of Agriculture Gets Facts From Farm Tractor Users.

Washington, June . . . That the farm tractor has arrived is evidenced by thousands of inquiries pouring into the department of agriculture. It is estimated 20,000 tractors were in use on American farms last year. This year it is expected that number will be more than doubled.

The interest in tractors has become so great among the American farmers that the department of agriculture had to get out a special report, just issued which calls attention to the many advantages of tractors for farm use.

"These, it says, are the ability to do heavy work quickly, the saving of man labor and the ability to plow to a good depth. The trend of the letters from farmers indicates a preference for a light and inexpensive tractor. The report says that medium priced tractors appear to have proved a profitable investment in a higher percentage of cases than any others.

G. B. Louderback of Anderson, Ind., tractor expert, recently in conference with government authorities concerning a test of a light tractor called the "Honey Junior," says that the tractor of the future will be one strong enough to plow to a depth of eight or nine inches and yet not heavy enough to hurt the well tilled ground. Light tractors have brakes and clutches, he says, and at the same time enable the farmer by turning up virgin soil to double his output, thus saving on taxes.

"Tractors are more economical than horses," Mr. Louderback declares. "They can work any number of hours a day regardless of the weather, and one tractor will do the work of a half dozen horses at half the cost. I believe supplying power to operate every kind of farm machinery, thus not only making farm work easier but also making it more profitable."

TONOLINE IS BEAUTY AID, ANNOUNCES SPECIALIST

Mildred Louise Talk of Interest to Women

As health is a first aid to beauty this story, told by Mildred Louise, beauty specialist, of Boston, Mass., is of unusual interest.

"I can recommend no better health giver than tonoline," said Mildred Louise.

"I was for many months a victim of stomach trouble and nervousness. I had suffered terribly from pains that followed eating. Headaches also would add to my worries. Poor digestion finally brought on nervousness."

"Relief came, however, when I took the advice of several women who said, 'Take tonoline.'"

"Not long after I started the tonoline treatment, my patrons began to remind me of the improvement in my condition. And because health is the quickest way to beauty, the improvement was particularly noticeable in my face."

"What tonoline really did for me I cannot say. I am so grateful that I am very willing to recommend tonoline publicly."

Tonoline is a purely vegetable preparation which goes to the seat of common maladies—stomach and kidney trouble, catarrhal affections of the mucous membranes, liver ailments and impurities of the blood—and quickly restores proper action. Tonoline is being explained daily to many people at all druggists.

Notice—As tonoline is a wonderful flesh builder it should not be taken by any one not wishing to increase his weight ten pounds or more. Although many reports are received from those who have been benefited by tonoline in severe cases of stomach trouble and nervous dyspepsia, chronic constipation, etc.

NOT ENOUGH CHILDREN

ever receive the proper balance of food to adequately nourish both body and brain, during the growing period when nature's demands are greater than in mature life. This is shown in so many pale faces, lean bodies, frequent colds, and lack of ambition.

For all such children we say with unmistakable earnestness: They need Scott's Emulsion, and need it now. It possesses in concentrated form the very food elements to enrich their blood. It changes weakness to strength; it makes them sturdy and strong. No alcohol.

THEATRICAL

Miss Chlira has recently entered into a contract with the Lasky company by the terms of which she will appear every year in a certain number of photodramatic offerings, at the same time continuing her legitimate stellar career as a Broadway celebrity.

"The Wild Goose Chase" is the love story of a college boy and a charming girl. At about the time they first meet and fall instantly in love with one another each is ordered by stern parents to marry an unknown mate. The reason for this is that the grandfathers of the two young people are two rich old gentlemen of France, and these two old men, according to European custom, offer to provide large sums of money if the young people marry one another.

To escape these enforced marriages, man and girl both leave home and join the same wandering theatrical troupe, which meets with many trials and tribulations. It is not until the very end that the young people, finally learning each other's real names, find that they have been on a wild goose chase all the time, because the very thing they desire themselves is what the grandfathers have ordered. At the Majestic Friday, July 21.

Hazel Dawn, who, it will be pleasantly recalled, made her debut in motion pictures in "One of Our Girls," a former Famous Players production, in which she sprang into immediate international popularity as a film favorite, returns to the screen in an elaborate five-part photo-adaptation of the famous stage success, "Niobe," by Harry and Edward A. Poulton. "Niobe" is the comedy of a Greek statue that comes to life and has a great deal of amusement—and some sorrow—at the hands of contemporary mortals.

The humor of the play is derived from the fact that Peter Amos Dunn, president of an insurance company, brings to his own house, for safe-keeping, the precious statue of Niobe, which his company has heavily insured. Electricians wiring the house at the time wrap the electric coils about the feet of the statue. Dunn falls asleep, and dreams that the current passes through the wires, bringing the statue to life. The perfectly moral president finds himself in a delicate and amusing position in trying to explain to his shocked wife and other members of his household the presence of the scantly clad maid running wildly through his home. At the crucial moment of his misery, he awakes, however, and finds Niobe in her ancient and peaceful condition.

As the incarnated statue that raises havoc with the insurance company president, Miss Dawn has numerous and unequalled opportunities for the display of the captivating powers that made "One of Our Girls" such a bewitching characterization. At Majestic Sunday, July 23.

The William Fox version of D'Enfer's famous drama, "The Two Orphans," which differs radically from the stage version in power, life and color, calls for the services of an altogether exceptional cast, headed by Theda Barra and Jean Sothorn as Henriette and Louise, the "two orphans." The part of Henriette is a radical departure from the Vampire parts with which Miss Barra's name has become associated both here and Paris; where she was leading woman of the Theatre Antoine. Her splendid artistry, however, renders the French actress capable of giving an unusually powerful rendition of the character and the succeeds admirably in bringing out the deep emotional side of Henriette. Jean Sothorn, one of the most winsome and beautiful of the younger American actresses gives an appealing performance of power and pathos as Louise, the blind girl. Miss Sothorn makes her screen debut in this part. At the Majestic, Monday, July 24.

COLLAPSIBLE BRIDGES.

Unique Structures Designed For Use in the Philippines.

A so called "collapsible" bridge has been designed by the bureau of public works for use in the Philippine islands, where there are a number of streams carrying just enough water to be unfordable and subject to floods of extreme height and force, which carry down large quantities of brush and trees. It is necessary to provide some crossing for these streams, and yet money is not available for the construction of a structure permanent enough to withstand the extreme flood conditions, says the Engineering News.

The new "collapsible" bridge is essentially a series of pile timber bents, carrying short span timber girders and floor, which are attached to cables reaching to dead men on the shore. In general the floor and floor system is broken in the middle of the bridge, and the cables extend from either side of the river to a point midway. During a flood the floor and girder are torn from their insecure fastenings to the bent and swing down stream, attached to the cables. After the flood has passed the floor system is floated up stream and placed again upon the timber bents.

One such bridge was recently built at Gapan across the Pampanga river, Philippine islands, and is giving good service.

"She can't swim," said Eliza, and O'Neill put an end to this display of heroism with a firm refusal.

"You'll think I'm afraid," Natalie expostulated.

"Bliss you, of course we will, because you are. So am I, and so is Eliza, for that matter. If you can't swim you'd only be taking a foolish risk and adding to our danger. Besides, Eliza doesn't know the feel of cold water as you do."

Natalie smiled a little tremulously at recollection of the shipwreck.

"I'd much rather walk, of course," she said, and then to Eliza, "It—it will be a lovely ramble for us."

But Eliza shook her head. "This is material for my book, and I'll make enough out of it to—"

"Buy another orchard," Murray suggested.

Feeling more resigned, now that the adventure had taken on a purely financial color, Natalie at length allowed herself to be dissuaded, and Eliza settled herself in her seat with the disturbing consciousness that she had made herself appear selfish and rude in O'Neill's eyes. Nevertheless she had no notion of changing her mind.

When the other girl had gone the oarsman completed his preparations by lashing fast the contents of the skiff, a proceeding which Eliza watched with some uneasiness. O'Neill showed his resentment by a pointed silence, which nettled her, and she resolved to hold her seat though the boat turned somersaults.

Word was finally given, and they swung out into the flood. O'Neill stood as best he could on his firm leg and steered by means of a sculler's oar, while the Norwegian rowed lustily.

Bits of drift, patches of froth, fragments of ice accompanied them, bobbing alongside so persistently that Eliza fancied the boat must be stationary until, glancing at the river banks, she saw them racing past like the panoramic scenery in a melodrama. The same glance showed her that they were rushing directly to ward the upper rapids of Jackson glacier, as if for an assault. Out here in the current there were waves, and these increased in size as the led of the Salmon grew steeper, until the poling boat began to rear and leap like a frightened horse. The glimmering wall ahead rose blither with every instant. It overhung, a glut, crumbling cliff, imposing, treacherous. Then the stream turned at right angles; they were swept along parallel with the lee face, and ahead of them for three miles stretched the gauntlet. The tottering wall seemed almost within reaching distance; its breath was cold and damp and clammy. O'Neill stood erect and powerful in the stern, swaying to the miles of the craft, his weight upon the sweep, his eyes fixed upon the thing overhead. The Norwegian strained at his oars while the sweat ran down into his open shirt. The boat lunged and wallowed, desperately, rising on end, falling with prodigious slaps, drenching the occupants with spray. It was splendid.

Terrifying. Eliza clung to her seat and felt her heartbeats smothering her. Occasionally the oarsman turned, staring past her with round, frightened eyes and affording her a glimpse of a face working with unclouded fear and exultation.

Thus far the glacier had not disputed their passage. It maintained the silence and the immobility of marble. Nothing but the snarl of the surging flood revealed from its face. But with the suddenness of a rifle shot there came a detonation, louder, sharper than any blast of powder. The Norwegian cursed; the helmsman dropped his eyes to the white face in the bow and smiled.

Half a mile ahead of them a mass of ice came rumbling down, and the whole valley rocked with the sound. Onward the little craft fled, a dancing speck beneath the majesty of that frozen giant, an atom threatened by the weight of mountains. At last through the opening of the gorge below came a glimpse of the flats that led to the sea. A moment later the boat swung into an eddy and came to rest, bumping against the bowlders.

O'Neill sat down, wiping his wet face. "Well, was it worth your trouble, Miss Kick-over-the-traces?" he asked.

"Oh, it was glorious! I'll never forget it," Eliza's cheeks were burning now, her aching hands relaxed their hold, and she drew a deep breath—the first of which she had been conscious since the start, fifteen minutes before.

"Now, on with your boots and your creaser. We'll have an hour's wait for Natalie."

She gave a cry of surprise and offered him a glimpse of a trim ankle and a dripping foot.

"See! They're wet, and I wriggled my toes right through my stockings. I never was so excited!"

The boatman fastened the painter and resumed his outer clothing. O'Neill lit a cigar and asked:

"Tell me, why did you insist on coming?"

"I was afraid something might happen to you." He raised his brows, and she flushed. "Don't you understand? Dan would never have forgiven me, and—and—I just had to come, that's all. It's corking material for me—I thought you might upset, and I—I don't know why I insisted." She bent over her stubborn boots, hiding her face. She was flaming to the ears, for suddenly she knew the reason that had prompted her. It rushed upon her like a sense of great shame. She recalled the desperate grip at her heart when she had seen him ready to leave, the wildness of her longing to share his danger, the black fear that he might meet disaster alone. It had all come without warning, and there had been no time for self-consciousness, but now she realized the truth. The poignant pain of it made her fingers clumsy and sent that flood of scarlet to her neck and ears.

When Natalie arrived they cast off, and the remaining miles were made in a few hours.

Appleton joined them for lunch in the tent they remembered so well and professed to be shocked at the report of his sister's foolhardiness. But whatever may have been Natalie's fear of ridicule it promptly disappeared under his complete indifference to her wisdom in refraining from such a mad adventure. As if to put her even more at ease O'Neill was especially attentive to her, and Eliza reflected gloomily that men, after all, dislike bravado in women, that a trapeze artist or a lady balloonist inspires only a qualified admiration.

During O'Neill's absence work had progressed steadily. On his return he found the grade completed to within a few yards of Gordon's right of way. Although he was still unable to walk, he insisted upon going to the front, whither he was helped by Appleton and Happy Tom.

Into the narrow space between the end of his embankment and that of his rival's a gravel train was spilling its burden and a hundred pick and shovel men were busy. The opposing forces also seemed hard at work, but their activity was largely a pretense, and they showed plainly that they were waiting for the clash. They were a hard looking crew, and their employer had neglected no precaution. He had erected barricades for their protection until his grade looked like a military work.

"They haven't showed any guns yet, but I'm sure they're armed," Appleton told his chief.

"How is the place lighted by night?" O'Neill inquired.

"Oil torches," Slater answered. "Ah! We've been recognized. That comes from being fat, I s'pose."

As he spoke a donkey engine at the right of the proposed crossing set up a noisy rattling, a thin steel cable whirled into view between the rails and from the left there appeared a contrivance, which O'Neill eyed curiously. It was a sort of drag and rode back and forth upon the rails.

"Humph! They'd better not put much trust in that," Murray grunted grimly.

"Don't fool yourself. It's no rubber tired baby carriage," said Slater. "Our men are afraid of it."

After watching the device scuttle back and forth for a few moments O'Neill said shortly:

"Post a notice at once offering a thousand dollars for any man who cuts that cable."

"A thousand?" Appleton gasped.

"Wig, I'll do it. Let me!"

"No, you won't," Slater broke in.

"I'll take that on myself."

"I spoke first. It's my first chance," O'Neill cried.

"It's my job! I'm going!"

"Wait a minute!" O'Neill silenced the two who were glaring at each other angrily. "Don't let's have any fighting. There will be enough of that later."

"I spoke first," O'Neill repeated stubbornly.

"I had my mouth puckered to spit, that's why," the fat man explained.

"A fellow has to spit!"

"I'd rather you wouldn't spit, Dan," said O'Neill.

"Why?"

"You might get hurt."

Happy Tom nodded his agreement.

"Certainly! Never send a boy on a man's errand."

"And I don't want you to do it, either, Tom, for the same reason."

Slater mumbled some sort of sour acquiescence, but Dan would not be denied.

"You made the offer, and I took it up," he told O'Neill. "Somebody has to make the first move, and I have a particular need for exactly a thousand dollars. If they start a rumour it will give us the excuse we're looking for. I've been studying that 'go-devil' through fieldglasses for two days now, and I'll guarantee to put it out of commission before Gordon's men know what I'm about. Just forget the reward, if you like, and give me a chance."

"What's your plan?" Slater inquired eagerly, but Appleton shook his head.

"No, you don't, Tommy," he said.

"I'm wise to you."

Murray hesitated briefly, then gave his permission. "I'd rather you'd let one of the roughnecks take the chance, but if you insist—"

"I do."

"Then get your sister's consent!"

Slater swore mournfully, as if from a heart filled with black despair.

"Ain't that my luck? One cud of gum cost me $1,000. Bosh! It would take a millionaire to afford a habit like that!" He expelled the gum violently and went grumbling off on the track.

"She won't object," said Dan lightly. "She'll offer to do the trick herself, for she's getting the aprit of the work."

When O'Neill had managed to regain the camp he began preparations for an attack that very night, using the telephone lustily. News of the coming affair quickly spread, and both the day and night shifts discussed it excitedly at supper time.

After supper the camp settled itself to wait for darkness. Night was slow in coming, and long before Appleton signified his readiness speculation was rife. With the approach of twilight the torches along Gordon's grade began to glow brightly. Then Dan set his watch with Happy Tom's, kissed Eliza and made off across the tundra. He left the S. I. and N. at right angles and, continued in that direction for a mile or more before swinging about in a wide circle which brought him well to the rear of Gordon's encampment.

Curtis Gordon was not in charge of his field forces, having left the command to his favorite Jackal, Denny. Beneath his apparent contempt for the law there lurked a certain caution. He knew his rival's necessity. He appreciated his cunning, but, wishing to guard against the possibility of a personal humiliation, he retired to Kyak, where he was prepared to admit or deny as much responsibility as suited him. Denny had not forgotten O'Neill's exposure of his dishonesty, and his zeal could be relied upon. He personally knew all the men under him, he had coached them carefully, and he assured Gordon of his ability to hold his ground.

Dan Appleton from his cover measured the preparations for resistance with some uneasiness, reflecting that if Denny had the nerve to use firearms he would undoubtedly rout O'Neill's men, who had not been permitted to carry guns. By the bright torchlight he could see figures coming and going along the grade like sentinels, and from within the barricades as lies he heard others talking. The camp itself, which lay farther to the left, was lighted, and black silhouettes were painted against the canvas walls and roofs. Some one was playing an accordion, and its wailing notes came to him intermittently. He saw that steam was up in the boiler which operated the "go-devil," although the contrivance itself was stationary. It was upon this that he centered his attention, consulting his watch nervously.

At last 10 o'clock came, bringing with it a sound which startled the nearby camp into activity. It was a shrill blast from an S. I. and N. locomotive and the grinding of car wheels. The accordion ceased its complaint, men poured out of the lighted tents, Appleton moved cautiously out from cover.

He stumbled forward through the knee deep mud and moss, bearing slightly to his right, counting upon the confusion to mask his approach. He timed it to that of the gravel train, which came slowly creaking nearer, rocking over the uneven tracks, then down upon the half submerged rails which terminated near the opposing grade. It stopped finally, with headlight glaring into the faces of Denny and his troops, and from the high peaked flat cars tumbled an army of pick and shovel men. During this hubbaloop Appleton slipped out of the marsh and climbed the gravel bed in time to see the steel cable of the ship derrick, carrying the drag swiftly along the track. The endless cable propelling the contrivance ran through a metal block which was secured to a deadwood sunk between the ties, and up this post Dan hastened. He carried a cold chisel and hammer, but he found no use for them, for the pulley was roped to the deadend. Drawing his knife, he saved at the manila strands. Men were all around him, but in their excitement they took no notice of him. Not until he had nearly completed his task was he discovered; then some one raised a shout. The next instant they charged upon him, but the ropes parted, the cable went writhing and twisting up the track, the ungainly apparatus came to a stop.

CO. I HARDEST HIT COMPANY

24 MEMBERS FAIL IN EXAMINATIONS

New Government Supplies Being Issued—Army Aeroplane Making Flights—Bad Forest Fires.

(BY HAROLD W. USHER)

CAMP FERRIS, Grayling, July 24.—Co. I, 33rd Infantry, M. N. G., was the hardest hit company in the regiment in the physical examinations, which took place last week. Twenty-four men were sent home because of some physical defect or other. The following were rejected: Elwin Johnson, Ben Smatts, Ed Zess, Stewart Baar, Claud Johnson, Floyd Cook, Bruce Flannery, Blaine Harrington, L. G. Balch, Harry Potter, Henry Gilkerson, Percy Lauerbier, Max Brail, Morton Handy, John Griffin, Adolphus Allard, R. V. Smith and Louis Hendrix. Five more men were also sent home because of dependents.

Following this loss, some promotions took place. Harry Beuker, Duncan Crawford, Olaf Olsen and Julius Nachazel received appointments as corporals. L. G. Balch, 2nd lieutenant, failed to pass the examination and received his discharge.

During the past few days new government supplies have been issued. New shoes, coats, breeches and mess kits have been issued. Each man is allowed $100 the first year to buy clothing and $48.00 each year thereafter. This is separate from the regular pay. If this allowance is not used, it is turned over to the men at the end of their enlistment.

Following the vaccination for smallpox, most of the men were sick. Out of Co. I, there was but 16 men able to drill. One man is down with the mumps and in the hospital.

For a number of days past large forest fires have been raging around the camp and the village of Grayling. The members of the signal corps were called out to fight it back, but were unable to overcome it, and it is still burning.

The new government aeroplane has arrived and makes flights every evening. The members of the signal corps are being instructed in the operation of the machine. The plane made a long flight Monday evening, and I am told was seen over East Jordan about 11:00 o'clock and probably was over or very near to Charlevoix.

Another new attraction is the armed motor car. It is built similar to a box and contains six machine guns capable of firing 600 shots per minute, and can also run at a speed of 60 miles per hour. It is built of armor steel one-half inch thick. At the front of the machine is a long bar of steel, sharpened to razor edge, which is used to cut away any wire obstacles or other entanglements which may be in the path of the machine. The machine was driven through from Flint by a member of the machine gun company, and is the pride of the camp.

No definite time for the departure of the regiment has been set, nor is it present known, and it is possible that the men may stay here until fall and then receive their discharge.

(Note: Recent rulings allow members of any company to write news of camp 24 hours after it has occurred. This will enable the Courier to publish weekly letters from its correspondent.—Ed.)

HOT WEATHER HARD ON BERRY CROP

Continued Drouth Drying Up Both Plants and Fruit.

The continued hot weather is playing havoc with the berry crop. While there is an abundance of everything in the berry line, it is almost impossible to get people to gather them on account of the intense heat.

This especially applies to huckleberries, and if the hot weather continues much longer and we fail to get rain, the crop will dry up on the bush. A few are on the local market at almost a prohibitive price.

Other fruits are also being affected by the weather and the grower who can irrigate his plants will clean up a nice bunch of money.

GOINGS OF COUNCIL AT MONDAY'S SESSION

Police Force Given Additional Man—Rest Benches Ordered.

At Monday evening session of the common council, six benches were ordered built and placed in convenient places around the city. This action will be appreciated by the public and should have been done a long time ago.

For some time a patrolman has been needed on the beach near the life saving station. This matter was taken up and referred to the police, fire and license committee who will confer with the captain of the Coast Guards before action is taken.

The committee report on the proposed revision of the charter, with reference to a commission form of government, was received and placed on file.

Harvey Cutler was named and appointed as member of the regular police force.

Anthony Williams.

Mr. Joseph D. Anthony and Mrs. Nellie L. Williams, both of Brownsville, Tennessee, were married at the summer home of Arthur C. Clement, at nine o'clock Monday morning, July 24, Rev. C. E. Taggart officiating. Mrs. Anthony is a relative of Mrs. Clement. Only the immediate friends of the bride and groom were present.

Sustains Decision of Lower Court.

Monday, Prosecuting Attorney Lewis received word from Lansing that the recent decision of the circuit court in the case of the People vs. Glenn Smith, statutory rape, had been sustained. The case was heard in the circuit court during the spring term and later carried to the supreme court.

Auto Tax Money.

City Treasurer George W. Weaver received a check for $2,369.90, this week from the auditor general, this being the Charlevoix county portion of the 1916 automobile tax.

TRAFFIC HEAVY ON HIGHWAYS

REACHES HIGHEST POINT FOR MANY SEASONS

Six Hundred Twenty Eight Automobiles and Horse Drawn Vehicles in 24 Hours.

Few people in Charlevoix or those living in the rural districts adjacent, realize the enormous amount of daily traffic over streets and highways.

On Sunday, July 16, during a period of 24 hours, an accurate account of automobiles and horse drawn vehicles passing over the Emmet and Grand Traverse road, referred to here as the Petoskey road, was kept, and the figures are far beyond expectation, the actual count being 628.

On Sunday, July 23, the number of passing vehicles were checked from the same point between the hours of 5:00 p. m. and 9:00 p. m. During this period of time, 245 automobiles and three horse drawn vehicles passed over the road.

The count was taken by an employee of the state and is accurate in every detail. A person will have to imagine the number passing during the balance of the day, but figured from a basis obtained the previous week, it would exceed this number considerably.

Those who are well informed state that traffic so far this year has not reached the highest limit. August will be the heaviest month.

Charlevoix county and its good roads, and "Charlevoix the Beautiful" as a summer resort, are becoming more popular each year, as is testified by the hundreds now here and coming daily by boat and train. The outlook is that the 1916 season will be a record breaker.

FRIENDLY ADVICE

WARNING SENT OUT TO AUTOISTS

FROM STATE DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE

Urged Not to Use Chamois Skin for Filtering Gasoline—Use Extremely Dangerous.

The Department of Insurance is in receipt of the following article calling attention to the danger arising from the use of the chamois skin for filtering gasoline.

Garage men, Beware. Autoists, Attention. There is death in the chamois strainer. Whenever you filter gasoline through chamois you are playing hide and seek with one of the deadliest combinations known to man, Electricity and Gasoline. If your tank is under the seat, be careful when you fill it. If you are not, you will be as foolish as the man who looks for a gas leak with a lighted candle.

Never strain gasoline through a chamois, as gasoline and chamois are incompatible.

Let us assume that you are about to fill your tank, a chamois strainer is in the funnel, and the funnel is in the nozzle. The gasoline is turned on and as it pours through the chamois it generates Static Electricity. Static Electricity may be defined as electricity that is at rest. It is an agent neither of construction or destruction, so long as nothing is done to unleash it. Unleash it knowingly, or unknowingly by brushing a clumsy finger against a natural law, and you have to deal with the most diabolical, physical agent known, a force that destroys with the quickness of lightning. The funnel becomes charged with Static Electricity and unless the funnel fits securely into the mouth of the tank creating a ground, you are in danger. Now let us assume that the funnel does not rest securely in the mouth of the tank, as the gasoline seeps through the chamois skin and that either yourself, or someone else, holds the funnel above, or it rests free from the side of the tank, a volatile substance passes through the chamois forming this Static Electricity, which charges the funnel and when the amount of electricity is sufficient to produce a jump spark, that spark following the inevitable law of electrical attraction jumps to the nearest ground, which is your tank, and in so doing it must pass across the opening between the end of the funnel and the edge of the tank, through which gasoline vapor arises and results in a violent discharge, like that which is after all a gigantic jump spark and all those in close proximity as it were struck by lightning. Many have been burned and scarred for life through ignorance of the fiend of electricity. Many more have been measured out on their last cool bed, no one able to tell just why they died.

FERRIS REFUSES A THIRD TERM

GIVES FINAL ANSWER TO MICH. DEMOCRATS

"Grateful to Citizens of State for High Honor" but Positively Refuses to Run Again.

Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris, the first democrat to occupy the executive office in nearly a quarter of a century, will retire from active participation in Michigan politics. He sent a telegram to Chairman Stevenson of the democratic state central committee in Lansing, Friday positively declining to accept the nomination for a third term.

The governor's telegram to Chairman Stevenson follows: "To the best of my ability I have served Michigan as governor for nearly two terms. I am grateful to the citizens of Michigan who have bestowed upon me this high honor. After the most careful consideration of the wishes of thousands of voters I am compelled to regard popular usage together with home duties and positively decline to become a candidate for a third term."

Three times Woodbridge N. Ferris has aspired to the governorship and twice he has been successful. He was a candidate against Fred M. Warner in 1904. In 1912 when the republicans were divided and the national progressives had a complete ticket in the field he was elected. Two years ago when Chase S. Osborn headed the republican ticket Governor Ferris was re-elected by a substantial plurality.

At the democratic state convention this spring the governor said he would not accept a third term, but few of the party leaders took his statement seriously. State house democrats are relieved today as the result of the governor's statement.

Luren D. Dickinson, of Charlotte, has filed in Lansing enough petitions to place his name on the primary ballot as a candidate for the republican nomination for governor. Dickinson is the first republican candidate to file.

In County Jail Again.

Bert Reinhart, a well known local character, was picked up in East Jordan, Tuesday, by Sheriff Novak and Prosecutor Lewis. Reinhart had filled himself with booze, and in a fight that followed, was badly bruised up. He will probably serve time in lonia this time. He is 73 years of age and it is stated that 37 years of his life has been spent in various jails and penitentiaries in the United States.

APPROPRIATION HAS PASSED HOUSE

$30,000 FOR BOYNE CITY POST OFFICE

New Building Practically Assured for Boyne City Says Congressman Scott

Washington, July 17.

Citizen, Boyne City Mich. Public buildings bill, introduced in the House today, included item for $30,000 for Boyne City post office. This practically assures the building.

FRANK D. SCOTT. The above telegram was received by The Citizen, Monday evening. Since that time advice have been received that the bill has passed the house carrying the $30,000 appropriation item.

Although nearby cities of comparative size have many times this amount appropriated there is a great deal of satisfaction expressed over the prospects of a building adequate to the needs of a progressive city of 5,000 population.

As the site has been in possession of the government for some time it may be hoped to see the building under construction in a reasonable length of time.

For years the government has been forced to pay a high rental for a building, which although the best obtainable, is entirely inadequate.

Congressman Scott's active interest in the legitimate needs of this community is greatly appreciated.—Boyne Citizen.

DISCIPLINE AT GRAYLING RIGID

NEW ORDERS FOR ALL COMMANDERS

Must Click Heels and Salute Like Soldiers; Officers Are Held Responsible.

Camp Ferris, Grayling—Tightening of discipline of the guardsmen has begun.

Adjutant General Daniel W. Smith called a meeting of all company commanders to instruct them to pay more attention to teaching their men the military formalities. Rigid disciplinary rules will be enforced throughout the brigade.

Because of the indisposition of the men following the typhoid and smallpox treatments, there has been no quartermaster supplies issued from St. Louis. Major Wells declared that the government has stopped sending bulky supplies by express, except in great emergencies. If this equipment is sent by freight, it is doubtful when it will arrive.

Services were held Sunday in the Y. M. C. A. tent of the Thirty-third infantry by Chaplain Swan. He emphasized the necessity of man following certain pleasures to serve God.

There has been marked improvement in the national guard since the Spanish-American war, according to Colonel William T. McGurrian and special emphasis is placed upon the formalities of greeting and address of the enlistment men to an officer. Many of the recruits have approached headquarters to get a pass signed, and have asked for the "boss," much in the same way that they would enter a factory in search for a job.

Now, however, this will be changed. The young men will have to present a military appearance. They will not be permitted to come up to brigade headquarters in shirt sleeves. They must click their heels together, and salute in proper fashion. Every officer will be held responsible for the conduct of his men, according to Major Smith.

"We do not blame the men as much as the commanders," Major Smith said. "The men do the best they can. If not instructed by their commanders, they will never learn. We expect that the Michigan guardsmen will present the smartest and most military appearance of all of the state organizations."

Major Wells has forwarded requisitions for ordnance supplies to the Rock Island arsenal. All engineer and signal corps requisitions have been sent to the heads of these departments at Washington, D. C. Thirty-first Michigan infantry at that time, and later brigadier general, who visited camp today.

Most notable of these, he stated, are those which make for camp sanitation.

"The Spanish-American war demonstrated the importance of sanitation," he said, "as nothing else could. There is also more and better equipment. Efficiency also is more noticeable."

At the beginning of the war, General McGurrian recalled, the troops mobilized at Island Lake, April 26, 1898, and left for Tampa, May 19. The Michigan troops have been here more than a month.

General McGurrian was lavish in his praise for the guard. He declared that the personnel of the state organization was of an exceptionally high character, even the privates, he declared, as a rule, were well educated, and for that reason made soldiers of unusual ability.

He believes that the Michigan troops will remain at the border for a long time.

"For this reason," he said, "it is very liable to prove embarrassing to many business men. If it was not for this uncertainty everything would be all right. As they would know just how long they would be gone, and could arrange their business affairs accordingly."

"The national guard should not be called upon unless the situation warranted this action. However, it is time that the Mexican problem was settled, and I see no way out of it but by force, as there is no one man in Mexico strong enough to keep any agreement he might make in regard to the protection of Americans."

McGurrian is commandant of the Soldiers' home at Grand Rapids. He was with Major Grube, of Field hospital, No. 1, superintendent of the Soldiers' home, all day. He left at night.

SIGNS OF DANGER

That Should Be Heeded by Charlevoix People.

There's serious danger in neglecting any weakness of the kidneys. The warning that Nature gives should not be overlooked. If troubled by too frequent passage of the kidney secretions; burning or scalding; if the secretions are highly colored and contain sediment when left standing—if you have backache, too, with frequent headaches and dizziness, make up your mind that your kidneys are affected and begin using some reliable kidney remedy. Deaths from kidney disease have increased in the United States alone, 72 per cent in the last 20 years. The risk is great—you can't afford to delay. Charlevoix people recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Can you ask for better proof of merit than the statement of this Charlevoix resident?

Mrs. R. M. McKeel, 214 Mason St., Charlevoix, says: "I had been troubled for several months by kidney disease. My body bloated quite badly and I had a weak back and severe pains in my kidneys. My rest was broken at night. I finally got Doan's Kidney Pills at the Ivy Drug Store and they gave me relief in every way."

From all at dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. McKeel had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

RAILROAD WAGES

Shall they be determined by Industrial Warfare or Federal Inquiry?

To the American Public:

Do you believe in arbitration or industrial warfare?

The train employees on all the railroads are voting whether they will give their leaders authority to tie up the commerce of the country to enforce their demands for a 100 million dollar wage increase.

The railroads are in the public service—your service. This army of employees is in the public service—your service.

You pay for rail transportation 3 billion dollars a year, and 44 cents out of every dollar from you goes to the employees.

On all the Eastern Railroads in 1915, seventy-five per cent of the train employees earned these wages (lowest, highest, and average of all) as shown by the payrolls—

	Passenger		Freight		Yard
	Range	Average	Range	Average	Range	Average
Engineers	$1641	$1931	$1585	$1783	$1303	$1543
	3224		2992		2178
Conductors	1553	1831	1552	1642	1145	1315
	3004		2901		1891
Firemen	931	1128	933	1109	752	935
	1704		1762		1633
Brakemen	957	1141	862	973	834	1085
	1707		1521		1635

The average yearly wage payments to all Eastern train employees (including those who worked only part of the year) as shown by the 1915 payrolls were—

	Passenger	Freight	Yard
Engineers	$1796	$1546	$1384
Conductors	1724	1404	1238
Firemen	1033	903	844
Brakemen	1018	858	990

A 100 million dollar wage increase for men in freight and yard service (less than one-fifth of all employees) is equal to a 5 per cent advance in all freight rates.

The managers of the railroads, as trustees for the public, have no right to place this burden on the cost of transportation to you without a clear mandate from a public tribunal speaking for you.

The railroads have proposed the settlement of this controversy either under the existing national arbitration law, or by reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission. This offer has been refused by the employees' representatives.

Shall a nation-wide strike or an investigation under the Government determine this issue?

BADLY IN NEED OF A PUBLIC REST ROOM

Van Pelt Calls Attention of Need of One in Charlevoix.

No tax payer, nor any man who owns property, should refuse to pay his proper proportion of tax. Money is absolutely necessary to run our city government and as long as good use is made of it and it is not fooled away, I don't care what my tax may be. Surely, no little city has more to show in the way of improvements than has Charlevoix, as is evidenced by our electric and water systems, our sidewalks and our streets.

We sadly need a rest room for our city and country visitors—a place where a mother can go in with her baby and give it such attention as may be necessary, a place to wash and clean up after a long, dusty ride—a place to visit while a farmer disposes of his truck and farm products and does his trading. Such a place not only is absolutely necessary, but it will be a great advantage to our merchants. No one can tell the gain such a rest room will be, nor the loss for not having had one in the past. It's a pretty hard day's work for a mother to come to town with her little ones and have no place to go for a few moments of rest and quiet.

I will be glad to take this matter up with those interested. I might add that there is not a man, woman or child who is not interested, or who ought not to be.

We cannot build a hundred miles of concrete road this year, but we can build a rest room and at the same time organize a stock company for the purpose of buying all kinds of farm produce and have it ready for this season's business. Come now, let's all get busy and do something good—something that we will all be proud of.

Because you may have lived in an old house, or used an old store 40 or 50 years, that is no saying that you should always continue to do so. Progress is success. We have the nicest little city on earth. The Lord has done marvelous things for Charlevoix and it is up to us to make good and to show our appreciation of His good work. Three things we want and will get 'em. Concrete roads, a rest house and a new sound financial firm to buy all the farmers' produce that may be offered here and to make it an inducement for farmers to come here. One, two, three. Hear me and act ye.
GEORGE H. VAN PELT.

"The Nigger."
Philip Morrow, a wealthy young planter, and owner of Morrow's Rest, has grown to manhood in the belief that the blood in his veins is the most aristocratic in the south. He is happy in the love of Georgiana Byrd, the belle of his native state. Rich, young, and a power politically, his cup of happiness seems to be filled to overflowing.

"Cliff" Noyes, a political boss and distiller of whiskey of the fiery brand manufactured for negro consumption, persuades Morrow to run for governor. During the campaign one of Philip's negroes is lynched, in spite of Morrow's efforts to save him for the law. The incident makes a deep impression on Morrow's mind, and upon his election to the governorship he decides to sign a prohibition bill which would mean the ruin of Noyes' business.

Threatened with extinction Noyes visits Morrow and springs the trap. In rummaging in an attic he has found papers proving that Morrow, the aristocrat, the blue-blooded land owner and governor of the state has a touch of negro blood in his veins. Morrow faces the blow manfully. He confesses the taint in his blood to Georgiana and then determines to do the right thing as he sees it.

With a stroke of his pen Morrow, crushed, but not broken by the fearful revelation of his ancestry, makes the prohibition bill a law, and to make his heroic self sacrifice complete, resigns his office to devote the remainder of his life to the uplifting of the negro race. Right Now is THE TIME

Right now is the time to talk about your heating plant. Don't wait until you can look into the sky and see the snow flakes coming down as big as hase halls and the wind blowing 57 miles an hour, and the house 10 degrees below zero. Now is the time to make up your mind and have the plant installed and ready for business. If you do this you will not be obliged to go out into some outdoor building and dig up that old heating stove and set it up on three legs and a couple of bricks. Then it turns up that Johnnie had the door during the summer to make a fire under and had left it on the back eighty. The stove pipe turns up missing and some is forced to make a drive to town for a new one. Then come the "cuss" words" putting up the pipe.

Now is the time to do away with all of this trouble. Let me explain to you the merits of the heating plants I sell. I will install a plant in your home and will not ask for a cent in payment until you acknowledge that you are entirely satisfied with it. What could be more fair.

I installed nearly a hundred plants last year and you cannot show me a dissatisfied customer. That is the way our plants work. Drop me a card or call at the house and see me. Look over what I have in the heating plant line. Can furnish all material, brick, etc. Furnaces with brick jackets or iron, any kind you may want. Let me explain them to you and you will buy.

HEADWORK NEEDED

Only a few years ago it was generally believed that politicians would never allow the cities of the country to get out of their grip and adopt systems that would result in business efficiency instead of political profit. Such has not proven to be the case as within the past four years forty cities of the United States have adopted the city manager plan and are now operating in a business like way at a great saving to the taxpayers. This is one of the many signs of the times that points to the fact that efficiency is bound to be demanded by the people in their public affairs as well as in their own personal business. The situation has reached a point where it is folly to keep on wasting when the remedy is right at hand ready to be accepted as soon as the people wake up to the fact that they are in need of something better in the manner of administering municipal government. Over in the land of the kaiser where it is claimed that efficiency has been developed to a fine art the people do not elect some good fellow who can get the votes to manage the business of their cities, but instead the head men of the city look round until they can find somebody who has developed sagacity along the line of civic management and then they hire him and set him to work unhampered to put the city upon a business like basis. It is also a significant fact that every time a city gets into some serious trouble it has to change from the old political system before it can get back upon its financial feet. This happened in Galveston, Des Moines, Dayton and several other cities where a sudden emergency caused the old political machine with all its ramifications and red tape to suddenly break under the exceptional strain. The commission plan of government was evolved out of an emergency was now that this idea has pretty well served its day the city manager has appeared to relieve the situation and put cities up in the same basis as the other business of the country. It is also a significant fact that the cities that are after a manager are not looking after a cheap hand, either. Dayton offered Colonel Goethals $25,000 a year to take charge of their town and when he refused the next best man was chosen and nobody asked him what ticket he voted or if he would employ their relatives when he took his new position. All that was wanted was an efficient administration and the people were willing to pay for such. They paid the price and received what they were looking for and are satisfied and nobody wants to return to the old political methods again at any price.

THERE IS ANOTHER SIDE TO IT

Stories come from the border of sickness in the ranks of the guardsmen and discomfort, if not actual suffering, among the men of a few commands because the clothing issued to them is not adapted to the tropic conditions which prevail at this time of the year along the Rio Grande and the land boundary lines.

There is sympathy for the men everywhere in the country, but it should be remembered that as an offset to present ills the future will show that, barring the coming of actual war, the vast majority of the guardsmen now in the field will benefit greatly physically by their experience, and their benefit is the country's benefit.

There are soldiers in the hospital with stomach disorders, mumps and other things, and a few even with the dreaded pneumonia, but the many thousands are not on the sick list nor are they likely to get there. They are eating as they never eat before; they are getting more air into their lungs than they ever got there before, and they are getting the exercise and the discipline that make for moral and physical health. There are many things to be sorry for on the border, but there are also many things to be glad for. Parents, brothers, sisters and friends of the guardsmen should bear this in mind.

The trials are for the day. When the whole unhappy Mexican affair is settled, and settled right, and the boys come home again, it will be hard to find one of them who, even if he has had the mumps or has been made to wear a woolen shirt in hot weather, would change place, popular estate and experience with any stay-at-home one of us.

When a fellow sits around, does nothing and criticizes everything and everybody, he makes himself the greatest object of criticism. Speak the good word instead.

Recruits are being rejected because of ingrowing toenails. The alleged outgrowth on some upper lips apparently escaped detection.

A censor has been put on the job in the war department. No doubt he will get his full share of the blame for the Mexican policy.

A clean town never needs to advertise the fact. Isn't Charlevoix known all over the state as the cleanest town in Michigan?

"Perspiration" is the password, not only on the border, but in all northern Michigan.

Bathing girls as pictured this season are wearing liberal smiles—and not much else.

A POLITICAL "BOOM."

How the Idea of the Expression Came to Its First User.

The word "boom," as applied to a political movement, so far as known, was first used by the editor of a Republican newspaper in St. Louis, Mo., pending the return of General U. S. Grant from the trip around the world undertaken by him in 1870, immediately following his retirement from the presidency of the United States.

The term was used so persistently and so cleverly that it soon began to lodge in popular thought and to take on the meaning which the editor intended to convey when he declared that the movement looking to a third term for Grant was "booming," or when he employed the invention as a noun and spoke of "the Grant boom."

The idea had come to him from a common expression used by the people along the Mississippi river. When that stream was at flood tide and sweeping everything before it it was said to be "booming." The St. Louis editor aimed to convey the thought that the movement for the nomination of Grant for the presidency in 1880 was like the onward sweep of a great river under such conditions, and therefore a boom.

The term soon came into general use and has been applied in the United States ever since, alike to spontaneous and preconcerted or organized movements looking to the placing of some person in an office of importance, not necessarily, but generally, the presidency.—Christian Science Monitor.

TWO GREAT PHRASES.

Which One of Them is It That You Are In the Habit of Using?

Did you ever reckon how many times a day you say "I can't" or hear it said?

Probably a much shorter stunt would be to count the number of times you hear or say, "I will."

These two sentences contain the whole story of character. They are the metal from which men shape success or failure.

We hammer and forge this metal daily.

With "I can't" we cast a weight which fastens us down. With "I will" we shape a marvelous spring which some day lands us at the height of our ambition.

After awhile we cannot move the weight at all, but in the end we can not resist the spring. It raises us in spite of ourselves, for "I will" has become a habit.

Sometimes a man who has weighted himself down by repeating "I can't" says enviously, "Nothing succeeds like success." And this is true, but he forgets that lack of the first success was an "I will" and then another and then another.

"I can't," "I will." There are the two most important sentences in any man's vocabulary.

Would we not better reverse the number of times most of us use them every day?—Illinois State Journal.

Her Trouseau.

Frederick Lemaitre, the celebrated actor, was somewhat parsimonious. When his daughter was about to marry Lemaitre agreed to provide the "dot" and the trousseau. "Dot," it may be observed, is the French equivalent for the English "dower."

When the notary came to complete the contract and was reading the terms Lemaitre said: "The daughter of Frederick Lemaitre has not need of a dot. M. Le Notaire, strike out the dot."

The prospective son-in-law was present, and he had the courage to reply: "The daughter of Frederick Lemaitre can easily do," herself with the fame of her father. M. Le Notaire, pray strike out the trousseau."

Weather Forecast.

"I do not think," says Edmund Yates in his book, "Recollections and Experiences," "I ever met a man more hopelessly deaf than Charles Kemble at seventy. Some of us were sitting one afternoon at the Garrick club when a tremendous thunderstorm broke.

"It raged with extraordinary fury, one clap exploding with terrific noise immediately above us like a volley of artillery.

"We looked around at each other in most of horror, when Charles Kemble, who was intently reading, lifted his eyes from his book and said in his trumpet tone, 'I think we are going to have some thunder; I feel it in my knees.'" Realistic.

"Why is Rosalie weeping so?" "She and Bessie and I were playing at keeping house. Rosalie was the wife, and I was the husband."

"I hope you were not cross to her. Husbands and wives should never quarrel, you know."

"Oh, we didn't fight. Bessie was our maid, and she quit without giving us notice."—Minneapolis Journal.

CHAPTER XIII. Dan Shocks Natalie.

DAN found himself beset by a half dozen of the enemy, who, having singled him out of the general confusion as the cause of the disaster, came at him headlong. But by this time O'Neill's men were pouring out of the darkness and overrunning the grade so rapidly that there was little opportunity for concerted action. Appleton had intended, as soon as he had cut the cable, to beat a hasty retreat into the marsh, but now, with the first gravel roadbed under his feet and the battle breaking before his eyes, he changed his mind. He carried a light heart, and the love of trouble romped through his veins. He lowered his head, therefore, and ran toward his assailants.

He felt himself being reduced to a pulp.

reduced to a pulp beneath the overpowering numbers of those savage heels.

They were groveling there in a tangle of legs and arms when Happy Tom came down the grade, leading a charge which swept the embankment clean.

The boss packer had equipped his command with pick handles and cow set a brilliant example in the use of this, his favorite weapon. For once the apathetic Slater was fully roused. He was tremendous, irresistible. In his capable grasp the oncoming cudgel became both armor and ball.

"Are you hurt, son?" he gasped. "Sure! I'm hurt quite some!" Dan spat out a mouthful of blood and said, "Gimme a club."

"Go back yonder," Tom directed swiftly. "Nell's coming before he gets 'em to shooting. Kill him if you have to. I'll take care of these fellows."

The younger man saw that the engagement at this end of the line was no longer general, but had become a series of individual combats, so he made what haste he could toward the scene of the more serious encounter to the right of the crossing. He judged that the issue was still in doubt there, although he could make out little in the confusion on account of the glaring headlight, which dazzled him.

As he ran, however, he discovered that the S. R. and N. forces were in possession of the middle ground, having divided the enemy's ranks like a wedge, and this encouraged him. Out of the darkness to right and left came shouts, curses, the sounds of men wallowing about in the knee deep mud. They were Gordon's helpers who had been routed from their positions.

Now that Appleton had time to collect himself, he too, grew sick with suspense, for he knew that arms had been stacked inside the barricades. Any instant might bring them into play. He began to wonder why Denny withheld the word to fire.

As a matter of fact, the explanation was simple, although it did not appear until later. Mr. Denny at that moment was in no condition to issue orders of any kind, the reason being as follows: When preparations for the advance were made Dr. Gray, who understood perhaps more fully than any one else except O'Neill the gravity of the issue and the slender pivot upon which the outcome balanced, had taken his place in the vanguard of the attacking party instead of in the background, as he had intended. The first rush had carried him well into the fray, but once there he had shown his good judgment by refusing to participate in it.

Instead he had selected Denny out of the opposing ranks and bored through the crowd in his direction, heedless of all efforts to stop him. His great strength had enabled him to gain ground. He had hurled his assailants aside, upsetting them, bursting through the press as a football player penetrates a line, and when the retreat had begun he was close at the heels of his victim. He had overtaken Denny beside one of the barricades just as Denny seized a rifle and raised it. With one wrench he possessed himself of the weapon, and the next instant he had bent the barrel over its owner's head.

Then as the fight surged onward he had gathered the limp figure in his arms and borne it into the light of a gasoline torch, where he could administer first aid. He was kneeling over the fellow when Appleton found him as he came stumbling along the grade.

But the decisive moment had come and gone now, and without a leader to command them Gordon's men seemed loath to adopt a more bloody reprisal. They gave way therefore in a half hearted hesitation that spelled ruin to their cause. They were forced back to their encampment.

Dan Appleton, very dirty, very tired, but happy, found Natalie and Eliza awaiting him when he limped up to their tent in the early morning light. One of his eyes was black and nearly closed, his lips were cut and swollen, but he grinned cheerfully as he exclaimed:

"Say! It was a great night, wasn't it?"

Eliza cried out in alarm at his appearance.

"You poor kid! You're a sight." She ran for hot water and soap, while Natalie said warily:

"You were perfectly splendid, Dan. I knew you'd do it."

"Did you?" He tried to smile his appreciation, but the effort resulted in a leer so repulsive that the girl looked dismayed. "You ought to have seen the shindy."

"Seen it! Maybe we didn't!"

"Honestly?"

"Did you think we could stay behind? We sneaked along with the cookhouse gang, and one of them helped us up on the gravel cars. He smelled of whiskey, but he was a hero. We screamed and cried and Eliza threw stones until Mr. O'Neill discovered us and made us get down. He was awfully mean."

"He's a mean man."

"He isn't! He was jumping around on one leg like a crippled grasshopper."

"I made a thousand dollars," said Dan. "Guess what I'm going to do with it?"

"How can I guess?"

"I'm going to buy an engagement ring." Once more he beamed repulsively.

"How nice!" said Natalie coolly. "Congratulations!"

"Guess who it's for?"

"I couldn't, really."

"It's for you."

"Oh, no, it isn't!" Natalie's voice was freezing. "You have made a mistake, a very great mistake, Dan. I like you, but we won't even mention such things, if you please."

Eliza's entrance saved her further embarrassment and she quickly made her escape. Dan ground so deeply as his sister bathed his injuries that she was really concerned.

"Goodness, Danny," she said. "Are you as badly hurt as all that?" "I'm worse," he confessed. "I've just been shot through the heart. Slow music and flowers for me! Arrange for the services and put a rose in my hand, sis."

"Nonsense! I'll put a beefsteak on your eye," she told him unfeelingly.

Under Dr. Gray's attention O'Neill's ankle began to mend, and by the time the track had been laid far enough beyond the crossing to insure against further interference from Gordon, he declared himself ready to complete the journey to Kyak, which he and the girls had begun three weeks before.

During the interval Eliza had occupied herself in laying out her magazine stories, and now she was eager to complete her investigations so as to begin the final writing. Her experience in the north thus far had given her an altered outlook upon the railroad situation, but as yet she knew little of the coal problem. That, after all, was the more important subject, and she expected it to afford her the basis for a sensational exposure. She had come to Alaska sharing her newspaper's views upon questions of public policy, looking upon Murray O'Neill as a daring promoter bent upon selling the means of transportation of a mighty realm for his own individual profit, upon Gordon as an unscrupulous adventurer and upon the copper

"I'm worse," he confessed, "I've just trust in a greedy corporation reaching out to strangle competition and absorb the riches of the northland. But she had found O'Neill an honorably ambitious man, honest, like others, in the struggle for success and backing his judgment with his last dollar. She had learned, moreover, to sympathize with his aims, and his splendid determination awoke her admiration. Her idea of the trust had changed, likewise far it seemed to be a fair and dignified competitor. She had seen no signs of that conscienceless, grasping policy, usually imputed to big business. In regard to Gordon alone her first conclusion had remained unchanged. It was as evil as he had been reputed.

The readjustment of her ideas had been disquieting in a way, since it robbed her of a large part of her ammunition, but she consoled herself with the thought that she had not yet reached the big vital story which most deeply concerned the welfare of the north.

The village of Kyak lay near the mouth of the most easterly outlet of the Salmon, and it was similar in respects to Hope and to Omar, save that it looked out across a shallow unprotected bay to the open reaches of the north Pacific. The shores were low; a pair of rocky islets afforded the only shelter to its shipping, and it was from these as a starting point that the copper trust had built its breakwater. A trestle across the tide flats connected the work with the mainland, and along this rock train crawled, adding their burdens to the strength of the barrier. Protected by this arm of steel and stone and timber lay the terminal buildings of the Alaska Northern, and there also lay the terminus of the old McDermott enterprise into which Charles Gordon had infused new life. Both places showed plenty of activity when O'Neill and his two companions arrived late one afternoon.

Kyak they found was inferior to Omar in its public accommodations, and Murray was at a loss to find shelter for the girls until his arrival was made known to the agents of the Alaska Northern. Then Mr. Trevor, the engineer in charge, looked him up and insisted upon sharing his quarters with the visitors. In Trevor's bearing was no suggestion of an enemy like Gordon's. He welcomed his rival warmly.

After dinner O'Neill took Natalie to see the sights, while Eliza profited by the opportunity to interview Trevor. In her numerous visits with O'Neill she had not been overnecessarily from the point of view of her magazine articles, but here at her hand was the representative of the power last known and last hated for its activities in the northland, and she seemed perfectly willing to talk. Surely from him she would get information that would count.

"Understand, I'm on the side of your enemies," she warned him. "So is everybody else." Mr. Trevor laughed, but that's because we're misunderstood.

"The intentions of any trust warrant suspicion."

He shrugged. "The Hellemanns are just ordinary business men, like O'Neill, looking for investment. They heard of a great big copper field hidden away back yonder in the mountains, and they thought what they could do to be the best group of chains. They knew the region was difficult of access, but they figured that a railroad from the water would open up not only their own properties, but the rest of the copper belt and the whole interior country. They began to build a road from Kotzeb, when some 'shoe stringer' raised the cry that they had monopolized the world's greatest copper supply and had doubled checked it by monopolizing transportation also. That started the fuss. They needed cheap coal, of course, just as everybody else needs it, but somebody discovered the danger of a monopoly of that kind and set up another shout. Ever since then the yellow press has been screaming. The government withdrew all coal lands from entry, and it now refuses to grant patents to that which had been properly located. We don't own a foot of Alaskan coal land, Miss Appleton. On the contrary, we haul our fuel from British Columbia, just like O'Neill and Gordon. Those who would like to sell local coal to us are prevented from doing so."

"It sounds well to hear you tell it," said Eliza. "But the minute the coal patents are issued you will buy what you want, then freeze out the other people. You expect to control the mines, the railroads and the steamship lines, but public necessities like coal and oil and timber and water power should belong to the people. There has been an awakening of the public conscience, and the day of monopolized necessities is passing."

"As long as men own coal mines they will sell them. Here we are faced not by a question of what may happen, but of what has happened. If you agreed to buy a city lot from a real estate dealer and after you paid him his price he refused to give you a deed, you'd at least expect your money back, wouldn't you? Well, that's the case of Uncle Sam and the Alaskan miners. He not only refuses to deliver the lot, but keeps the money and forces them to pay more every year. I represent a body of rich men who, because of their power, are regarded with suspicion, but if they did anything so dishonest as what our government has done to its own people they would be jailed."

When O'Neill and Natalie returned they found the two still arguing. "Haven't you finished your tiresome discussions?" asked Natalie.

"Mr. Trevor has almost convinced me that the octopus is a noble creature, filled with high ideals and writhing at the thrills of the muckrakers," Eliza told them.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Froit of the Tempest.

NEITHER O'Neill nor his host was in sight when the girls came to breakfast. The men had risen early, it seemed, and were somewhere out in the storm. A wilder day would be hard to imagine; a hurricane was raging, the rain was whirling ahead of it like charges of shot. The mountains behind Kyak were invisible and so seaward was nothing but a dimly discernible smother of foam and spray, for the crests of the breakers were snatched up and carried by the wind. The town was sodden; the streets were running mud. Stovepipes were down, tents lay flattened in the mire, and the board houses were shaking as if they might fly to pieces at any moment. The darkness was uncanny, and the tempest seemed to be steadily growing in violence.

When an hour or two had passed with no word from the men Eliza announced her intention of looking them up. She had spent the time at a window, straining her eyes through the welter, while Natalie had curled up cozily with a book in one of Trevor's armchairs.

"But, dearie, you'll be drenched," Natalie looked up in surprise. "Mr. O'Neill is all right."

"Of course he is. I'm not going out to scold him and bring him in. I want to look at the storm."

"So do I, but it won't do any good. I can't make it blow any harder by getting my feet wet."

"You read your novel and talk to Mr. Trevor when he comes back. He knows we're to blame for this storm, so you must be nice to him. I can't. She clad herself in raincoat, sou'wester and boots and hurried out. Walking was difficult enough, even in the shelter of the village, but not until she had emerged upon the beach did she meet the full strength of the gale. Here it wrapped her garments about her limbs until she could scarcely move. The rain came horizontally and blinded her. The wind fairly snatched her breath away and oppressed her lungs like a heavy weight. She shielded herself as best she could, and by clinging to stationary objects and watching her chance she managed to work her way onward. At last she caught sight of O'Neill standing high above the surf, facing the wind defiantly, as if daring it to unfoot him. He saw her and came in answer to her signal. But to breast that wind was like stemming a rushing torrent, and when he reached her side he was panting.

"Child, what are you doing here?" he demanded.

"I couldn't wait any longer!" she shouted back. "You've been out since daylight. You must be wet through."

He nodded. "I lay awake all night listening. So did Trevor. He's beginning to worry already."

75 years ago everyone wore homespun

and, likewise, everyone used hand-mixed paint. To-day, when machine-spun cloth is so much better and cheaper, no one would think of wearing homespun. Many people are still using hand-mixed paint, however, because they do not know that will save them money and labor. Devco Lead and Zinc Paint is simply made of the same ingredients as the old-time painter used: Pure White Lead, Pure White Zinc, and Pure Linseed Oil. The only difference is that Devco is mixed by machinery, 500 gallons at a time. Therefore, it is always absolutely uniform in strength, color and covering capacity.

We guarantee Devco Lead and Zinc Paint to be pure. We know it contains no whitening, silica or other worthless materials. Stop in and ask for Color Card.

THEY SATISFY!

How America's largest cigarette manufacturer has accomplished "the Impossible" by producing a MILD cigarette that SATISFIES. It is the CHESTERFIELD Cigarette :

ALMOST anybody can make a cup of coffee. But there are said to be out over a half-dozen restaurants in the United States where they know how to make it right.

Similarly, almost anyone can make a cigarette. Just roll up some tobacco in a piece of pure paper—and there you are.

There are, perhaps, over 800 brands of cigarettes sold in this country today. But not one of them does what Chesterfields do—for Chesterfields are MILD; and yet they SATISFY.

Some cigarettes may be mild, but they don't satisfy. Only one cigarette does BOTH—Chesterfield!

This truly unique cigarette has all of that refreshing taste—delicacy (or mildness) which any good cigarette must have. Yet, without sacrificing any of this delightful mildness, Chesterfields go one step further—they do more than merely "please your taste"—they let you know you've been smoking. They satisfy!

And yet they're mild!

A Step Forward in Cigarette-Making

WE are proud to be the firm that has brought about this important new development in cigarette enjoyment—for that is exactly what the Chesterfield blend is.

This cigarette is an outgrowth of long, earnest effort on the part of this, the largest cigarette manufacturing concern in the United States.

The mild, yet satisfying Chesterfield blend is not the result of happy chance. It is one of the results of our many years of cigarette experience—of the heavy volume of our purchases of cigarette tobacco—of the prestige and advantage these enormous purchases give us in securing the choicest leaf from the tobacco fields of the world.

Chesterfields are an achievement.

A New Thing for a Cigarette to Do

CHESTERFIELDS do the one thing you have always wished a cigarette would do—they satisfy!

Smoke them and we believe you will find that ordinary cigarettes seem by comparison almost flat.

Give Chesterfields (20 for 10 cents) a trial. We believe you will be glad to learn what they can teach you about cigarette enjoyment.

* * *

You have been reading here some rather unusual, almost daring, statements about a cigarette. If Chesterfields were an untried cigarette—if we had not been observing their behavior in other cities—if we did not KNOW that they make good with smokers, we could not afford to make these statements to you over our signature.

But these statements, strong as they are, can mean little or nothing to you until you have actually smoked your first Chesterfield.

You will find that your own dealer has Chesterfields waiting for you.

Door Crushes His Head.

As the south-bound flyer pulled into the station at Gaylord Thursday afternoon of last week, a man put his head out of the baggage car door. The train jolted to a stop, and before the horrified eyes of many spectators, the heavy baggage door slid to, crushing the man's skull.

The victim was A. J. McIsaac of Mackinaw City. He was about 24 years of age.

McIsaac was car repairer for the D. S. S. & A. and was bound to some point south to do some work. No one seems to know the reason for his presence in the baggage car.

After the accident the unfortunate man fell backward on the floor of the car, and station employees lifted his body to a baggage truck where a physician made an examination. So badly crushed was the skull that the young man lived only about ten minutes.

Killed By Automobile.

Stepping suddenly out from in front of a bus filled with cherry pickers returning from the Morgan orchards at 5:30 Friday evening, Mrs. John Johnston, of Traverse City, passed directly in the path of the auto driven by City Wagonmaster H. A. Jobbett and received injuries from which she died early the following morning. The accident occurred at the foot of Morgan hill on the town line road southwest of the city and is said to have been indirectly due to the refusal of the bus driver to allow the auto to pass. In view of the agreement of the stories told the officials by occupants of both conveyances it was decided this morning that no inquest is necessary.

According to the official information given out Mr. and Mrs. Jobbett were motoring back to town and came up with the horse-drawn bus. Jobbett tried repeatedly to pass the rig but the driver persistently refused to give him an inch of leeway. Coming to the foot of the Morgan hill the highway widened a bit and Jobbett started to push his car ahead of the bus. As there was no room to spare he was centering his attention upon the horses of the bus in order not to run into them. At this moment Mrs. Johnston started to go across the road, and coming from in front of the team, was not seen by Jobbett. The fender of his car struck her in the right side and tore a large hole in her right abdomen. She was thrown under the wheels and the car passed over her, crushing the hip bone and badly mangling her. She was taken to the general hospital, where it was at once announced that recovery was out of the question. Mrs. Johnston was about 50 years old and leaves her husband, who is a carpenter and boat builder; also three daughters and one son.

Sneak Thieves Steal Gold.

During the week sneak thieves entered the dental parlors of Dr. J. R. Furman, bank block, and Dr. F. J. Farthing, Masonic Temple, both of Boyne City. In the former offices about $30 worth of gold and gold crowns were stolen. From Dr. Farthing's office about $10 worth of the precious metal was purloined.

Other valuables in the office were unmolested although in Dr. Farthing's office some $40 worth of the precious metal was more easily accessible.

Auto Wrecks Wagon.

Sunday a car belonging to W. J. Lewis, of Boyne City, and being driven by his nephew was smashed up considerably and a wagon on which was being hauled household goods belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Will Banks was also wrecked when the car ran into the wagon at about 8:30 o'clock Sunday evening on Charlevoix avenue, Petoskey.

The front trucks of the wagon was knocked clear of the box, allowing the box with its load of furniture to drop to the ground. Just how badly the car was damaged could not be learned. The bumper protected it from worse injury than it received.

Mrs. Lewis was a member of the party, but neither she nor her nephew were much injured and proceeded on their way to Boyne City.

One of the horses was injured on one leg, but just how serious one time will tell. No bones were broken. The Boyne City people have offered to settle for the damage done.

May Forget He Is Alive.

James C. Hopkins, of Traverse City, pulled the prize absent-mindedness performance for the week. Saturday night, about nine o'clock, he tied his horse back of the Lewis grocery and then transacted business. He forgot all about the rig and went home on foot. Sunday morning he went out to feed the horse and was given a severe mental jolt when he saw the empty stall and remembered that he had left the faithful animal down town. He began prompt search. The place where he had hitched it was still there, but no horse. By sleuthing around a little he located the outfit at Silver's livery. Patrolman Mike Litney had found the horse late Saturday night and taken it to the livery, where it was given bedding and supper and breakfast.

The IRON TRAIL

By REX BEACH

Copyright, 1915, by Harper & Brother

"Already? If the breakwater stands this!"

"The storm hasn't half started. Come! We'll watch it together." He took her hand, and they lunged into the gale, huddling their way back to his point of vantage. He paused at length and, with his arm about her, pointed to the milk white chaos which marked Trevor's handiwork. The rats pelted against their faces and streamed from their alleys.

After a long time he spoke. "See! It's coming up!" he said. She felt no increase in the wind, but she noted that particles of sand and tiny pebbles from the beach were flying with the salt raindrops. Her muscles began to tremble from the constant effort at resistance, and she was relieved when Murray looked about for a place of refuge. She pointed to a pile of bridge timbers, but he shook his head. "They'll go flying if this keeps up." He dragged her into the shelter of a little knoll. Here the blasts struck them with diminished force, the roar-lug in their ears grew less, and the labor of breathing was easier.

High up beyond reach of the surf a dory had been dragged and left bottom up. Under this the wind found a flange and sent it flying. Even where the mau and the woman crouched the wind carried them like a hand pack, but by clinging to the branches of a gnarled juniper bush they held their position and let the spray whine over their heads.

"Farther west I've seen houses chucked to the earth with ships' cables," he shouted in her ear. "To think of building a harbor in a place like this!" "I prayed for you last night. I prayed for the wind to come," said the girl after a time.

O'Neill looked at her, curiously startled; then he looked out at the sea once more. All in a moment he realized that Eliza was beautiful and that she had a heart. It seemed wonderful that she should be interested in his fortunes. He was a lonely man. Beneath his open friendliness lay a deep reserve. A curiously warm feeling of gratitude flamed through him now, and he silently blessed her for bearing him company in the deciding hour of his life.

Noon came, and still the two crouched in their half shelter, drenched, chilled, stiff with exposure, watching Kyak bay lash itself into a boiling smother. The light grew dim; night was settling. The air seemed full of hissing furies. Then O'Neill noticed bits of driftwood racing in upon the billows, and he rose with a loud cry. "It's breaking up!" he shouted. "It's breaking up!"

Eliza lifted herself and clung to him, but she could see nothing except a misty confusion. In a few moments the bottom came thicker. Splintered piling, huge square hewn timbers with fragments of twisted iron or broken bolts came floating into sight. A confusion of wreckage began to clutter the shore, and into it the sea churned. The spindrift tore asunder at length, and the watchers caught a brief glimpse of the tumbling ocean. The breakwater was gone. Over the place where it had stood the billows raced unhindered.

"Poor Trevor!" said O'Neill. "Poor Trevor! He did his best, but he didn't know." He looked down to find Eliza crying. "What's this? I've kept you here too long!"

"No, no! I'm just glad—so glad! Don't you understand?"

"I'll take you back. I must get ready to leave."

"Leave? Where?" "For New York! I've made my fight, and I've won." His eyes kindled feverishly. "I've won in spite of them all. I hold the key to a kingdom. It's mine—mine! I hold the gateway to an empire, and those who pass through must pay." The girl had never seen such fierce triumph in a face. "I saw it in a dream, only it was more than a dream." The wind snatched O'Neill's words from his lips, but he ran on: "I saw a deserted fishing village become a thriving city. I saw the glaciers part to let pass a great traffic in men and merchandise. I saw the unpeopled north grow into a land of homes, of farms, of mining camps, where people lived and bred children. I heard the mountain passes echo to steam whistles and the whirl of flying wheels. It was a wonderful vision that I saw, but my eyes were true. They called me a fool, and it took the sea and the hurricane to show them I was right." He paused, ashamed of his outburst, and, taking the girl's hand in his, went stumbling ahead of the storm.

Their limbs were cramped, their teeth chattered, they walked through mire, and more than once they fell. Nearing Trevor's house, they saw what the storm had done. Kyak was nearly razed. Roofs had been ripped off, chimneys were down, glass was out. None but the most substantial log cabins had withstood the assault, and men were busied in various quarters trying to repair the damage.

They found Natalie beside herself with anxiety for their safety, and an hour later Trevor came in, soaked to the skin. He was very tired, and his face was haggard.

"Well, she went out!" he said. "I saw a million dollars swallowed up in that sea."

They tried to comfort him, but the collapse of his work had left him dazed.

"Heaven! I didn't think it could blow like this, and it isn't over yet. The town is flat."

"I'm sorry. You understand I sympathize," said Murray, and the engineer nodded.

"You told me it blew here, and I thought I knew what you meant, but nothing could withstand those rollers."

"Nothing."

"You'll go east and see our people, I suppose?"

"At once."

"Tell them what you saw. They'll never understand from my reports. They're good people. If there's anything I can do—"

O'Neill took his hand warmly. Two days later Murray bade the girls goodbye and left, traveling light. They remained in Kyak so that Eliza might complete her investigations.

Of all those who suffered by the storm Curtis Gordon took his misfortune hardest. This had been a black season for him indeed. Beginning with O'Neill's rivalry, everything had gone against him. He had dropped his coal interests at Kyak in favor of the copper mine because they failed to yield quick profits. Then he had learned that the mine was valueless and realized that it could not serve him much longer as a means of raising funds. Still, he had trusted that by taking a vigorous part in the railroad struggle he would be able either to recoup his fortunes or at least to effect a compromise in the shadow of which his fiasco at Hope would be forgotten. As yet the truth about Hope Consolidated was not generally known to his stockholders, but a certain restlessness among them had become troublesome. The stream of money had diminished alarmingly, and it was largely because of this that he had sought the McDermott right of way and moved to Kyak. And now just as he had his affairs in shape for another and a greater campaign of stock flotation the storm had come to ruin him.

The bitterest element in his defeat was the realization that O'Neill, who had bested him at every turn, was destined to profit by the very blow which crushed him. Defeat at the hands of the copper trust he would have accepted with a fairly good grace, but the mere thought that Murray O'Neill, whom he considered in every way his inferior, had gained the upper hand was intolerable. It was in keeping with Gordon's character that instead of blaming his own judgment he became furiously angry at the trust for the mistake of its engineers and held them responsible for his desperate situation. That he was truly desperate he very soon realized, since disaster to his railroad project meant that his stockholders would be around his ears like a swarm of hornets, and once they understood the true state of affairs at Hope the complete collapse of his fortunes would surely follow.

During the days succeeding the storm he scarcely knew where to turn, so harassed was he; yet he never for a moment wavered in his resolve to make O'Neill pay for his interference and to exact a reckoning from Gloria Gerard.

Natalie's presence in Kyak confirmed his belief that O'Neill was interested in her, and he began to plan a stroke by which he could take revenge upon all three. It did not promise in any way to help him out of his financial straits, but at least it would give him a certain satisfaction.

He went word to the girl that he would like to see her. Gordon found his erstwhile ward greatly improved by her recent life. She was brown, vigorous, healthy; her physical charms quickened his pulses.

"You must have a very good reason for coming to see me," she began. "I don't flatter myself that it is from affection."

"There you wrong me," he assured her, with the warm earnestness he so easily assumed. "I have always regarded you as a daughter."

"I have no faith in you."

"Exactly," and the knowledge distreased me. You and Gloria were a large part of my life. I can't bear to lose you. I hope, and I believe, that her regard for me has changed no more than mine for her. It remains for me to regain yours."

"That is impossible. You had the chance."

"My dear, you can't know my reasons for acting as I did at Omar. But those reasons no longer exist."

"Just what do you mean by that?" stammered Natalie.

"I mean what I say. I'm ready to marry your mother."

"When?"

"At once. You shall plead my cause for me."

"That isn't necessary. You know mother is only waiting for you. It means so much to her that she couldn't refuse."

"Doesn't it mean anything to you?"

Natalie nodded. "It means more to me than to any one else, perhaps. I have been carrying a great burden, at most more than I can bear. Sometimes I've wished I were a man—for just long enough to make you pay. Oh, yes," she continued as he started to protest. "Don't let us begin this new life with any false conceptions. You may as well know that I shall always hate you. We shall see very little of each other."

"Nonsense! I can't let you feel like that. I shall rest until I win back your love and confidence."

She eyed him searchingly for a moment, then opened her lips to speak, but closed them.

"Well?" he prompted her. "Let us be frank with each other."

"I'm merely wondering how greatly your decision has been influenced by the storm and the fight at the railroad crossing. I understand how you feel toward Mr. O'Neill, and I know that he means to crush you."

"Oh! Gordon's face lighted.

"Yes! He has never said so, but I can feel it. I wonder if you have watched us up in your extremity as a defense."

"Ridiculous! Your suspicions are insulting. I have nothing to fear from him, for he is broken, his credit is gone, and he is in desperate straits."

"Are you in any better condition? How long can you fool your people with that pretense of a mine?"

Gordon flushed, but affected scorn.

"So! Have you and Gloria begun to halauce my wealth against my love? If so—"

"You know she would marry you if you were penniless."

"I hope so, and, indeed, I can't believe her mercenary. Well, I shall say goodbye to Kyak without ill regret, and we three shall return to Hope, where I can attack my problems with fresh courage. I can well afford my loss here if by doing so I gain the woman of my desires."

"You want me to go with you?"

"Of course. You can't stay in Omar, knowing what you do about O'Neill. Remember, I shall be in the position of a father to you."

"Very well. It is the least I can do. Miss Appleton and I are returning to Omar in a few days. Will you go with us?"

"I shall be delighted, my dear." He smiled upon her in his most fatherly fashion, but she was far from feeling the assurance he meant to convey.

THE LIQUOR BILL WAS MILLIONS

BUT IT IS VERY MUCH LESS NOW IN PORTLAND, OREGON, NOTE THE PLAIN FIGURES.

BOOZE AND PUBLIC SERVICE

If Millions Spent for Drink Is Diverted to Other Purposes than People Are Gainers.

Portland, Ore.—Portland is spending only $281,641 annually for liquor under prohibition compared with $6,563,326 spent in wet years, says A. M. Churchill, chairman of the legal committee of the committee of one hundred, which was instrumental in ridding the state of the liquor traffic.

Mr. Churchill's figures are based on the liquor importations for the month of April, which he believes are fairly representative of what the normal shipments will be for a year.

Since prohibition became effective January 1, Mr. Churchill has compiled the statistics on importations under the dry law and compared them with the figures on liquor consumption and expenditures for liquor before last January.

Based on the volume of April shipments, Mr. Churchill has figured that Portland in spending only 7.5 per cent as much money for whiskey as was spent in former years, only 1.9 as much beer and less than 5 per cent as much for all kinds of liquors collectively.

It would require an ordinary brewer only eight days to turn out all the beer that Portland consumes in a year, at the present basis, says Mr. Churchill.

His deductions relating to Portland, he says, probably will apply in substantially the same way to other parts of the state.

Uncle Sam Knows.

Uncle Sam makes a heap of money out of the booze business. But Uncle Sam is like the saloonkeeper: he does not want his employees to use any of their own goods.

The United States Civil Service Commission in its manual of examinations for the spring of 1916, in a book of 168 pages, publishes in black face type on page 36, this statement:

The Bureau of Indian Affairs regards the use of intoxicants by its employees, even in moderation, as an evil influence and not to be tolerated.

Denver's Old Drink Bill.

Under the prohibition law of Colorado common carriers must file reports of liquor shipped into that state. In March, 5,186 packages went into Denver, the value thereof being $50,000. The "wets" argue from this that prohibition does not prohibit.

Mr. Arthur Holloway, a Denver attorney, points out that the average consumption of liquor in Denver during her wet days was $500,000 per month, and that the city is actually saving $450,000 per month as a result of prohibition.

DRIVING OUT SALOONS

Does Not Increase, But Will Decrease Taxes.

The Michigan booze barons are setting up the claim that the high taxes in the state are due to the fact that the saloons have been driven out of so many counties. The booze vendors grasp at every straw and they give no consideration to facts, says Cole's Review. But here are some facts:

Driving the saloons out did not increase the salaries of state officers, but those salaries increased from 1901 to 1914 almost 90 per cent, or from $75,000 to $132,000.

Driving the saloons out did not increase the salaries of the judicial department of the state, but they increased more than 110 per cent, or from $109,000 in 1901 to $239,000 in 1914.

Driving the saloons out did not increase the extra clerk hire cost from $53,000 in 1901 to $156,000 in 1914. Liquor has never produced sanity, so driving the saloons out could not have increased the cost of conducting insane asylums from $665,000 in 1901 to $1,569,000 in 1914.

Driving the saloons out could not have increased the cost of the banking department from $17,000 in 1901 to $75,000 in 1914.

Driving the saloons out could not have increased the cost of taking care of the feeble minded from $41,000 in 1901 to $151,000 in 1914.

Driving the saloons out could not have increased the cost of the University of Michigan from $254,000 in 1901 to $2,163,000 in 1914.

Driving the saloons out did not increase the cost of the state normal schools from $150,000 in 1901 to more than $675,000 in 1914.

The cost of every department of state has increased in proportion to the result of lavish expenditure of the money of the people.

The cost of many of the institutions has been increased because of the crime and degeneracy caused by the saloon.

The saloon can never be figured as an asset; invariably it is a liability.

The Primrose is Built for Service

BOTH the reasons why you buy a cream separator are met fully by the Primrose. The first is to get all the cream with the least work; the second, to buy a machine that you or your wife can easily keep in operating condition, and that will skim closely for years.

You know that there is nothing about a Primrose to get out of order. You know, too, that it has a splash oiling system that takes care of every bearing, and that it is a clean machine—no oil in the milk, and no milk in the oil.

But the Primrose has some other exclusive features you ought to know before you buy any separator. For instance, at any position, the handle takes hold the instant pressure is applied, and lets go the instant the pressure is taken off. The spindle stays in the separator, where it belongs. When you place the bowl on the spindle, it centers itself automatically without any pounding and without trying more than once—that saves the lower spindle bearing and prevents dangerous springing of the spindle itself.

No matter what separator question you bring up, you will find it fully answered by the Primrose. Come in and take a good look at it before you buy.

For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. TONOLINE IS BEAUTY AID, ANNOUNCES SPECIALIST

Mildred Louise Talk of Interest to Women

As health is a first aid to beauty this story, told by Mildred Louise, beauty specialist, of Boston, Mass., is of unusual interest.

"I can recommend no better health giver than tonoline," said Mildred Louise.

"I was for many months a victim of stomach trouble and nervousness. I had suffered terribly from pains that followed eating. Headaches also would add to my worries. Poor digestion finally brought on nervousness.

Relief came, however, when I took the advice of several women who said, 'Take tonoline.'

"Not long after I started the tonoline treatment, my patrons began to remind me of the improvement in my condition. And because health is the quickest way to beauty, the improvement was particularly noticeable in my face.

"What tonoline really did for me I cannot say. I am so grateful that I am very willing to recommend tonoline publicly."

Tonoline is a purely vegetable preparation which goes to the seat of common maladies—stomach and kidney trouble, catarrhal affections of the mucous membranes, liver ailments and impurities of the blood—and quickly restores proper action. Tonoline is being explained daily to many people at all druggists.

Notice:—As tonoline is a wonderful flesh builder it should not be taken by any one not wishing to increase his weight ten pounds or more. Although many reports are received from those who have been benefited by tonoline in severe cases of stomach trouble and nervous dyspepsia, chronic constipation, etc.

HISTORY IN A CAP.

What the National Headdress For War In Montenegro Tells.

The round cap, or "kapa," worn by Montenegrin soldiers is a history of their country in miniature. The people of Montenegro, indeed, have a saying that "kapa talks," and they are not far wrong. It is the national headdress for war, and it is the same for prince and peasant. In color it is a vivid crimson, but it has a deep black border, which only leaves a small crown of the foundation color visible.

The black border is a sign of mourning for the terrible battle of Kosovo, when the old Montenegrin and Serb empires were overthrown by the Turks and their armies annihilated. The red crown signifies "the field of blood" of the same great fight.

On the red crown, in one corner, are five semicircles in gold. These have a double significance. They symbolize first the five centuries that have elapsed since Kosovo was fought, and, secondly, the five colors of the rainbow, the sign of hope that one day the glories of the old Montenegrin empire will be restored.

Furthermore, the different insignia of army rank are worn on the rim of the kapa, from the different combinations of crossed swords of the officer to the simple leaden star of the corporal.

Also, the Montenegrin soldier wears his medals, if he possesses any, on the front of the cap instead of his tunic, as with the soldiers of all other nations.—Pearson's Weekly.

CALENDAR OF THE TURKS.

Its Oriental Simplicity Is Fairly Madening to Strangers.

The Turks count their day from one sunset to the next sunset, dividing the twenty-four hours into twelves, as we do. This is plain sailing, but unfortunately sunset does not fall at the same hour day after day, and there ensue horrible complications to the innocent European.

By way presumably of jest the Turkish steamers follow Turkish and their railways Frankish time. Probably many a good man has ended his life in a lunatic asylum after a frantic attempt to reconcile the two. The padded rib have watches specially constructed with two dials, one showing each time.

Apparently some enterprising Ottoman thought that the Turkish calendar erred on the side of simplicity and kindly invented a new complication. The Mohammedan year dates from the flight of the prophet in the seventeenth century. Each year the first month, Mabairan, comes eleven days earlier, so the month do not mark the season like ours.

There is one more section for the benefit of the Turkish peasant, who is his rural retreats knows nothing of months. For him the year is composed of two seasons—hidraia, beginning on May 6, and kassin, beginning Nov. 7—so to him April 20 is the one hundred and sixty-fourth day of kassin.—London Standard.

GOODNESS.

It is not always easy to be good. If it were, goodness would be worth very little. It would not mean struggle, persistence, aspiration, development, character, as it does now. Real goodness is valuable because of what it costs day by day, and it never comes as a bargain.

Hundreds of Visitors—Roast Ox for All.

The second annual barbecue given by the business men of Ellsworth, will take place this year on Thursday, August 10. The barbecue has become an annual event and President L. R. VanSkiver of the board of trade, and other leading citizens are now hard at work making preparations for the big event.

The success of last year's event has stimulated the Ellsworth bunch to pull off another this year better than the previous one. Every minute of the day will be taken up, and when the roast ox is served, there will be an abundance for all.

An effort is being made to secure prominent speakers for the day, including such well known men as the Hon. G. J. Diekema, Congressman Frank Scott and others. The baseball game between the Merchants and Farmers will be full of hair raising plays. Ty Cobb slides, and well worth your time to witness.

The usual sports and races have also been taken care of. Good music all day by the home band. Put a check mark on this date, and spend the day in Ellsworth.

WHEN MILLS GO WHAT IS TO FOLLOW

AN INTERESTING PAPER BY W. P. PORTER

Read Before Recent Meeting of Bakers' Association at East Jordan—Gives Good Advice.

What will be the condition of our towns and communities where lumbering is the chief or prominent industry when the timber shall be cut out and the saw mills disappear? This question did not occur to us 20 or 25 or even 15 years ago when large bodies of timber were tributary to the mills and this time seemed so distant, but now the end of the timber is within the next five or ten years at the farthest. When the saw mills shut down, other industries which depend upon the mills and the timber for their fuel will close their doors.

The business of our towns has gone along in one groove for the past 35 years and it is hard to realize that a violent change will come about very soon which may, and probably will, have the most profound effect upon the business of our community—upon our banks, our merchants, our working men and upon every owner of real estate whether office, store buildings or the home of the working men.

If a fire should sweep through our towns wiping out 50 per cent of the buildings it would be a disaster which would attract wide notice. Just as real a loss and destruction of property values may be seen today at East Lake near Manistec and at Elk Rapids where the mills and plants instead of being 50 per cent was 90 or 95 per cent. Depreciation of values begins before closing of the plants, as the end is foreseen but the loss is no less real because gradual.

The gift of prophecy is not required to answer the question what will follow the going out of our lumber industries. The answer is seen in the experience of other communities like ours. Now the question is what can be done to prevent this slump in values. Look at other lumber towns—Muskegon for many years after the mills stopped was a dead town with empty houses and no business. I remember one man who owned considerable land on Muskegon Heights which was then almost worthless, could hardly be given away. Gradually, however, some industries started, there beginning in a small way. These have grown large and others have been added until Muskegon has grown to be large and more prosperous than in the best days of the White Pine lumber business.

Muskegon had no special advantages to offer any of these enterprises, but by hard work and good management, they were secured and they are permanent. If these efforts had been made years sooner Muskegon would probably have escaped the long period of depression and loss which followed the decay of the lumber industry.

Cadillac is fortunate in having a number of wealthy and public spirited men who are successfully trying to bridge the gap, and have several good industries well started and no doubt will secure others which, when the lumbering is done, unlike the mills, will be permanent. Cadillac also has no special natural advantages to offer any of these industries that East Jordan, Boyne City or Charlevoix can offer. Indeed we have one great advantage over Cadillac, that of water transportation. We are also favored with a rich farming country back of our towns which Cadillac has not.

In striking contrast with Cadillac are towns like Manistec where great fortunes have been made from white pine and salt, but the millionaires have taken the money made in Manistec and gone elsewhere to live. It follows that in a short time Manistec will probably be almost as deserted a city as East Lake.

I believe our true policy is to develop the resources we have and to build up industries already here rather than try, by offering bonuses, to draw away industries from other towns, which to me seems a contemptible form of piracy.

We have a fine farming region surrounding us. It seems to me the farming industry is in its infancy here and is capable of great expansion, especially along the lines of potato and fruit raising.

I believe good roads are a great factor in the development of the farming industry and if we may judge by the experience of others, a good competent live county farm agent would be of great help. According to government statistics the average crop of Maine, where potatoes are scientifically and systematically raised, is about three times that of Michigan. It is a fact that our farmers are not very prosperous as a class and the farms as a rule are becoming poorer. They need the advice of experts as to the best way to bring up their farms. Many farmers also lack the capital and if this can be supplied on reasonable terms to those who can and will make good use of it, it will set them forward years of time and contribute much to the general prosperity.

I believe far too little attention has been given to beautifying and improving our town—especially is this true of East Jordan and Boyne City. Charlevoix has done much more in this direction and is well repaid for all she has done. There is nothing which will bring better cash returns on the investment than money well expended in improving and beautifying our homes and our streets and public places.

With our towns made attractive with good roads leading to the farms and with the system of good roads now begun between the towns, completed summer resorts would be attracted and the time should soon come when the shores of our beautiful lakes will be lined with the cottages of summer visitors.

Speaking of industries, I believe the small industry, employing from 3 to 12 men should be as heartily welcomed and should receive as much encouragement as the larger, for it may be the plant from which shall grow the great tree. It is much better to have a number of small diversified industries than to have just one great one, employing a large number of men.

We may prevent largely—perhaps entirely, the depression and loss which naturally follows the closing of the saw mills. Two ways are open to us—we may drift along until the end and find ourselves in the condition of Elk Rapids or East Lake—or we may follow the example of such towns as Cadillac. Which course shall we take?

CAN'T LOSE HAIR

Twenty Years from Today a Bald-headed Man will Be an Unusual Sight

One of the most prominent druggists of America made a statement a few weeks ago which has caused a great deal of discussion among scientists in the medical press. He said: "If the new hair growing, Mildredina Hair Remedy, increases its sales as it has during the past year, it will be used by nearly every man, woman and child in America within eight years."

"When Mildredina Hair Remedy is used almost universally, dandruff will disappear and with its departure and all scalp diseases will follow and twenty years from now a bald head will be a rarity." Sample sent for 10c to pay postage. Mail orders filled by Mildred Louise Co., Boston, Mass. Adv. 2914

WHY not give your lad the same training?

"When I was growing lad, and came upon many words in my reading that I did not understand, my mother, instead of giving me the definition when I applied to her, uniformly sent me to the dictionary to learn it, and in this way I gradually learned many things besides the meaning of the individual word in question—among other things, how to use a dictionary, and the great pleasure and advantage there might be in the use of the dictionary. Afterwards, when I went to the village school, my chief diversion, after lessons were learned and before they were recited, was in turning over the pages of the 'Unabridged' of those days. Now the most modern Unabridged—the NEW INTERNATIONAL—gives me a pleasure of the same sort. So far as my knowledge extends, it is at present the best of the one-volume dictionaries, and quite sufficient for all ordinary uses. Even those who possess the splendid dictionaries in several volumes will yet find it a great convenience to have this, which is so compact, so full, and so trustworthy as to leave, in most cases, little to be desired."—Albert S. HEED THE ERRORS; PROFIT BY SUCCESS

IS ADVICE OF GOOD ROADS ENTHUSIAST

Autos Here to Stay and Roads Must Be Built to Take Care of Heavy Traffic.

O. O. Stone, who is touring east and west, Michigan Pike-Dixie Highway, spent Saturday in Charlevoix, the guest of George H. Van Pelt.

Mr. Stone is a good roads enthusiast of unusual interest and says he has firmly been converted from mud, dust and chuck-hole roads to hard surface, permanent roads, not only from the pleasure and comfort to be enjoyed, but from the every day, good business, common sense viewpoint. The following are a few statements he expressed in his talk regarding good roads:

"The road question is a large problem, but not a hard one to solve, if we will analyze it as we would our direct and private affairs and by so doing we will calculate benefit to be derived in a community by the improvement. Next we will figure cost and find the cheaper initial cost roads require annually large expenditures for maintenance, which, in a few years, exceeds cost of construction of concrete roads, and yields not more than approximately 60 per cent efficiency. We also discover that at a greater initial cost concrete or cement roads can be constructed, requiring but a very small expenditure for maintenance and yields 100 per cent efficiency, meaning a number one, mudless, dustless, smooth hard surface road, 365 days in the year, and for years to come, which should solve to the questionable mind the economical type of road to build; the one which improves a community most and serves its purpose best.

"While in your city today, my attention was called to concrete pavement at the south end of Bridge street, opposite the Hotel Michigan, laid seven years ago and in number one condition and am told has not required one penny's worth of maintenance. This evidence speaks mutely to you, 'Concrete is king.'

"It might be well to refer to communities older in road building—Wayne county (Detroit) for instance, to heed the errors or profit by the success. About eight years ago, Wayne county built its first mile of concrete or cement road, which today is in excellent condition and serving traffic upwards of 4,000 vehicles per day, consisting of horse drawn wagons to five ton trucks and each succeeding year more has been built until, at the present time, Wayne county contains more than 140 miles of 16 foot wide concrete roads.

"Wayne county's concrete roads have not only attracted the attention of different states of this country but different countries of Europe, who are profiting by building like-wise roads.

"There is no other improvement which adds quicker and greater value to the farming community than does good roads, as land and farm product value are actually based on expense and time, horse power and general wear and tear of transporting such products to the railroad markets which explains why farming lands of the same soil value ten miles from a railway are not of as much value as land one mile distant.

"Now, let us note another important factor, greatly aided by good roads, greater attendance at church and at school; a truer social hospitality, and that every day touch of refinement made more possible.

"Picture in thought the great Dixie Highway, beginning at Miami, Florida, extending north through eight states, encircling and paralleling the coast lines of the southern peninsula of the great and grand state of Michigan, passing through your city, 'Charlevoix, the Beautiful.' What does it mean to you and our great state? It unquestionably means that your resorts will be visited during the summer months by thousands of touring parties from the Dixie land and it is well spoken when said, 'Michigan, the Summer Florida of America.'

"Gentlemen, I was raised a farmer's son, spent more than half my life on the farm, and am today largely interested in Michigan as a farmer and here are a few facts which touch my quick and arouse my ire:

"Statistics from the state authorities prove that, due to poor road conditions, it is costing the farmers of Michigan 26 cents per ton mile to transport their product from farm to railroad station, while the railroads transport the same product from loading station to destination for six mills per ton mile; something for us to think of. I sincerely believe if the farmers, bankers, merchants, professional men, in fact all, will give the road question good, sound-headed business thought, we will soon get out of the mud, dust and chuck holes, lessen cost of transporting our farm products from plow to railway, and thereby greatly increase land value; more thickly settle the farther back communities and in general get on a higher plane of living."

I regard the statements made by Mr. Stone as of inestimable value to every tax payer in Charlevoix county. I took him to drive on the Horton's Bay road towards Boyne City and I expressed myself that it was highway robbery for the state of Michigan to pay $500 per mile for the building of this road and for the residents of Charlevoix county to pay the balance, because this road is virtually out of commission today.

Automobiles are here to stay. It is the big automobiles that wear out our country roads but they are the people we want, because they are the people who spend large sums of money here and the fact is we derive a very large sum of money, which is scattered broadcast, and everyman gets a whack at it, from the man who sells an egg to the one who sells a ton of hay. A concrete road, such as is built on the south end of Bridge street and on Dixon avenue, would last 50 years and the road will hardly last 50 weeks. Of course, it is better than it used to be and that is the one reason people feel encouraged, but when they have to pay for the maintenance, which will be a matter of three or four hundred dollars per mile for a few years and a good deal more a few years afterwards, it is plain for any man to see what the building of a concrete road, with four foot shoulders of crushed stone, will mean to the tax payer.

Now, for economy sake, let's stop building any more macadam roads, because they cannot be built strong enough or durable enough to stand the wear and tear of these big automobiles and nothing else will do it except concrete or brick and, of course, brick are so costly that they are out of the question.

Let all good praying people add, "Give us concrete roads," and all who are not praying, say, "We won't accept anything but the concrete road."

Yours truly,
GEORGE H. VAN PELT.

CHATTERTON & SON TO BUILD

CITY PROVIDES THEM WITH BUILDING SITE

Work on New Structure to Be Started at Once—Employs Considerable Labor.

Chatterton & Son, the well known produce firm of Mt. Pleasant, who for several years have had a branch house in the building formerly occupied by D. M. Ferry & Company, have decided to locate definitely in this city, and will begin the erection of their new plant at once.

The firm handles thousands of bushels of beans, peas, potatoes and other farm produce every year, besides making the Charlevoix station headquarters for handling the bean crop produced in northern Michigan. During the past winter, thousands of bushels of beans have been shipped to Charlevoix for picking, and from 25 to 50 women and girls were employed.

The new building will be erected on the P. M. siding northeast of the old sugar plant, and will be of a size to handle their rapidly growing business. With the expiration of the lease of the D. M. Ferry building, they were undecided whether to locate here or not, but prompt work on the part of the city officials in furnishing them with a building site, was directly due to their remaining here permanently.

The business of the firm has been ably taken care of by George Brown, who, we understand, will continue to manage their business here. M. R. Nelson, manager of the Ellsworth plant, will have supervision during the erection of the new buildings.

Mrs. O. E. Wilbur returned the latter part of the week from Chicago, where she has been visiting at the home of her daughter and son.

DYING A NATURAL DEATH

A Brewer Who Finds a Better Use for His Brewery.

The liquor business is dying a natural death. The so-called small brewers have been given their death certificates and the profits to be gained in the big breweries are so small that they are not good investments.

This is a statement made by Frederick Wolf, Philadelphia brewer, quoted in the North American. Mr. Wolf permitted his brewery license to lapse and explained why he did so. He said:

"I am quitting business and will turn my brewery into a factory. There is no money in the brewery business, and it is getting worse every year. The cost of labor and material is rising, and on the other hand many are cutting out beer and liquors. There is but one alternative and that is to quit the business.

"If anybody takes the trouble to examine the records of the internal revenue department, he will find that the liquor business is receiving some hard smashes. There is less consumed each year and month. That means that the small brewers must quit, and the little business left will be done by the large concerns. They are in a position to fight for life, because their capital will permit them to help the retailers. The latter are also doing business and must be helped to buy their licenses. The brewers must go to their aid."

In one week, according to the North American, 20 liquor licenses were allowed to lapse in Philadelphia. In the list were seven retail, ten wholesale, one bottling and two brewing licenses.

GREAT INCREASE IN COST OF PRINT

CRISIS REACHED IN NEWSPAPER BUSINESS

Subscribers Must Come to Assistance of Papers By Making Prompt Payments Subscriptions.

The Courier has before explained in part the serious shortage in news print, the paper on which the Courier and every newspaper in the country is printed. News print has gone up in the last six months from fifty to one hundred per cent and is still on the climb with no relief in sight. And worst of all it is with the greatest difficulty that it can be obtained at any price. This condition is not limited to Michigan or any locality but is country wide. The Edwardsville (Illinois) Intelligence said in a recent issue:

"The Intelligence is issued today through the courtesy of several people not connected with the office." That is, they borrowed paper to get out.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat recently succeeded in getting out only by telegraphing over two states for paper.

Salesmen in Michigan for ALL paper companies inform the Courier that they do not know where their next paper will come from or when they can get it. This great shortage is attributed by some to a shortage of wood pulp, in which case it is likely to continue and become a permanent condition at least until corn stalks or some other substitute can be found. By others it is attributed to the fact that much of the sulphite used in making paper came from Germany and the supply is now cut off. Others think that the shortage is in part artificial, that it is created by a combination of the great paper manufacturers to limit the supply and thus create a scarcity value.

The United States government has been asked to investigate these conditions and see if some relief cannot be obtained. Already many papers have cut down the size, increased the subscription or advertising rates, gone to a strictly paid in advance basis, cut off all delinquents, boiled items down to the smallest compass, and done everything possible to prevent waste of all kinds.

Now, Courier reader, the above is a true picture of the conditions which confront the Courier as one of the largest users of print paper among northern Michigan weeklies. Our last order was an actual raise of 50 per cent. over the previous one. This was given three months in advance in order to secure it at all and even then neither delivery or price was guaranteed. We expect to get this shipment, but we do not know where the next one is coming from or how much we will have to pay.

Now, Courier reader, can we not depend on you to help us in this dilemma. We do not propose now to advance the price of advertising above our present schedule. We do not propose yet to insist that every subscription be paid in advance though we shall continue to urge and encourage our subscribers to do so, but we will be forced to lop off some who have persistently neglected or refused to pay what they owe.

Now in this crisis, what are you going to do, Courier reader? Money is beginning to come in to you from farm crops or other sources. Prices of farm products and labor were never so high on the average as today, while the Courier sells for the same price as when it was eight pages, and oats were selling for 15c a bushel, labor $1.00 a day and other things accordingly. We need what every subscriber owes us now. Why not help us out in this critical time by prompt payment of your subscription, what you owe and in advance if possible? We MUST insist that subscriptions must either be paid in ADVANCE or WITHIN THE YEAR.

Within the next week all will be sent statements of the amount due us. Make an effort to pay it at once. If you cannot pay all that is due, pay a part and the balance as soon as possible. We must have the accounts settled and do not like to continually call your attention to the amount you owe. Pay now—when the money is needed most.

WILL SUBMIT CITY MANAGER PLAN TO VOTERS

At Regular Fall Election, November 7—Resolution to Be Drafted.

Citizens of Charlevoix will have an opportunity to vote on the proposed commission form of government at the November 7 election, according to the action taken by the common council Monday evening.

The city manager plan has been adopted by a number of northern Michigan cities, and all are satisfied with the change. From now on to November, the Courier will run a series of articles on the commission form of government, and the way it has worked out in other cities. The question will be covered from all points of view and experiences, and will prove interesting reading.

RAIN WORTH A MILLION DOLLARS

NORTHERN MICHIGAN DROUGHT IS BROKEN

Thursday's Storm Brought Relief to Hundreds of Farmers Whose Crops Were Burning Up.

Northern Michigan's mid-season drought was broken last Thursday morning when a good old-time pouring rain storm broke over this region bringing relief to thousands of people, directly or indirectly connected with the farms and gardens of the region. Farmers and gardeners have been praying for rain for weeks. Oats and other late grains were badly in need of rain as were also the berry crop, potatoes and corn and other things grown in this region.

If the storm had held off much longer the oat crop would have been very short and the berries would all have been cooked on the vines. With such a refreshing rain there should be berries in abundance and especially huckleberries and raspberries which are just being placed on the market in any quantity.

For over two hours there was a steady downpour of rain which flooded the streets in places to a depth of over a foot. In the country considerable damage was done to crops on hillsides, the rush of the water tearing the growing crops out of the ground and in many places the roads were washed out.

During the storm lightning struck the steeple of the M. E. church, badly splintering it, the damage amounting to several hundred dollars. Lightning also played hair-raising pranks in other sections, although the financial loss was small.

The rain was a God-send to farmers and small fruit growers, and is estimated to have saved at least a million dollars worth of crops in this section of northern Michigan.

NIGHTLY VISIONS

ADVERTISE YOUR HOME CITY IF YOU WANT IT TO GROW

Most People Know Very Little About Local Conditions—Get the Facts About Charlevoix and Don't Be Bashful in Telling Them to Outsiders.

If you were asked by a stranger to describe the city where you live how much could you tell him of Charlevoix the Beautiful, Michigan? How much advertising could you do for your city by giving the reasons for Charlevoix being one of the most progressive cities in the state? The chances are the majority would elaborate on the few things that have accidentally come to their attention and when the stranger took leave he would forget that there ever was such a town as Charlevoix on the map.

Just as a sort of test put down the number of miles of water mains, the miles of cement sidewalks. How much do our schools cost? How many pupils are enrolled? How many teachers are employed? What is the assessed valuation of our city? How many miles of paving have we?

How many large hotels have we and an approximate number of people they take care of during a season?

How much capital is invested in the beautiful summer homes we have?

That fruit grown in this vicinity took first place against all sections of the United States at the Chicago exhibit?

How many splendid garages and boat liveryies have we?

How many people spend one to ten weeks here every season?

Of the splendid spring water and sanitary condition of our town?

Of the wonderful opening here for agriculturists?

There are a great many more questions that could be asked, but when you commence to pound your brain for the answers you will realize how little you know about the city in which you live.

If you are unable to give the information what help are you in advertising your home town. A real live enthusiastic citizen will never lose the opportunity to boost his home town no matter where he is, and the surest way to make an impression is to be informed. If you want to make this town the best in the state you have got to let the world know that we are awake. When you are away this fall don't forget to advertise for Charlevoix. If you haven't the information necessary call at this office.

Here are a few things to think about:

What have you done for Charlevoix today?

Have you told anyone about the beautiful town we have here and the intelligent class who make up its citizenry?

Have you told anyone about the beautiful homes and attractive streets in Charlevoix?

Have you told anyone about the excellent boat and railroad service afforded this city?

Have you told anyone about the fine boating and fishing around Charlevoix?

Have you told anyone that $25,000 has been spent in the city during the past year on street improvements?

Have you told anyone that Charlevoix enjoys a steady yearly increase in business and number of people who spend their summer here?

Have you told anyone that Charlevoix is clean, healthy, orderly, and a delightful place in which to live?

If you haven't done this, you have not done your duty.

Get busy—do it now for Charlevoix.

IS A WORK OF ART

Portrait of Geo. H. Van Pelt Painted By Harold Betts.

Mr. Harold Betts, of Chicago, a portrait painter of good repute, has succeeded in getting a picture of our fellow townsman, Mr. George H. Van Pelt.

The fact that Mr. Van Pelt selected Mr. Harold Betts is proof positive that he knew the artist to employ and his results were more than satisfactory, as a critical examination of the portrait shows.

Several well versed in art praise the work and claim it is one among the very best. In short it is a perfect picture, and congratulations are in order for both Mr. Van Pelt and Mr. Betts, the subject and the artist.

This picture, painted by Mr. Betts, cannot fail to bring other orders. Mr. Van Pelt has two daughters, one in Joliet, Illinois, another in Boston, and as he has engaged another sitting it is safe to say both daughters will be the recipient of pictures of their father. This should be hung in a public place and labeled "Good Concrete Roads, Van Pelt."

Here's to you Uncle George.

SNEAK THIEVES ENTER CLINTON STREET HOME

Night Prowlers Got Away With Pocketbook and Other Plunder.

Sneak thieves entered the home of Louie Hamlin, corner Grant and Clinton streets, sometime Tuesday evening, and gave the interior a thorough search for articles of value with the result that Mrs. Hamlin is minus her pocketbook, one of the children their bank and possibly other articles not as yet found missing.

The work of the night prowlers is thought to have taken place during the early hours of the morning. They did their work thoroughly, the sleeping occupants of the house were not aware of their visit until arising in the morning. Dresser drawers were thoroughly overhauled and their contents strewn about the floor. Several rooms were searched, but it is thought little of value was taken.

WARM BATTLES AT PRIMARIES

SUCH IS OUTLOOK FOR AUGUST ELECTION

Five Candidates for State Representative and One Socialist—Democrats Fail to File.

Warm political battles for offices in Charlevoix county in the fall election are forecasted from the number of candidacy petitions filed at the office of the county clerk. Saturday was the last day for filing papers.

But one party, Republican, filed a complete ticket. G. Will Moorehouse, socialist, filed for state representative. Dwight H. Fitch, of East Jordan, for prosecutor, and R. W. USE BUTTS OF GUNS ON CIVILIANS

BROKEN HEADS RESULT OF INTERFERENCE

Members of M. N. G. Resent Being Called "Tin Soldiers"—Camp Life Growing Monotonous.

(BY HAROLD W. USHER.)

Camp Ferris, Grayling, July 30.—The last few days have been busy ones for the men at Camp Ferris. Friday morning at 7:15, the 2nd and 3rd battalions started out on a hike over the reservation. Each man was issued rations for one meal and carried full marching equipment.

After a tramp of some four miles, a camp was made. The pup tents were set up and equipment unpacked. One company was selected to act the part of the enemy, and to distinguish them were green boughs in their hats. They were instructed to send out scouts and locate the camp. The companies left were to defend the camp, and detailed outposts, whose duties were to keep back the scouts. After two or three attempts, the enemy found it impossible to penetrate the outposts, and gave it up. The companies were then called in and after eating dinner, marched home in regular marching form.

Friday morning, just as the companies were finishing their morning drill, the fire call was sounded and two battalions called out to fight forest fires about three miles from camp. After several hours of hard, hot work, the fire was checked by back firing. The men were exhausted by the strenuous work and extreme heat, and the signal to return to camp was a most welcome one.

Sunday, shortly after noon mess, the call was again sounded, and the men turned out to help check a fierce fire, which was overcome late in the afternoon.

Reports current, with reference to the men being anxious to leave for the border, are not rightly understood by the people of the state in general.

The men as a whole are ready to go home, but would far rather go to the border than be compelled to stay in camp. They are ready to move at any time in answer to their country's call, but the inactivity and monotonous camp life is getting more unsatisfactory every day.

Monday night, Co. G., who were acting as provost guard, had considerable trouble with a number of civilians. As a guard was about to place under arrest a member of one of the companies who had overstayed his furlough, two of the civilians attempted to stop him. The butts of their guns were used by the guards and after the encounter, the two men were taken to the hospital for repairs and treatment. Later in the evening another civilian called a guard a "tin soldier." He also now rests uncomfortably in the sick ward with a badly damaged head, while the guard is nursing a broken gunstock.

During the month and to date the following promotions have been made in Co. I:

Corporal Harry Warern, sergeant; Private Lawrence Chatterton, sergeant; Private William J. Reilly, sergeant; Private Charles P. Ward, corporal; Private Gustave Ilahn, corporal; Private Dale Kaufman, corporal; Private Ernest Graf, corporal; Private Emil Schlenker, corporal; Private William Pomeroy, corporal.

WHY YOU ARE NERVOUS

The nervous system is the alarm system of the human body. In perfect health we hardly realize that we have a network of nerves, but when health is ebbing, when strength is declining, the same nervous system gives the alarm in headaches, tiredness, dreamful sleep, irritability and unless corrected, leads straight to a breakdown.

To correct nervousness, Scott's Emulsion is exactly what you should take; its rich nutrient gets into the blood and rich blood feeds the tiny nerve-cells while the whole system responds to its refreshing tonic force. It is free from alcohol.

AN EASY WAY TO REDUCE FLESH

Drink Hot Water and Take Tassco

Haven't you often wished for a medicine to reduce your flesh? Something that does not require dieting or calisthenics? Well, right here you have it in 5-grain tassco tablets, which you may secure at all druggists. They are pleasant to take, perfectly harmless and cause no restrictions of habit or eating, and reduce the flesh, little by little, until you are down to the number of pounds you wish to weigh. Too much flesh is undesirable, as most quite stout people will readily admit, and it detracts from one's good appearance; makes one clumsy and short of breath.

There isn't any reason why anyone should be too stout, when there's this much-tried, perfectly satisfactory remedy at all druggists. Tassco tablets (don't forget the name) are recommended by physicians and are guaranteed to be perfectly harmless. Refuse substitutes, if you can not come to our store, we will mail tassco to you.

B. C. & C. Motor Car Burns.

Tuesday evening of last week the fire alarm sounded and a blaze could be seen in the direction of Mill No. 3 at Boyne City. It was the motor car used by the railroad on the run between that city and Boyne Falls.

The car had just left for the evening run to the Falls, everything seemed to be as usual but as they were ascending the hill at the city limits the motor backed and started a blaze which spread so quickly it was with difficulty that passengers and mail were removed to safety.

Chemical fire extinguishers were used but were more or less oil soaked.

When the fire department arrived nothing could be done except safeguard surrounding property.

The car is practically a total loss. The car was insured.

At the present time the service is being maintained with steam trains. The company has not decided as yet whether the motor car will be rebuilt or not.

The City Manager

(A series of articles on a new type of municipal government, which is spreading rapidly.)

1—The Spread of the Movement.

During the last four years, 40 had been successfully tried out in American cities and towns have changed their municipal charters and adopted the commission-manager form of government. This form unifies all the powers of the city in a small elective council or board of directors, usually of five members, elected at large, and this board hires a city manager, a trained man, usually from out of town, to be their executive agent and chief administrator, working under their continuous oversight and direction and subject to discharge at any time he fails to reflect credit upon them.

Arouses Attention. The plan has aroused wide attention and the results are already so striking that city managers are being seriously talked of in such cities as Pittsburg, Cleveland, Boston and Chicago. The profession of city manager is well under way. The managers have already had their second annual convention. Five of them who did well as managers of small cities have been called to larger cities and increased salaries. Two universities have arranged courses for training such executives. All but three or four of the cities have chosen their managers from out of town, usually getting engineers with municipal experience.

Whence came this bold idea? In the fall of 1910, Lockport, N. Y., was looking for a chance to get aboard the commission government movement, which was then sweeping over the country, but the New York laws at that time did not permit it. The board of trade accordingly had to prepare special legislation and proceeded to improve on the regular commission plan by combining its single elective board feature with an appointive manager scheme which Springfield Is Next Springfield, O., took similar action a few weeks later. Then the movement jumped to Texas and the plan was adopted by seven cities there in the course of the next two years. Three cities in California, five in Michigan, three in New York, one each in Florida, Colorado, Virginia and Iowa have followed suit, the principal ones being Niagara Falls, St. Augustine, Cadillac, Manistee, Jackson, Newburg, (N. C.), Phoenix, (Ariz.), and Wheeling.

CHARLEVOIX ASTONISHED BY SIMPLE MIXTURE

Charlevoix people are astonished at the INSTANT action of simple buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adler-ika. ONE SPOONFUL removes such surprising foul matter it relieves almost ANY CASE of constipation, sour stomach or gas. Because Adler-ika acts on BOTH lower and upper bowel, a few doses often relieve or prevent appendicitis. A short treatment helps chronic stomach trouble. B. A. Herman, druggist.

REBUILDING SANDY LAND FARMS

IN MICHIGAN, INDIANA AND OHIO

Soy Beans or Cowpeas Furnish Practical Foundation for Building Up Soil.

A definite plan for building up the sandy-land farm of northern Indiana, southern Michigan, or northwestern Ohio is outlined in Farmers' Bulletin, No. 716, just issued by the department. The department specialists have found a way by which the sandy-land farms of that section can be built up, at the same time returning a profit. The remedy proposed for existing difficulties may be summarized very briefly:

"Grow soy beans or cowpeas—first for seed and later to feed live stock."

The production of one or the other of these legumes for seed is offered as the first stage in a development that ultimately leads to profitable general farming. The sale of seeds from one of these crops serves to finance the farm development while the foundation of soil improvement is laid by the legume crop itself.

"Soy beans and cowpeas," says the bulletin, "are profitable cash crops on the poorest of these sandy lands, the yields ranging from 5 to 20 bushels per acre, and the present range of prices being from $1.50 to $2.00 per bushel. Aside from being a source of immediate income, the crops furnish the most practical foundation for building up the soil."

Briefly, this is the system of farming proposed:

First stage—Continuous cropping with soy beans or cowpeas. One of these crops is grown for seed on the available farm area, not needed for growing necessary hay and corn. A catch-crop of rye is used between crops of soy beans or cowpeas and plowed under in the spring before the new crop is planted. This program may sometimes be modified with profit by following a two-year rotation of corn, soy beans, or corn cowpeas. In this event a catch-crop of rye and vetch is sown in the standing corn, or rye after the corn is cut. After a year or two as the condition of the soil begins to improve, ground limestone is applied to at least one of the fields in order to prepare the way for clover.

Second stage—After the first stage has been passed and clover can be grown with reasonable certainty, the system may be gradually changed to a four-year rotation as follows:

First year Corn
Second year Soy beans or cowpeas
Third year Rye
Fourth year Clover

This rotation presupposes that 2 or 3 tons of ground limestone or marl per acre has been applied to at least one field of the farm, and that a new field will be thus treated each year before an attempt is made to seed it to clover. The catch-crop of rye or rye and vetch is sown each year in the corn as before. This is a transition stage in which live stock is being introduced as rapidly as fences can be purchased and built, and as the farm can be made to produce the necessary feed and pasture.

From this point the way is open in several directions for the free development of general farming through a gradual shift from the cash-crop to a live stock basis, or a proper balance of both. In some sections of the sandy-land country the system outlined has been found to serve as a foundation for developing a profitable hog-raising enterprise, while in other sections, where markets are convenient, it leads more logically to the development of dairying.

THOSE SUDDEN TWINGES

Bring Suffering to Many a Charlevoix Reader.

Pain is nature's signal of distress. A warning not to be ignored. Those sharp twinges in the back—Those sudden, stab-like pains when stooping.

Are frequent signs of kidney trouble. Signs that must not be neglected. To remove kidney pains, you must assist the kidneys.

Use a tested and proven kidney remedy. None more highly endorsed than Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Ophelia Davey, Ellsworth, Mich., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble for some time. I had pain in the small of my back and twinges when stooping or lifting. My back ached at night and was lame in the morning. I tired easily, was languid and nervous and had headaches. The kidney secretions were unnatural. I finally took Doan's Kidney Pills and they helped me at once."

Announcement. To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for nomination on the Republican ticket for member of the state legislature. I believe I am fully qualified to capably represent the people of this district, especially those engaged in agricultural pursuits.

I do not claim to be "next" to the ins and outs of politics, but do believe I can give my aid toward legislation that will cut down the present high taxation, and which will also be of great benefit to farmers. Your support before the primary and your vote on primary day will be greatly appreciated.

FRED WHITE, Pol. adv. 30th Evelline Township.

THEATRICAL

"Dr. Rameau."

It is unusual to find such a combination of stars in one production as is presented in William Fox's latest photodramatic success, "Dr. Rameau." In the title role appears Frederick Perry, lately starred in the Broadway success of the season, "On Trial," and admittedly the most effective dramatic actor on the stage today.

Stuart Holmes, as Munzell, the artist, is too well known to require extensive praise for his very effective work in this remarkable production. Mr. Holmes has starred in many feature pictures, and seems to grow more popular with each. Dorothy Bernard, who portrays Conchita with such telling charm and power; Jean Sothern, as the innocent recipient of Dr. Rameau's wrath; George Alison as Talvanne, and Edith Hallor in the important role of Roselle, are a fitting support for the superb dramatic talent of Mr. Perry.

Too much credit, furthermore, cannot be given to Mr. Will S. Davis and his assistant, Mr. Arthur Vaughan, for the painstaking manner and artistic skill with which they directed the picture. The action is often capable of exaggeration, but not once did Mr. Davis permit the overdoing of a scene. The settings are splendid, and the photography throughout is very good.

At the Majestic theatre Monday, August 7.

Announcement.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County: I hereby announce my candidacy for nomination on the Republican ticket, for the office of County Clerk. Please look up my past work and if satisfactory I will appreciate your support at the primaries on August 29th. Yours respectfully, Pol. adv. 28th. RICHARD LEWIS.

MEET THE HEAT-HALF WAY
"Keep cool," "Don't get so hot," we admonish the angry man, thus showing we recognize the relation between temperature and temper.

And we take it for granted that children are going to get cross in hot weather. And they do, but it is usually some adult's fault.
When some children naturally and joyfully take a cold bath under the spray of the inviting hose they get scolded. When they take off their shoes and paddle in a puddle some of them are punished.

But they are only reducing their temperature instinctively. They are only doing for themselves in the easiest way what their guardians should manage in a better way—if they can figure one out.

In July the demand for little white coffins is heavier than in any other month of the year. Hundreds of these would not be required if parents would take care to meet the temperature half way.

Put away the notion that an open window means a draft. Don't be afraid that if you take off the children's petticoats they are going to take cold. Unless they are already below normal physically, and ready to catch anything, children will have a hard time taking cold while the thermometer is above 80.

Make it a rule to let them go barefoot during the hottest hours. Put on sandals if the premises on which they play are not assuredly raked nail clean. Let small folks, even babies, have plenty of cool, but not iced, water.

The offensive is supposed to have the advantage in any battle. Meet the heat half way.

If you don't go away from your own farm or your own city, what do you know about what your neighbors are doing. We are living in an age of progress and progress means prosperity. Charlevoix county is destined to be the Mecca of tourists. We have the climate, we have the scenery and we have the fruit with flavor. All we need is permanent roads to attract them here and when once here, we stand a mighty good chance of keeping them here, or else having them pay us yearly visits. When you build a road, build the maintenance into the road at the beginning and not keep up a lot of patchwork.

Nature has done more for Charlevoix county than any other place in the world. We have the aggregate for good concrete roads all along the sides of the road to use in building concrete roads. We also have the drainage; proper drainage being necessary to build any kind of a road. The better the drainage the easier to build the road and the more durable it will be.

Now that Uncle Sam is jumping on Johnny Bull's toes because of mail seizures and blacklisting of American business interests, it is probable that our German friends will soon revise their opinion as to the United States government not being neutral, as the Germans have claimed.

INFANT PARALY- SIS PREVENTED

GOVERNMENT MAKES RIGID IN-VESTIGATIONS

Advises All to Take Precautionary Measures to Control Possible Outbreak.

To control the present epidemic of infantile paralysis, according to a statement issued by the United States Public Health Service today, the chain of infection between persons harboring germs of the disease and the well members of the community should be broken. Infantile paralysis is probably caused by a very minute organism found in the nasal, mouth and bowel discharges of those who have the disease or who are carriers of the germ without themselves suffering from the ailment. All of the steps in the spread of the infection are not known but if this germ can be prevented from passing from the infected to the well person, the disease will cease.

Infantile paralysis is not a disease of recent origin. Sporadic or acute cases have occurred throughout the country for many years but it is only during the last decade that the infection has assumed epidemic proportions in the United States. The present epidemic in New York city, on account of its magnitude and virulence, has awakened the residents of many communities to the danger of the importation of the disease into their own midst. This danger is real, but if due precautions are exercised it is believed that the epidemic will subside.

The actual control of the present epidemic must be left to the city, state and federal health authorities.
These organizations will properly quarantine and care for affected persons, prescribe sanitary measures and limit as may be necessary the travel of individuals in order to protect neighboring districts from the infection. Individuals and communities, however, can do much toward their own protection.

Poliomyelitis is probably spread directly or indirectly, through the medium of infective secretions. Account must therefore be taken by communities of every means by which such secretions are disseminated. Promiscuous expectation should be controlled. The common drinking cup affords a method for the interchange of material of this nature and should therefore be abolished. Rigid cleanliness of glasses and utensils at soda fountains, in saloons and other public places should be enforced. Flies, roaches and other vermin, by coming in contact with infective secretions, may possibly convey them to our food and thus directly bring about the development of disease. Therefore eliminate insects. Street and house dust bear a definite relation to the spread of many infections and it is not unreasonable to presume that they may be a factor in the dissemination of infantile paralysis. Maintain strict cleanliness of streets, yards and alleys in order to prevent the breeding of insects and other vermin.

See that all garbage and waste are properly cared for and collected at regular and frequent intervals. Guard all food supplies, especially milk and other perishable products.
Digestive troubles of children arising from the indigestion of food of questionable quality may lower resistence. Assemblies of children in infected localities are to be discouraged, if not actually forbidden.
While the above measures are in a sense general, and applicable to many epidemic diseases, their importance should not be overlooked.

Individual preventive measures may be thus summarized:

Summon a physician at once and immediately notify the health officer of the presence of the disease. If the disease is present in the community, medical aid should be sought whenever a child is sick no matter how light the illness; many cases of infantile paralysis begin with a slight indisposition. Should the illness prove to be infantile paralysis isolate the patient, place a competent person in charge and reduce all communication with the sick room to a minimum. Hospital care is preferable, not only for the child but in order to better safeguard against the spread of the disease. The sick room should be well ventilated and screened. Nasal and mouth secretions should be received in cloths, placed in a paper bag and burned.
The clothing of the child, the bed linen, and the excretions should be disinfected in the same manner as for typhoid fever, that is by boiling, the long continued application of 3 per cent carbolic, or other well recognized disinfectant. The same is true for dishes and drinking vessels. Nurses should exercise the same precautions as regards cleanliness of hands in caring for infantile paralysis patients as for those afflicted with other infectious diseases.

A child may convey the disease to others even after a lapse of several weeks. For this reason quarantine should be maintained for a considerable period, usually from six to eight weeks, and the above precautions should be adhered to during this time. Disinfection of the room following recovery is advisable.

ROAD TRAFFIC ON INCREASE

REACHES HIGHEST POINT SO FAR THIS YEAR

Six Hundred and Thirty Seven Convoyances on Petoskey Road
In 24 Hours.

In the last issue of the Courier the prediction was made that during the last few days of July and the first in August, traffic in northern Michigan would greatly increase. The figures given at this time were surprising, but those taken Monday show an increase, as will happen at each count taken during August.

Commencing at 5:00 p. m. Monday, July 31, and continuing until 5:00 p. m., Tuesday, August 1, the following figures show a material increase over the last report of traffic on the Emmet and Grand Traverse roads, taken from a station at the foot of Greenaky Hill:

Single horse drawn vehicles.... 51

Double team vehicles, light.... 14

Loaded team wagons..... 3

Auto runabouts..... 88

Touring cars..... 479

Motorcycles..... 2

Total..... 637

Is it any wonder that Charlevoix county needs good roads—roads that will stand the wear and tear of this enormous traffic. Road Commissioner O. D. Hammond is about to make complaint to local officers, in an effort to see that traffic laws are strictly lived up to. He states that big, heavy touring cars are running on the country roads outside of the city limits at speeds varying from 30 to 60 miles an hour. Several narrow escapes from collisions with horse drawn vehicles have been reported, and in fact, it has come to a point where it is unsafe for a buggy or wagon to attempt to travel at all.

A big automobile with a fool driver is about as dangerous to meet as a German underwater boat, and measures should be taken at once to compel such drivers to keep down to the speed limit or get out of the country. It is safe to say that prosecutions will be the result of the abuse of road laws, and some driver will be handed the limit of the law if the practice is not stopped at once.

The Daughters of the Confederacy have promised to line this highway, entirely across the county of Putnam, Ga., with flowers and shrubbery. Just think what that means for Putnam county and then reflect for a moment what it would mean to have a row of apple trees along the roadside in front of every farm in Charlevoix county. The benefits derived from same by the advanced valuation of farm property would make this one of the very best investments that anyone can make.
The tourists would talk about Charlevoix county all over the world.

One great difficulty in our county is that our people have nice trees, or have had them and the road commissioner, or old fashioned path master, has deliberately and wantonly cut them down, thereby destroying one great beauty of our highways. I have seen a farmer thin out and leave standing some nice trees and then go to work and deliberately and fool-like to pile brush in close proximity to one of the beautiful trees that he had intended to save, set fire to the brush and destroy the tree. We have all seen that done time and time again. I have seen with the past years a row of beautiful elms, eight to fourteen inches in diameter, cut and many of the trunks remain by the roadside at the present time. This is one of the prettiest viewpoints I know of in this county and should a man wish to purchase the place today, he would give at least $500 more if that row of trees were standing.

Some day, there will be a concrete road past this man's house and some rich man will give a big price, not so much for the land as for the landscaping.

Just keep right on thinking, good people, along these lines and see what it means to you in the future.

Yours truly,

GEORGE H. VAN PELT.

CHAPTER XV.

The Man a Prince Again.

O'NEIL had the faculty of sleeping well in spite of the most tormenting worries. He arose on the morning after his interview with Mr. Hieldmann ready to begin the struggle with all his normal energy and confidence. But the day brought him only discouragement. He had a large acquaintance. The mention of his name in quarters where he was not personally known gained him respectful attention, but he found himself working in the shadow of the copper trust, and the silent influence overcame his strongest arguments.

No one, it seemed, cared to risk even a semblance of rivalry with that monstrous aggregation of capital, for the interlacing of financial interests was amazingly intricate, and financiers were fearful of the least misstep. Everywhere O'Neil encountered the same disheartening timidity. His battle, it seemed, had been lost before it was begun.

Days passed in fruitless endeavors. Evenings found O'Neil in his corner of the hotel cafe racking his brain for some way out of his perplexities. Usually he was surrounded by friends, for he continued to entertain in the lavish fashion for which he had gained a reputation, but sometimes he was alone, and then his solitude became more oppressive than it had ever been even in the farthest wastes of the north-land. He was made to feel his responsibility with dreadful keenness, for his associates were in a panic and bombarded him with daily inquiries, vexatious and hard to answer.

One evening as he ran through his mail he found a letter in a woman's handwriting and, glancing at the signature, started. It was signed "Glenn Gordon." Briefly it apprised him of her marriage and of her and Natalie's return to Hope. Glenn thanked him profusely for his many kindnesses, but she neither expressed nor implied an invitation for him to visit them. He smiled a little grimly. Already her loyalty had veered to Gordon's side, and Natalie no doubt shared her feeling. Well, it was but natural perhaps.

He was aroused from his train of thought by a stranger whom he found standing beside his table and looking down at him with wavering eyes.

"Miss O'Neil, ain't it?" the fellow inquired. "Sure! Thought I knew you. I'm Bulker of the old North pass. Remember me?"

Mr. Bulker had been imbibing freely. He showed evidences of a protracted spree not only in his speech, but in the trembling hand which he extended. His eyes were bloodshot, and his good natured face was purple.

O'Neil greeted him pleasantly, and, considering himself enthusiastically welcomed, the newcomer sat down suddenly as if some one had tripped him.

"Been washing you for ten minutes," "Washing me?"

"No, washing you. Couldn't make you out; eyesight's getting bad. Too many bright lights in this town. Hal! Joke! Let's have a drink."

"Thank you, no."

"Must have a little drink for old time's sake. You're the only one of the North pass crowd I'll drink with." Mr. Bulker gestured comprehensively at a group of waiters, and Murray smiled. "You were my friend, O'Neil. You always treated me right."

"What are you doing now?" asked O'Neil, with the interest he could not refuse to any one who had ever worked with him. He remembered the fellow perfectly. He had come on from the east as auditor and had appeared to be capable, although somewhat given to drink.

"I'm a broker. Wall street's my habitation. Fine time to buy stocks, Miss O'Neil." Bulker assumed an expression of great wisdom. "Take to have a tip? Well! Good! You're a wise man. They find me from the North Pass. What'd you know about that? Piled me for drinking! Greatest injustice I ever heard of, but I hit running, like a turkey. That wasn't the reason they let me go, though. Not on your life. He winked portentously and, strangely enough, his eyelid failed to resume its normal position. It continued to droop, giving the appearance of a waggish leer. "I knew too much! I ain't healthy to know too much, is it?"

"I've never had a chance to find out," smiled Murray.

"Oh, don't be an ingenue; you saved more than anybody on the job. I'll admit I took a nip now and then, but I never got pickled. Say! Who did you know I saw today? Old man Hils?"

O'Neil became suddenly intent. He had been trying to get in touch with Ponting Hils for more than a fortnight, but his entreaties to London had brought no response.

"Who did he see?"

"Just lately. He's a game old rooster, ain't he? Gee, he's sore!"

"Sore about what?"

Bulker winked again, with the same lack of muscular control.

"About that North Pass deal, of course. He was blackmailed out of a cold million. The agreement's about up now, and I figure he's over here to renew it."

"You're talking Greek," said O'Neil, but his eagerness was manifest.

"I s'posed you knew. The North Pass has been paying blackmail to the Yukon steamboat companies for three years. When you built the line it practically put 'em out of the Dawson market, understand?"

"Of course."

Now that Mr. Bulker's mind was running along well worn grooves his intoxication became less apparent.

"These Frisco steamboat men got together and started a rate war against the railroad. They hauled freight to Dawson by way of St. Michaels at a loss. Of course Hils and his crowd had to meet competition, and it nearly broke 'em the first two seasons. Gee, they were the mad ones! Finally they fixed up an agreement—had to or go bust—and of course the Native Sons put it over our English cousins. They agreed to restore the old rate, and each side promised to pay the other a royalty of $10 a ton on all the freight it hauled to Dawson and up river points. You can guess the result, can't you? The steamboat companies let Hils haul all the freight and sat back on their haunches and took their profit. For every ton he hauled he slipped 'em ten round American dollars, stumped with the Goddess of Liberty. Oh, it was soft! When they had him fairly tied up they drydoctored their steamboats, to save wear and tear. He paid 'em a thousand dollars a day for three years. If that ain't blackmail it's a first cousin to it by marriage."

"Didn't the interstate commerce commission get wise?"

"Certainly not. It looks wise, but it never gets wise. Oh, believe me, Hils is hopping mad! I s'pose he's over here now to renew the arrangement for another three years on behalf of his stockholders. Let's have a drink."

Bulker sat back and stared as through a mist at his companion, enjoying the effect of his disclosure.

O'Neil was indeed impressed, more deeply than his inebriated dreamer. Out of the lips of a drunken man had come a hint which set his nerves tingling. He knew Hils well, he knew the caliber of the Englishman, and a plan was already keeping in his brain whereby he might save the S. R. and N.

It lacked an hour of midnight when O'Neil escaped from Bulker and reached his room. Once inside he seized the telephone and rang up hotel after hotel, inquiring for the English capitalist, but without result. After a moment's consideration he took his hat and gloves and went out. The matter did not permit of delay. Not only were his own needs imperative, but if Hils had come from London to confer with his rivals there was little time to spare.

Remembering the Englishman's habits, O'Neil turned up the avenue to another fashionable hotel, where he asked for the manager, whom he well knew.

"Yes, Mr. Hils is here," he was informed, "but he's registered under a different name. No doubt he'll be glad to see you, however."

A moment later Murray recognized the voice of Hils' valet over the wire and greeted him by name. Another brief delay and the capitalist himself was at the phone.

"Come right up," he said, and O'Neil replied the receiver with a sigh of relief.

Hils greeted him warmly, for their relations had been close.

"Lucky you found me," he said. "I'm going back on the next sailing."

"Have you signed up with the Arctic Navigation company?" Murray inquired, and the other started.

"Hiss me! What do you mean?" Hils called loudly. "I see you haven't. I don't think you will, either, after our talk."

Without the tremor of an eyelash Hils exclaimed:

"My word! What are you driving at?"

"That agreement over freight rates, of course."

The Briton eyed him for a moment, then carefully closed the door leading from his sitting room and, seating himself, lit a cigar.

"What do you know about that matter?" he asked quietly.

"About all there is to know—enough at least to appreciate your feelings."

"I betted myself that my affairs were private. Where did you get your information?"

"I'll tell you if you insist, although I'd rather not. There's no danger of its becoming public."

Hils showed his relief. "You said."

You gave me a start. A awful fix for a man to be in. Why, I'm here under an assumed name. Piffey! But— He waved his hand in a gesture which showed his acceptance of the inevitable.

"You haven't made your new agreement?"

"I'm to meet Hils and Capron tomorrow."

"Why didn't you take the S. R. and N. when I cabled you last month?"

"I couldn't. But what has that to do with the matter?"

"Don't you see? It's so plain to me that I can't understand how you failed to realize the value—the necessity of buying my road."

"Explain, please."

"Gladly. The North Pass and Yukon is paying a fabulous blackmail to the river lines to escape its ruinous rate war."

"Right! It's blackmail, as you say."

"Under the present agreement you handle the Dawson freight and keep out of the lower river. They take the whole Tanana valley and lower Yukon."

"Correct."

"Didn't it occur to you that the S. R. and N., which starts 400 miles west of the North Pass and taps the Tanana valley, can be used to put the river steamers of that section out of business?"

"Let's have a look at the map," Mr. Hils hurried into an adjoining room and returned with a large chart, which he unrolled upon the table. "To tell you the truth, I never looked at the proposition from that angle. Our people were afraid of those glaciers and the competition of the copper trust. They're disgusted, too, with our treatment."

"The trust is eliminated. Kyak harbor is wiped off the map, and I'm alone in the field."

"How about this fellow Gordon?"

"He'll be broke in a year. Incidentally, that's my trouble."

"But I'm told you can't pass the glaciers."

"I can. Parker says he'll have the bridge done by spring."

"Then I'd bank on it. I'd believe Parker if I knew he was lying. If you both agree I haven't the slightest doubt."

"This is a bigger proposition than the North Pass, Mr. Hils. You made money out of that road, but this one will make more." He swiftly outlined the conditions of the offer, even to the attitude assumed by the Hieldmanns, and Hils, knowing the speaker as he did, had no doubt that he was hearing the exact truth. "But that's not all," continued O'Neil. "The S. R. and N. is the club which will hammer your enemies into line. That's what I came to see you about. With a voice in it you can control the traffic of all central Alaska and force the San Francisco"

"Didn't the interstate commerce commission get wise?"

"Certainly not. It looks wise, but it never gets wise. Oh, believe me, Hils is hopping mad! I s'pose he's over here now to renew the arrangement for another three years on behalf of his stockholders. Let's have a drink."

"I can't delay action if there's a chance of a refusal. I'll have to see Hils and Capron," said O'Neil.

"I'll cable full details within the hour. We'll have an answer by tomorrow night."

"And if they refuse?" O'Neil hit at a cigar with steady fingers.

"Oh, if they refuse I'll join you. We'll go over the matter carefully in the meantime. Two million you said, didn't you?"

"Yes. There's two million profit for you in nine months." His voice was husky and a bit uneven, for he had been under a great strain.

"Good! You don't know how resentful I feel toward Hils and his crowd. I—I'm downright angry. I am that."

Hils took the hand which his caller extended with an expressionless face.

"I'm glad I found you," confessed O'Neil. "I was on my last legs. Herman Hieldmann will pay our price when the last bridge bolt is driven home, and he'll pay with a smile on his face. That's the sort of man he is."

"He won't pay if he knows I'm involved. We're not exactly friendly since I sold out my smaller interests. But he needs to know. Nobody need know."

Hils called his valet and instructed him to rouse his secretary and ring for some cable blanks.

"I think I'll cable, too," Murray told him. "I have some 'boys' up there who are working in the dark with their teeth shut. They're waiting for the crash, and they'd like to hear the good news."

Hils' fingers shook as he scrawled the name of Dr. Gray, but his eyes were bright and youth was shining in his heart once more.

"Now let's get down to business," said Mr. Hils. "We'll have to talk fast."

"How about this fellow Gordon?"

"He'll be broke in a year. Incidentally, that's my trouble."

"But I'm told you can't pass the glaciers."

denied the old story. But the man can write. That article caused a stir. "I saw it."

"Naturally the Cortez people ate it up. They're here at the trust for leaving their town and at us for building Omar. Then Gordon called a mass meeting, and some of us went up to watch the fireworks. I've never seen anything quite like that meeting. Every man, woman and child in the city was there, and they blessed us when we came in. Gordon knew what he was about, and he was in fine voice. He told them Cortez was the logical point of entry to the interior of Alaska, and ought to have all the traffic. He fired their animosity toward the trust and accused us of basely selling out to it. Then he broached a project to build, by local subscription, a narrow gauge electric line from Cortez, utilizing the waterfalls for power. The idea caught on and went like wildfire. The people cheered themselves hoarse and pledged him over $100,000 that night. Since then they have subscribed as much more, and the town is crazy. Work has actually begun, and they hope to reach the first summit by Christmas."

Slater broke in: "He's a spellbinder, all right. He made me hate the Holdemans and desire myself for five minutes. I wasn't even sure I liked you, Murray."

"It's a wild scheme, of course," continued the doctor, "but he's putting it over. The town council has granted him a ninety-nine year lease covering every street. The roadbed is started, and things are booming. Lots have been staked all over the flats, property values are soaring, everybody is out of his head, and Gordon is a god. All he does is organize new companies. He has bought a sawmill, a wharf, a machine shop, acres of real estate. He has started a bank and a new hotel. He has consolidated the barber shops, and he talks about roofing in the streets with glass and making the town a series of arcades."

Slater half smiled—evidence of a convulsive mirth within.

"They've picked out a site for a university," he said blithely. "Cortez is going to be a seat of learning and culture. They're planning a park and a place for an Alaskan world's fair and a museum and a library. I've always wondered who starts public libraries. It's nuts. But I didn't suppose more than one or two people got foolish that way."

O'Neill soon found that the accounts he had received of Gordon's last attempt to reconquer his fortunes were in no way exaggerated. Cortez, long the playground of the railroad builders, had been ripe for his touch. It rose in its wounded civic pride and greeted his appeal with frantic delight.

Gordon perfectly understood that something more than vague accusations were necessary to bring the public to his support in sufficient numbers to sweep him on to victory, and with this in mind he laid crafty plans to seize the Holdemans' grade. The trust had ceased active work on its old right of way and moved to Kyak, to be sure, but it had not abandoned its original route and, in fact, had maintained a small crew at the first detour outside of Cortez, known as Beaver Canyon. Gordon reasoned shrewdly that a struggle between the agents of the trust and the patriotic citizens of the town would afford him precisely the advertising he needed and give point to his charge of unfair play against the Holdemans.

It was not difficult to infect his victims to this act of robbery. On the contrary, once he had made the suggestion, he had hard work to restrain them until he had completed his preparations. These preparations were simple. They consisted in writing and mailing to every newspaper of consequence a highly colored account of the railroad struggle. These mimeographed stories were posted from Seattle in time for them to reach their destinations on the date set for the seizure of the grade.

It was an ingenious publicity move, worthy of a theatrical press agent, and it succeeded beyond the promoter's fondest expectations—too well, in fact, for it drove Murray to desperation to an alliance with the S. R. and N.

The day set for the demonstration came; the citizens of Cortez boldly marched into Beaver Canyon to take possession of the old Holdemann workings, but it appeared that they had reckoned prematurely. A handful of grim faced trust employees warned them back; there was a rush, some rough work on the part of the aggressors, and then the guards brought their weapons into play. The result afforded Gordon far more sensational material than he had hoped for; one citizen was killed and five others were badly wounded. Cortez, dazed and horror-stricken, arose in her wrath and descended upon the "assassins," lynching was planned and mobs threatened the local jail, until soldiers were sent to quell the riot and martial law was declared.

Of course the wires were saturated with the accounts; the reading public of the States awoke to the fact that a bitter strife was waging in the north between honest miners and the soulless Holdemann syndicate. Gordon's previously written and carefully colored stories of the clash were printed far and wide. Editorials brooded indignation at such lawlessness and pointed to the Cortez-Itoma railway as a commendable effort to destroy the Holdemann throttle hold upon the northland. Stock subscriptions came in a deluge which fairly engulfed Gordon's Seattle office force.

During this brief white hot campaign the promoter had been actuated as much by his senseless hatred of O'Neill as by lust of glory and gain, and it was with no little satisfaction that he returned to Alaska conscious of having dealt a telling blow to his enemy. He sent Natalie to Omar on another visit in order that he might hear at first hand how O'Neill took the matter.

"But this can't be true," stammered Gordon.

But his complacency received a shock when the girl returned. It had no need to question her.

"Uncle Curtis," she began excitedly, "you ought to stop these terrible newspaper stories about Mr. O'Neill and the trust."

"Stop them? My dear, what do you mean?"

"He didn't sell out to the trust. He has nothing to do with it."

"What?" Gordon's incredulity was a challenge.

"He sold to an Englishman named Mills. They seem to be amused by your mistake over there at Omar, but I think some of the things printed are positively criminal. I knew you'd want the truth."

"The truth, yes. But this can't be true," stammered Gordon.

"It is. Mr. O'Neill did try to interest the Holdemanns, but they wouldn't have anything to do with him, and the S. R. and N. was going to smother when Mr. Mills came along barely in time. It was too exciting and dramatic for anything the way Mr. O'Neill found him when he was in hiding."

"Hiding?"

"Yes. There was something about blackmail or a secret arrangement between Mr. Mills and the Yukon river lines. I couldn't understand just what it was, but anyhow Murray took advantage of it and saved the North Pass and the S. R. and N. at the same time."

"It was really a perfectly wonderful stroke of genius. I determined at once that you should stop these lies and correct the general idea that he is in the pay of the trust. Why, he went to Cortez last week, and they threatened his life!"

Mrs. Gordon, who had listened, said quietly: "Don't blame Curtis for that. That bloody affray at Beaver Canyon has made Cortez bitter against every one connected with the Holdemanns."

"What about this blackmail?" said her husband, upon whose ear the word had made a welcome impression. "I don't understand what you mean by O'Neill's 'saving' the North Pass and his own road at the same time—nor Mills' being in hiding."

"Neither do I," Natalie confessed, "but I know you have made a mistake that ought to be set right."

"Why doesn't he come out with the truth?"

"The whole thing is secret."

"Why?"

Natalie shrugged helplessly, and Gordon lost himself in frowning thought.

"This is amazing," he said brusquely after a moment. "It's vital. It affects all my plans. I must know everything at once."

"I'm sorry I paid so little attention," "Never mind. Try it again and be diplomatic. If O'Neill won't tell you, question Appleton. You can wind him around your fingers easily enough, I am sure."

The girl eyed him with a quick change of expression.

"Isn't it enough to know that the trust has nothing to do with the S. R. and N?"

"No," he declared impatiently. "I must know the whole inside of this secret understanding—this blackmail or whatever it is."

"Then I'm sorry. You can do me a great service."

"You said you no longer disliked Mr. O'Neill and that he couldn't harm you."

"Well, well. Must I explain the why and wherefore of every move I make?"

"It would be springing if I went back. The matter is confidential. I know that."

"Will you do as I ask?" he demanded.

Natalie answered him firmly: "No! I told you what I did tell only so that you might correct."

"You rebel, eh?" Gordon spoke out furiously.

He strode angrily from the room, leaving Natalie staring out upon the bleak fall scene, her shoulders very straight, her breast heaving. Gloria did not venture to address her.

Fortunately for the peace of all concerned, Gordon left for Seattle on the next steamer. Neither of the women bellowed that Natalie's fragmentary revelation was the cause of his departure; but, once in touch with outside affairs, he lost no time in running down the clues he had gathered, and it was not long before he had learned enough to piece the truth together. Then he once more brought his mimeograph into use.

The first winter snows found O'Neill's track laid to the bridge site and the structure itself well begun. He had moved his office out to the front and now saw little of Eliza, who was busied in writing her book. She had finished her magazine articles, and they had been accepted, but she had given him no hint as to their character.

One afternoon Happy Tom burst in upon his chief, having hastened out from Omar on a construction train. Drawing a Seattle paper from his pocket, he began excitedly:

"Well, the fets in the fire, Murray! Somebody has belched up the whole North Pass story!"

O'Neill seized the newspaper and scanned it hurriedly. He looked up, scowling.

"Who gave this out?" he inquired in a harsh voice.

Slater shrugged. "It's in the Cortez Courier, too, so I suppose it came from Gordon. Blessings come from one source, and Gordon's the fountain of all evil. I'm getting so I blame him for everything unpleasant."

"Where did he learn the inside of Mills' deal? By heaven, there's a leak somewhere!"

"Maybe he uncovered it back there in the States."

Murray shook his head. "Nobody knows anything about it except you boys."

Then he seized the telephone at his elbow and called Dr. Gray, while Tom listened with his shining forehead puckered anxiously. O'Neill hung up with a black face.

"Appleton!" he said.

Tom looked, if possible, a shade gloomier than usual. "I wouldn't be too sure it was than if I was you," he ventured doubtfully.

"Where is he?" O'Neill ground out the words between his teeth.

"Surveying the town site addition. If he let anything slip it was by mistake."

"Mistake! I won't employ people who make mistakes of that kind. This story may bring the Canadian government down on Mills and forfeit his North Pass charter, to say nothing of our authorities. That would finish us." He rose, went to the door and ordered the recently arrived engine uncoupled. Flushing himself into his fur coat, he growled:

"I'd much rather have a crook under me than a fool. Appleton told me he talked too much."

Right Now is THE TIME

Right now is the time to talk about your heating plant. Don't wait until you can look into the sky and see the snow flakes coming, down as big as hase balls and the wind blowing 57 miles an hour, and the house 10 degrees below zero. Now is the time to make up your mind and have the plant installed and ready for business. If you do this you will not be obliged to go out into some outdoor building and dig up that old heating stove and set it up on three legs and a couple of bricks. Then it turns up that Johnnie had the door during the summer to make a fire under and had left it on the back eighty. The stove pipe turns up missing and some is forced to make a drive to town for a new one. Then come the "cuss" words" putting up the pipe.

Now is the time to do away with all of this trouble. Let me explain to you the merits of the heating plants I sell. I will install a plant in your home and will not ask for a cent in payment until you acknowledge that you are entirely satisfied with it. What could be more fair.

I installed nearly a hundred plants last year and you cannot show me a dissatisfied customer. That is the way our plants work. Drop me a card or call at the house and see me. Look over what I have in the heating plant line. Can furnish all material, brick, etc. Furnaces with brick jackets or iron, any kind you may want. Let me explain them to you and you will buy.

SATURDAY IS HEART TAG DAY

BENEFIT OF MICHIGAN CHILD WELFARE LEAGUE

League Highly Endorsed by State Board of Correction and Charities—Buy a Heart.

To the Citizens of Charlevoix:
I have given the Michigan Child Welfare League permission to have a "Heart Tag" sale in Charlevoix, Saturday, August 5.
The work is a most commendable one and worthy of the support of all communities of Michigan.
Yours, for the children,
ANDREW ROSS, Mayor

Tag Day in Charlevoix on Saturday, August 5, for benefit of the Michigan Child Welfare League to aid them in their work of building up and caring for poor crippled children.

A Heart Tag Day will be conducted here on Saturday for the benefit of poor crippled children in Michigan, who are being cared for and benefited by the Michigan Child Welfare League. The league is doing a much needed work throughout the state and is demonstrating that it is not necessary for a child to go through life dependent upon the charity of others because of physical handicap. One hundred and sixty nine crippled children have been benefited by the league this past year, and many of these cases were of long standing neglect.

Little heart tags will be sold all over the city next Saturday—your gifts for these little hearts will help the Michigan Child Welfare League to straighten the bodies of the poor children in your own county and state, and make them happy, healthy, useful little citizens.

The Michigan Child Welfare
League is your organization in justice to its aims for the well being of the child in all communities in the state.

The Michigan Child Welfare
League is incorporated, non-sectional and is highly endorsed by the state board of corrections and charities. The citizens and visitors of Charlevoix are asked to be as generous as they can to help this beautiful charity in giving the poor handicapped boys and girls a chance to be self-supporting and useful citizens.

Besides aiding crippled and handicapped children the league works with the home as a unit. Whole families are kept together where poverty threatens to break up the home.
Mothers are pensioned so that they may keep their children in their care.

Several children in Charlevoix and the county have received assistance from the league and each case reported of a crippled child will be carefully investigated and aid given as circumstances are found.

This great work is supported entirely by membership fees, voluntary gifts and proceeds from tag day sales.

The local committee will be assisted by Miss Mildred B. Kennedy, district superintendent of the league.
The finance committee, who will receive the funds collected are: A. E.
Bridge, W. J. Rachow, Harry F.
Nicholls and Mayor Andrew Ross.

The headquarters will be at the Charlevoix County bank. Supplies will be given out Friday afternoon to all young people who have volunteered to sell the tags on Saturday.
Have a heart and help the poor crippled children.

TONOLINE IS BEAUTY AID, ANNOUNCES SPECIALIST

Mildred Louise Talk of Interest to Women

As health is a first aid to beauty this story, told by Mildred Louise, beauty specialist, of Boston, Mass., is of unusual interest.

"I can recommend no better health giver than tonoline," said Mildred Louise.

"I was for many months a victim of stomach trouble and nervousness. I had suffered terribly from pains that followed eating. Headaches also would add to my worries. Poor digestion finally brought on nervousness.

"Relief came, however, when I took the advice of several women who said, 'Take tonoline.'

"Not long after I started the tonoline treatment, my patron began to remind me of the improvement in my condition. And because health is the quickest way to beauty, the improvement was particularly noticeable in my face.

"What tonoline really did for me I cannot say. I am so grateful that I am very willing to recommend tonoline publicly.

Tonoline is a purely vegetable preparation which goes to the seat of common maladies—stomach and kidney trouble, catarrhal affections of the mucous membranes, liver ailments and impurities of the blood—and quickly restores proper action. Tonoline is being explained daily to many people at all druggists.

Notice:—As tonoline is a wonderful flesh builder it should not be taken by any one not wishing to increase his weight ten pounds or more. Although many reports are received from those who have been benefited by tonoline in severe cases of stomach trouble and nervous dyspepsia, chronic constipation, etc.

WHISKEY ON BRAIN GAS DRIVEN AUTO

PENALTY FOR CAUSING DEATH OF A PEDESTRIAN WHICH DETROIT MAN PAYS.

AN INSTRUCTIVE STATEMENT

He Places the Blame On the Fact That He Had Been Drinking and the Judge Gives Warning to Others.

"No man with even the smelt of liquor on his breath should be permitted to drive an automobile. I believe my warning should be heeded by all automobilists. Had I followed the rule I would not be going to Jackson prison to serve from three to 15 years."

William Dorah, convicted of manslaughter as a result of running down and killing William C. Nutter, Jr., with his automobile the night of Jan. 17, grasped the bars in his cell in the county jail and with a trace of tremor in his voice made the foregoing declaration, says the Detroit News.

"I was not intoxicated the night of the accident. I had been drinking, that I admit. But my condition was not such that I was driving blindly or recklessly. Still, when I was arrested there was that odor of liquor on my breath and they said I was drunk."

"Had it not been for that I would be a free man today. The testimony that I gave and the testimony of my witnesses would have stood before the jury and I would have been liberated. But the fact I had a drink spelled my ruin. I had to admit I had been drinking and the jury evidently took the position that having had a few drinks I was drunk. Again I repeat that no man has any right—or regard for his own welfare—to drink and drive an automobile at the same time."

Dorah was called before Judge Connelly in the recorder's court for sentence. He was the first man ever convicted in the criminal courts of this city on a charge of manslaughter as the outgrowth of an automobile accident.

"I give you this statement," remarked the court, "as a warning to auto drivers who get drunk and believe they own the streets and who have no regard for human life."

To Find the Water Level in Soil. In the Farm and Fireside is the following advice to the farmer who is about to plant his crops:

"The water level is a term used in speaking about soils. It means the depth in the ground where the soil is saturated with moisture."

"To find it simply take a post hole digger and dig down until water stands at the bottom of the hole. Do this in an ordinary season when the ground has about the average amount of moisture. For most crops the water level should be about three feet below the surface, for alfalfa at least five feet. A water level two to three feet deep is excellent for the majority of farm crops."

BARBECUE DAY AUGUST TENTH

HUNDREDS OF VISITORS ARE EXPECTED

Ellsworth Business Men Have Completed Plans for Entertainment of Big Crowd.

August 10 is Barbecue Day. For the past ten days Ellsworth business men have been busy completing plans for the entertainment of the hundreds of visitors expected.

The crowd will be entertained in Campbell's Park, one of the coolest and most inviting spots in this section of the country. Seats have been arranged and everything possible done to make the day one of recreation and rest for the visitors.

One of the features of the day will be the base ball game between Ellsworth and Charlevoix teams. Big league games and their accompanying thrills will be put in the shade by the stunts pulled off by the local teams.

At noon roast beef and fixins will be served to all who desire to have their hunger appeased. There will be plenty for all—and then some.

While the arrangements for speakers are not fully completed as yet, prominent men will address the crowd during the afternoon.

Barbecue day will be a hummer—and a day's outing will do you good—so be there all day.

OLD TIME EGG HOAX.

A Joke That Did Not Result Just as the Perpetrator Expected.

Away back in the days when Miller was preaching the near end of the world there were two men living in Lawrenceville, neighbors, who may be named Brown and Jones, who were like unto Jonathan and David. Jones was a chicken fancier. Both, like most people in that day, discussed Millerism.

One Saturday night Brown, who had read somewhere that if a pointed stick were dipped in oil anything written with it on an egg, and with the egg held to the fire, would remain indelible.

Brown wrote on an egg, "The world will come to an end on Oct. 20, 1844," the day Miller had stated, and placed the egg in one of Jones' nests, expecting Jones would come to him as soon as he found it and after a good laugh he would tell how it was done.

But Jones, as soon as he could get his clothes on, rushed to the home of Rev. Richard Lea. The news spread like wildfire, and persons coming to town to church carried it, and all Sunday there was a throng calling on Jones to see the egg. Brown viewed the crowd with a much troubled mind, and at last he went to Jones and told the story. Never after that did Jones speak to Brown.—Letter to Pittsburgh Gazette-Times.

SENSIBLE PIECE OF ROAD BUILDING

Bad Hill on Ellsworth Road Eliminated by Building Around It.

One of the most sensible pieces of road building we have seen for many a day is about completed on the Ellsworth road, just south of the farm of Joseph McElroy. Here for years a steep hill has been the object of more curs words on the part of both automobile and horse drawn vehicles than would fill a hundred page book. The hill was steep, full of ruts, and at the bottom sand at least 18 inches deep. The climb was one of the worst in this section of the state. After a heavy rain fall, it was deeply rutted and almost impassible.

The new road eliminates the hill entirely. It starts directly in front of the McElroy home and goes around the hill to the west, connecting with the old road at the south end of the hill. When the new road is finished and graveled, it will be as good as any in the county.

Let the good work go on. Taxpayers will find it a lot cheaper and more satisfactory in the end to build roads around the hills than attempt to go over them. Do the same thing with the hill just a little north. This does not compare favorably with a back-field cow path, and is almost impossible to get over.

A little, young wife, who weighs 98 pounds, said to her husband: "Please think! I will sometimes have to run the Cream Separator. Get me I can easily use."

They Bought the EMPIRE

It starts under the weight of its crank. Runs so quietly you can hear a watch tick while turning at full speed. This is one of the reasons why we handle the Empire. Other reasons are that we think they are the best separator on the market today. Easy to run, sound in principle, correct in design, perfect in construction, and the kind that gives universal satisfaction. Come in and let us explain the merits of the EMPIRE.

PROTECTION IS BADLY NEEDED

TO INSURE PROPERTY OF CHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Germany Trying to Hold Dye Trade
—75 Per Cent of Deutschland
Cargo Dyestuffs

The development of the manufacture of dyes and chemicals in this country means much to every city in the state. The war has thus far aided in the development of this important industry by keeping out imports from Germany and the chemical plants in all sections have experienced the greatest prosperity in their history.

The following special to The Courier sets forth the necessity of adequate protection for the chemical industry if it is to continue to prosper after the war closes.

"The fact that on her trial trip 75 per cent of the cargo of the undersea merchantman, 'Deutschland,' consisted of German dyestuffs, has convinced, as no amount of argument could convince, the business men of this country, of the importance which Germany attaches to the control of the American dyestuffs market," said a prominent textile manufacturer from Massachusetts yesterday. "If more vessels are to follow the 'Deutschland,' domestic manufacturers will not be free from German competition, even while the war lasts. But the important thing to consider is that Germany is determined to risk every hazard to discourage our own people from engaging in the dye industry. The necessity for adequate protection, if we are to have dyes 'made in America' is plain."

Three days after the arrival of the 'Deutschland' the Democratic congress, after pigeon-holing the Hill bill, passed a measure which provided for a duty on dyestuffs. This bill will not serve the purpose, because, according to the sworn testimony of Democrats (even free-traders) and everyone posted on the subject, the rates are too low. If they are not increased by the senate, just as much water will flow over the dam as formerly flowed through the Democratic breach in our protective wall. Their argument was to catch votes, and their bill was a bluff.

The Hill bill provided a specific duty of 7 1/2 cents per pound on the finished dyes, and 3 3/4 cents per pound on the intermediates, in addition to a 30 per cent ad valorem duty on the former, and 15 per cent on the latter. The Democratic law provides for the ad valorem rates, but the specific rates were reduced, 33 1/3 per cent. Ten thousand chemists in the United States, of all shades of political belief, unanimously approved the Hill rates, which were fixed after the most careful study. A committee of these chemists, of which Dr. Bernard C. Hesse, a free trader, and Hon. Herman Metz, formerly Democratic representative in congress from Brooklyn, were members, speaking of the Hill bill declared: "The committee herewith unanimously reaffirms its belief that the rates proposed in its report of November 4, 1914, are the lowest at which a self-contained, complete, independent coal-tar chemical and dye industry can be created in this country, and at the same time which offers a legitimate incentive to legitimate capital for a legitimate effort to produce these goods in this country." Mr. Metz asserted: "On anything less you will be off, anyway. I do not know whether that is high enough." Dr. Hesse said: "I do not look at it as an industrial proposition but as a matter of national equipment," referring to the dye industry in its adaptability to the manufacture of explosives. A gentleman who was about to embark several millions in the enterprise wrote to Representative Hill: "I am as firmly convinced as ever that the rates mentioned in your bill are the lowest that will establish this industry in the United States, and I have never so much as intimated to anybody, by word of mouth or otherwise, that anything less would do the trick, and I believe that Mr. Kitchen, Mr. Phatt, etc., thoroughly understand my position."

"The coming of the 'Deutschland' dispels one report that was not infrequently heard," said a New York man. "It shows that Germany's offer to ship dyes here was not entirely a matter of bluff. And, in my opinion, it indicates that the war has not disorganized Germany's dye industry to an appreciable extent. We know that Germany is planning an enormous trade campaign to regain the markets held prior to the outbreak of hostilities, and there is no reason to suppose that the dye industry in which she occupied such a predominant position should be neglected in this preparation." The Democrats are now on record as verbally in favor of protection and legislatively against that policy. Evidently, they feel that they are damned if they do, while the dye industry is damned if they don't.

LEGISLATIVE UNREST

This is an age of unrest. All is confusion, chaos and change. We are pulling at the very cornerstones of government and seeking more and more to limit the rights of the people by law. Where do all the hysterical issues originate? Certainly not on the farm, the factory or behind the counter. It is not the busy, enterprising, thoughtful citizenship that suggested these changes. It is the idle, the selfish and the hysterical.

The jeers of the political agitator, the scoffs of the political preacher and the sneers of the political lawyer have crazed the public mind. This triple alliance of evil influences has sent a wave of fright down the spinal column of state, and farmers and business men to many instances have been cut loose from their safe mooring and set adrift in the sea of uncertainty and doubt. The hull has been cast with an unsteady hand and an uncertain mind, but the time for sober second thought has arrived and every good citizen with calm, dispassionate judgment should carefully count the cost. What is gained by all this change? Will it start another plow, build another factory, open another mine or put another vessel afloat on the sea? Will it increase the price of products, decrease the cost of living or lower the taxes?

People, like animals, have leaders and, like them, they should be able to select capable leaders for reason ought to be more able than instinct. Who are the leaders in public life in your state today and on what claim do they base their title to such an honor? Government is a great big business and must be run on business principles. Only those who are capable of grappling with the problems of administering justice, taxation, markets and production and who can grasp the forces of progress are entitled to leadership. It is an easy matter to lead the populace to a fire, but quite another to lead them to the field and factory. It is easy to restrain, but quite another thing to put in motion. It is easy to destroy, but quite another to build. This country needs men of action, horse sense and business ability at the helm in government behind sound, sensible issues that give business results. Take a business inventory. Lay down against every measure the yard stick of results and with courage and wisdom cast out error. Measure every man who seeks to give public counsel by the time-line of business ability.

The greatest peril of any government is unwise leaders. Nations follow their leaders to success or failure. War may have its heroes; religion its martyrs and politics its patriots, but it takes business sense to run government and those who have had no business training or experience are incapable of safe leadership. The farmers and business men must take hold of the reins of government and put forward issues and men that promote the prosperity of the country, and do it now.—Peter Radford, 2

CAN'T LOSE HAIR

Twenty Years from Today a Bald-headed Man will Be an Unusual Sight

One of the most prominent druggists of America made a statement a few weeks ago which has caused a great deal of discussion among scientists in the medical press. He said: "If the new hair grower, Mildredine Hair Remedy, increases its sales as it has during the past year, it will be used by nearly every man, woman and child in America within eight years." "When Mildredine Hair Remedy is used almost universally, dandruff will disappear and with its departure baldness, itching scalp, splitting hair and all scalp diseases will follow and twenty years from now a bald head will be a rarity." FIGHTING MEN ARE ON THE FIRING LINE

THE DRY CAMPAIGN IN WAYNE COUNTY SHOWS A VIGOR AND STRENGTH THAT WINS.

MR. HOSHAL SPEAKS PLAINLY

A Manager of the New Kind Who Does Things and Meets Boozers Forces Face to Face.

When the campaign on the statewide prohibition constitutional amendment begins to get warm a few weeks hence, one of the most prominent figures in the fight is going to be a stocky, aggressive individual from the southwestern corner of the state, who has come to Detroit to organize the dry forces along the lines of practical politics, says the Detroit Saturday Night. This is Walter J. Hoshal, former mayor of Burr Oak, St. Joseph county, a chunky, two-fisted chap who is about as unlike what we are accustomed to take as the prohibitionist type as anyone can be.

WALTER J. HOSHAL.

The title which Mr. Hoshal bears is "campaign manager of the United Dry Campaign Committee." The committee is not itself "in being," as military strategists would say, but in formation. But its chairman is right on the job.

"This organization is not going to be run by long-haired men, short-haired women or bald-headed deacons," states Chairman Hoshal. "The average layman's idea of a prohibitionist is a long-haired, frock-coated individual. My method is to get big men, strong business men back of the dry movement. Then the people know that the thing is not being run by cranks."

"Some people like to get up in a church, with four bald-headed deacons sitting down in front, and talk about the evils of the liquor traffic and how it is raising hell. That isn't my style. I don't do on the sobriety about father going home drunk and kicking little Nellie in the head."

"It is all right to pray for the cause. The church has got to be the backbone of the dry movement. But that prayer is no good unless it gets into the ballot box. We are going to have the kind of organization that will see that every dry voter goes to the polls, and we are satisfied to have the honest wet voter cast his ballot, too. But we are going to see that there are no huns and floaters when they have out the right to vote."

Those remarks indicate pretty clearly that a new kind of campaign manager is going to direct things for the dry cause in Wayne county, where the wet forces figure on getting their heaviest vote. Outside of this county, also, Chairman Hoshal will have more than a little to say about the practical politics aspects of the fight.

Frankness is one of the most delightful qualities about Walter Hoshal. He can tell the bare, plain truth, and make people like it. For instance, he freely admits that he has never read the Bible through and that he does not know the creed of the Methodist church, to which he belongs.

"When I joined the Methodist church I told the minister that I did not know what the creed of that church was, but that I had a creed of my own. That is just old-fashioned Christianity. It gives a man a heart big enough to overlook some of his brother's shortcomings. And my creed tells me to keep my tongue still about those shortcomings. I am satisfied with the words of the Savior: 'Let him who is without also cast the first stone.'"

"There are four reasons why I am a 'dry,' he says. "Three are boys and one is a girl. I want them to grow up in a community without the influence of the saloon in it."

As to the result of the election on the statewide amendment, Chairman Hoshal is not as prolific of claims as the usual campaign manager. "I see that Sheridan Ford is quoted as saying that Wayne county will give 35,000 majority against the amendment," he states. "For the time being, I am willing to take his figures. If he is right and the wets can't do better than that in Wayne county, then old Michigan will go dry in six months I shall have some figures of my own."

FEEL PINGH OF MOBILIZATION

STATE TROOPS ASK REASON FOR BEING CALLED OUT

Feel That Keeping Units in Field Increases Burden on Patriotism of Men Who Responded.

Camp Ferris, Grayling—Since the National Guard was ordered mobilized, its leaders have had plenty of time for sober reflection, and one question forever looms up ominous and unanswerable, "What is the purpose of this mobilization?"

What will be the result? Some fear it will make a joke of the guard and bring this reserve into disrepute.

Another factor has entered to increase this doubt. That is the recent order from the war department, asking that no more troops be sent south until fully equipped. Will the troops be held at the mobilization camps for some time and then sent home after an overwhelming public sentiment in favor of preparedness has been satiated?

Guardmen Losing Money.

In the National Guard are doctors, lawyers, professors, mechanics, tradesmen and the best representative elements of the highest trades and professions. Some of these men are serving as ordinary privates, washing dishes, policing grounds and doing many odd duties that anyone without their professional skill and training could do equally well and possibly better. In the meanwhile their business is being neglected. For how long, they do not know. They are suffering a positive monetary loss. There are hundreds of firms who have promised the men that they can have their positions back when they return. Will all the firms be able to keep this promise? Some of them will. But how about that position which must be filled by a specialist who cannot be secured unless by contract, binding the employer for an indefinite period?

Many of the business concerns have been deprived of men who are trained to such a point that the success of the business depends on them. Many firms through patriotism have offered to pay men, at a distinct loss to themselves, for time served in the army patrolling the Mexican border. Does the situation in Mexico warrant this sacrifice on the part of these firms?

There would be no complaint from the guardsmen were the situation so threatening that it was necessary for the welfare of the United States to appeal to the guard. But the argument that conditions are such that Announcement.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County: I am a candidate for Representative at the primary August 29. I believe the fact that I have served one term in the House, session of 1903-4, is of value to the people of this county.

I am interested in good government in city, county, state and nation. Your support will be appreciated, and if nominated and elected, will give the best service that is in me. Cordially and sincerely yours,
ROBERT W. PADDOCK.
Pol. Adv. 3114

Announcement.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County: At the solicitation of many Republicans, I have decided to allow my name to be brought forward as a candidate for Prosecuting Attorney at the August primaries. I have received many assurances of support. I believe I can safely refer you to my past record as prosecutor of Charlevoix county, and if re-elected, will give the office the same close attention as before. Having entered the field, I solicit the support of all Republicans throughout the county.
DWIGHT F. FITCH.
Pol. Adv. 3114

it is necessary to drag husbands from homes, heads of firms from their business, expert mechanics from their machines to work at duties that could be performed by others of less intelligence and training, is not cogent. There is little question in the minds of these people that the United States should have a regular army large enough to police a border not greater than that between Mexico and the United States. In fact, such an army would release enough men in the National Guard, it is estimated, who would be financially benefited sufficiently to pay for the additional force from their own pockets.

Officers Must Remain.

Amelioration of the general hardship caused by the mobilization might be effected by some announcement as to how long the guard will be in service, as it would aid the men to arrange their business affairs accordingly. Lawyers are holding clients off, waiting for some announcement. Doctors who have spent their entire life since graduation from medical college to build up a practice now find that they are losing good will, invaluable in the business world. Employers are holding positions open temporarily, hoping the men will be dismissed soon.

Of course the government has authorized the discharge of all enlisted men having dependents. But what about the officers? They have no recourse but to serve. Patriotic funds are being raised by charity workers for the families of the guardsmen. This is put up to the soldier who is placed in a dilemma where he must either ask his discharge and be branded as a quitter or submit to having his family accept alms because of his absence.

Thus it is that the burden of patriotism is not evenly distributed. It is the family of the workingman which is suffering most—not the workingman.

There are firms that have no employees in the National Guard. They neither suffer the monetary loss of salary nor the incalculable loss of trained help. Think what advantages this gives over the competing firm which has employees in the National Guard.

See Blow to Guard.

Recently various concerns employing large numbers of men, to stimulate enthusiasm in the National Guard, offered their employees pay during time at encampments, besides their regular vacations. If the National Guard is called upon to do something which should be done by someone who is a soldier by vocation, does it seem reasonable that there will be any more effort on the part of employers to arouse enthusiasm in the guard movement? That is the question the officers and men are discussing here.

Recruiting has become difficult. If there were actual war no such difficulty would be found, those who have charge of recruiting offices insist. But there is nothing appealing in the prospect of doing patrol duty in white, hot sand, where water is scarce and sickness is plentiful.

Soldier duty to some is irksome. There is no question about that. There are men in the ranks in the National Guard who have had better education, hold better positions in civil life, make more money and have larger bank accounts than their commanding officers. Yet they are forced to discipline themselves as they never thought of asking those who worked for them.

War with a regular army man is a life work. It is and must be a side issue with the National Guardsmen. His being called to the colors means tremendous sacrifices. Business is interfered with. Home ties are broken.

Hope for Action Soon.

Of course there is another side to the shield. Those who joined the National Guard in time of peace were free, white and 21 and presumably possessed of good judgment. They appreciated the sanctity of contracts, they have in the past and will in the future keep their oath despite considerable financial loss. Is there any reason why they should not now keep—that is, any vital reason—their oath with the government which they swore to protect?

Generally speaking, it is not the professional man of education who is whining for release. He realizes that the Mexican border is a train of guano powder 1,600 miles long, and that Mexicans are throwing sparks around recklessly. But he does wish if the spark is bound to fall that it fall soon.

Officers Share Losses.

It is axiomatic that a good officer will not ask his soldiers to do what he dares not do himself. The military authorities of the state are sharing actual hardships and discomforts, and will share actual dangers at the front with enlisted men. And they are also sharing financial loss.

(BY HAROLD W. USHER.)

Camp Ferris, Grayling, Aug. 7.—Last Friday was pay day at Camp Ferris, and proved to be one of the most thrilling and at the same time satisfying events that have so far occurred in camp. Everyone was busted—there wasn't the price of jitney in the entire company outside of the officers, and they would have to dig some to produce anything of more value than a copper.

Over $77,000 of Uncle Sam's green backs passed into the hands of the troopers, and the one regrettable feature of the event was that many elected to celebrate the occasion in the wrong way. As soon as they received their money, they started for Grayling or other nearby villages, and a grand and glorious drunk was the result.

About 5:00 p. m. Friday afternoon they began to straggle into camp, but some of them have not returned yet. About half of Co. G left camp, and it would take a page to describe the many fights that followed their visit to the numerous places they went to. One man, Private Neilson of Co. G, returned, loaded with Grayling whisky and the idea that he was a duck. Unknown to any of his company, he took off his clothes and started up the lake. About an hour later a party of bathers found his clothes on the beach and immediately started to search for him. He was found about an hour later swimming down the lake, some three miles from the place where he started. He showed no effect from his long swim and after a hard struggle, during which he was knocked unconscious, he was subdued, tied up, taken to camp, and is now as well as ever.

Private Bunno of Co. M, befuddled with whisky and inspired with the idea that he could fight, started in to clean up the inhabitants of Grayling. Finding that he had undertaken a bigger job with his fists than he had anticipated, he adjourned to a neighboring hardware store and purchased a knife and then returned to the scene of battle, with a result that two men in Co. M were badly stabbed, one losing absolutely the use of his right arm. Bunno is now in Leavenworth prison staring him in the face.

About 100 men went to Frederick, a nearby town, and proceeded to paint it red. They forced open the saloons and helped themselves to everything in sight. With beer and whisky bottles in their hands, they paraded the streets, breaking windows right and left. A disorderly house was wrecked and a cash box containing $300 and valuable papers carried off, besides leaving behind considerable smashed furniture and other evidence of the visit. These men were from Co. G, and are all now under arrest. The jail at Grayling was full of arrested men, and for a half day the mayor ordered all saloons closed and urged the inhabitants to keep off the streets. The big spree is nearly over now, and except for broken heads, black eyes and missing men, everything is quiet again.

Co. I, as usual, kept up its good record, not a man being missing from camp. Co. I has made this record and maintained it since reaching camp. They are recognized as one of the few civilized companies in camp.

One of the newest and most welcome promotions ever made in the company was that of Joseph Cummings. The boys all think a lot of "Joe" and would make him brigadier general if they could. Sergeant E. McKinnon received his discharge and left for home. He will be a distinct loss to the boys.

$235.38 COLLECTED HEART TAG DAY

FOR MICHIGAN CHILD WELFARE LEAGUE

Many Charlevoix County Children Have Received Aid and Help From League.

The Tag Day in Charlevoix on Saturday, August 5, proved a success. $235.38 was collected by the young people and this amount will aid the Michigan Child Welfare League in their work of caring for poor crippled and handicapped children in Charlevoix county and in the state.

The Michigan Child Welfare League and Miss Mildred B. Kennedy, district superintendent of the league, wish to express their thanks and appreciation to all persons who contributed to make the tag day such a splendid success. To the local committee who helped prepare for the day, to the young people who cheerfully volunteered to offer the little heart shaped tags for sale, and also to the citizens and visitors in Charlevoix who gave so generously to this beautiful charity. The finance committee who received the funds at the close of the day were Albert F. Bridge, Archibald Butters, Mayor Andrew Ross and Robert Bridge. The chairman reports $235.38 as the amount collected, and this will be directed to the work of the league.

We wish also to thank the press for the publicity through its columns, the manager of the Majestic theatre for showing the slides of crippled children before and after operations.

Many children in Charlevoix county have received assistance and benefit from the Michigan Child Welfare League. The work is supported entirely by membership fees, voluntary gifts and proceeds from tag day sales.

Special Notice.

Next Sunday morning Rev. George A. Buttrick, of Quincy, Ill., will preach at the Congregational church. Mr. Buttrick is a son-in-law of Dr. Gardner, of Chicago, whose preaching has so delighted our congregation. He is an English born American and has been in this country only one year, but his exceptional gifts as a speaker and preacher have attracted marked attention.

MACKINAC ISLAND EXCURSION SUFFERS

Nearly Two Hundred Would-be Excursionists Turned Away by Manitou at Harbor.

Almost two hundred people, most of them summer tourists who were going to Mackinac Island for the day, were turned away by the officers of the S. S. Manitou at Harbor Springs, Thursday, when that fine steamer was loaded to the capacity set by the United States government marine department.

The people had gone from Petoskey and the Petoskey resorts by train to the Harbor to catch the boat, but only about twenty-five were allowed to go on board.

The captain explained that the new ruling of the marine department allows the Manitou to carry but a certain number of passengers, about 550, and that they are taking no chances with inspectors who may be sent any of the Petoskey resorts watching to catch them in violation of the new rule.

As the Manitou nears Charlevoix on her northward trip the captain ascertains the number of through passengers will then be on board when his ship leaves that port. He then issues orders to admit enough excursionists to bring the passenger list up to the full number allowed.

After this has been done at Charlevoix it leaves little room for passengers from Petoskey and this region. The S. S. Manitou is capable of carrying a thousand passengers with safety on these short excursion trips and has done so hundreds of times.—Petoskey Evening News.

A. E. SLEEPER VISITS CHARLEVOIX

SPENT PART OF FRIDAY IN THE CITY

Says Prospects at Primaries Are Excceedingly Promising—Touring
State By Auto.

Touring by motor through this section of Michigan, Hon. Albert E. Sleeper, of Bad Axe, conceded by all factions to be one of the strongest of the numerous candidates for the Republican nomination for governor at the primaries August 29, spent a half day in Charlevoix, Friday, sizing up his prospects here.

Mr. Sleeper, whose characteristics are in marked contrast to his name, is a wide awake, alert campaigner, of pervasive and persuasive personality which easily accounts for the large and loyal following which has rallied to his standard. He is basing his candidacy on the question of fitness, rather than any of party issues or schisms, and stands before the voters on a record of efficient public service. He was state treasurer from 1909 to 1913, during the last Governor Warner and one Chase S. Osborn administration, and for the four years preceding was state senator from the "Thumb" district.

Is Tested Business Man.
Further qualifications urged in behalf of Mr. Sleeper are that he has been a resident of the state since boyhood, and being a man of large business affairs in his own section—he is a banker and wholesale grocer at Bad Axe—is well informed as to its needs. By virtue of his office as state treasurer he was one of the state auditors for a four-year period, and in close touch with this vital factor toward a business-like administration.

Mr. Sleeper is not unknown in Charlevoix county, having visited here on occasions in the past. One point Mr. Sleeper is enthusiastic to a high degree. That is the unification of the Republican party, which he forces at the coming election. He is an outspoken advocate of a state budget system and strongly favors laws and more rigid enforcement.

Prospects Are Assuring.
While making no extravagant claims, Mr. Sleeper is encouraged by reports that have come to him and receptions that have been accorded him wherever he has visited. Reports received by him while on his trip indicate a crystallization of sentiment in the upper peninsula for the big, genial candidate from the "Thumb" of the mitten which comprises the lower peninsula of Michigan. Quite naturally Mr. Sleeper's own section of the state is almost solid for him, as it always has been, while he is expected to poll a large percentage of the heavy Wayne county and southeastern Michigan vote, and his cause is making headway throughout the northern half of the state.

Mr. Sleeper and his party motored in from Traverse City. In the party, beside the candidate, were his son, Stevens Sleeper, driving the car.

PASS ORDINANCE REGULATING PARKING AUTOS

Some Owners Under Impression They Own Entire Street.

Conditions on Bridge street have reached such a pass that the council was compelled to pass an ordinance Monday night, prescribing a method for parking automobiles so that they will not be the menace to traffic and business that they are at present.

Practically every hour in the day and late into the evening machines are parked along both sides of the street, making it almost impossible to cross the street and in some instances owners of machines find it impossible to get them out when needed. Business houses are forced to climb over or dodge around machines to enable themselves to reach their place of business. "No Parking" signs are ignored, and when owners are asked to move, they refuse to do so. The new ordinance covers all these points, and the owner who does not move his machine when asked will be prosecuted.

Another condition that should be dealt with is the use of the cutout by drivers. It is a common custom now for the smart class of drivers to traverse the residence streets late at night with their cutout wide open, waking everybody in that section. It should be stopped at once.

The council also has accepted the petition presented by George H. Van Pelt and others to pave the alley running north and south from Park avenue to Clinton street.

Thomas Bacot was named as inspector on the south Bridge street paving work.

EXPECT POOR SEASON FOR BIRDS

UNFAVORABLE WEATHER KILL-ED OFF PARTRIDGES

Indications Are That There Will Be Plenty of Deer During the Shooting Period.

Bird shooting in Michigan this fall is going to be poor.

According to the reports from the various game wardens to the state office, birds, especially grouse, will be as sparse this season as they were last, when the kill was the lowest ever known in the history of the state.

Wet springs and cold weather last winter hurt the grouse to a great degree. On the other hand, quail, a protected bird for some time to come, wintered well, thanks to the co-operation of farmers in many sections of the state.

"Judging from the reports we have already secured from the wardens," says Special Assistant David R. Jones, "the grouse this fall will be about as scarce as they were last fall. Cold winters in the northern part of the state, followed by cold springs in which wetness predominated, have apparently played havoc with the young birds.

"Up until spring time it looked pretty good in the upper portion of the lower peninsula for grouse. Then a three or four-day sleet storm simply froze the young birds up. Quail, too, in that particular section of the state were hurt, although the farmers did all they could to help them through.

"In the upper peninsula the heavy snows during the winter hurt the grouse inestimably."

The co-operation of the farmers on the quail conservation has done a lot of good, according to Mr. Jones.

Indications point to a fine season for deer. The one-deer law cut down the kill greatly last fall, and in addition the winter was a good one for them. The impression at state headquarters is that the deer will be plenty.

HOSPITAL ASSO- CIATION FORMED

HARRY NICHOLLS NAMED AS PRESIDENT

Arrangements Made for Soliciting
Funds—Plan for Hospital
Sunday.

For some years the citizens of Charlevoix have been talking hospital. Many times the needs for such an institution have been great; in fact there is scarcely a time when there are not a number of cases in our city that should be taken care of in a hospital. Many people would be glad to go to a hospital if we had such in our city.

Several years ago this hospital proposition was submitted to the tax-payers and voters of the city of Charlevoix and while it received a great many votes in favor of it, in fact over a majority of such votes cast, it did not receive the necessary 2-3 vote to carry as a municipal affair. Since that time it has been discussed and on many occasions it would appear that it would be better to have a hospital in our city, conducted by a board of trustees or governors, than to have the city own and operate it and spread such expense on the tax rolls.

In view of establishing a hospital in our city, a number of our business men and citizens got together a short time ago and formed an organization to be known as the Charlevoix Hospital association. The association will be as popular as the people help to make it. It will be non-sectarian and NOT for benefit.

The officers and trustees of the association are as follows: Harry Nicholls, president; H. L. Oldham, vice-president; Lisle Shanahan, recording secretary; W. J. Rachow, treasurer; J. L. Crane, L. S. See and Capt. Wm. Finucan, directors. The above constitute the present board of trustees.

The plan is to have this hospital proposition placed before the people of Charlevoix, through the efforts of those interested, which is hoped to include every man and woman in our city.

It is hoped that the churches and lodges of our city will become active in laying the plan before their people and that soliciting committees will be appointed at an early date and that the necessary funds will be rapidly and cheerfully subscribed.

As soon as the necessary funds are subscribed and pledged, the officers and trustees will be made permanent or new ones elected by the subscribers and supporters—the present ones only being temporary to get the matter started. This being done, the board in charge will then determine upon a site or location valuable in proportion to the financial support given.

Considerable funds have already been subscribed. Quite a number of people have already handed their checks to the treasurer of the association, W. J. Rachow, at the Charlevoix State Savings bank. Solicitors are now in the field. More solicitors wanted. Volunteers are requested to call upon any of the officers above mentioned. Several entertainments have already been given and considerable funds raised for hospital purposes. More entertainments will be given; a great Hospital Sunday will be arranged later in the season and the columns of our paper will continue to inform you of the success of the proposition which seems now assured.

This is the busy time of the year. Everyone interested in a hospital should give the officers and trustees in charge all possible assistance, and thus help expedite matters so the establishment of the hospital will be assured at an early date.

Wright Sells New Story.

John C. Wright, of Harbor Springs, the well known author of Indian stories, has just completed and sold a story, "The Seine," the plot of which is laid at Beaver Island. The United Weekly Press association has purchased the story and is selling it in plate form to hundreds of newspapers throughout the country. Mr. Wright is having a fine sale on his new edition of "Stories of the Crooked Tree."

Hurt Catching on Launch.

On Sunday afternoon of last week bathers at Menomonee Beach, near Roaring Brook, witnessed a painful accident when one of a party of fifteen or twenty youngsters who had waded out to deep water and secured a hold on the J. B. Seward launch, had one of his legs badly cut by the propeller blade. Another lad had one of his feet painfully bruised in the same way.

Mr. Seward was allowing the boat to drift from deep water to the dock and warned the boys away. He was watching the landing operations and did not notice the boys hanging to the stern with only the tips of their fingers above deck.

The one lad's leg received a gash several inches long and the other boy had his foot bruised and slightly cut but not seriously injured.

Sneak Thieves at Gaylord.

Sneak thieves are again at work in Gaylord. Some time between Saturday night and Monday morning of last week thieves entered the dental parlors of Dr. W. F. Housen over the Brodie & Qua hardware store, ransacked the drawers of his desks and made away with about $50 worth of gold plate and platinum.

Discovery of the robbery was not made until the following morning when Mr. Housen unlocked his office as usual. He has no clue to the identity of the thieves nor is he certain as to how they gained entrance. The robbery showed the earmarks of professional dental thieves as they seemed to have a pretty fair idea where the valuables were located.

Last Tuesday evening when Mr. and Mrs. George Ellwanger entered their residence on East Main street about nine o'clock, they discovered matches on the floor and other evidences that strangers had made themselves at home there. A search failed to reveal any missing articles, and no damage was done to the premises. There is no clue to the marauders.

The City Manager

(A series of articles on a new type of municipal government, which is spreading rapidly.)

II—Running the City Hall Like a Business.

Henry M. Waite, of Dayton, the ablest and most conspicuous of city managers at present, is the highest paid public official in Ohio—$12,500 a year. But that is not his chief claim to distinction. He is showing that a city can be run as economically and efficiently as an up-to-date business.

When the first Dayton commissioners took office in 1914, they realized that the success of the new government depended largely upon the personality and equipment of the man who they would select to fill the City Managership. No one in Dayton seemed to fill the bill in every particular.

Men Unavailable.

There were plenty of able men in the town, but most of them had been too closely identified with local affairs or were unavailable for some other reason.

The job was offered first to Colonel Goethals, the builder of the Panama Canal, at $25,000 a year. He declined.

The commission then discovered H. M. Waite, the city engineer of Cincinnati, and right hand man of young Mayor Hunt, whose brilliant reform administration there was just closing. Waite had had a long and important engineering experience in private corporations. He refused an offer of $15,000 a year from a private corporation and took the Dayton managership.

Many Changes for Good.

Space forbids a recital of more than a few of the changes that have been wrought since the new government started operation two and a half years ago. A municipal garbage plant has been set up that is paying its own way. The first building code that Dayton ever had was enacted shortly after Mr. Waite came to town. The efficiency of the water works was increased about thirty per cent. The accounting and budget systems were completely overhauled.

Much that might be told is matter of somewhat technical nature. The real capacity of the system and its head were revealed in a big way when in August, 1915, the budget commission, which is composed entirely of county officials, allowed the city from tax revenues $505,528, which was $164,746 less than the city had received in 1914.

Staff Called Together.

Immediately the entire administrative staff was called together and such economies were planned for the rest of the year as could be affected without seriously impairing the service. The year 1915 closed with a balance on hand of $48,500 with which to meet the demands of the future.

More recently the commission decided that the interests of the city required a bond issue involving more separate items.

Only One Bond Issue.

Only once before had Dayton had a bond issue—the law required a two thirds majority to carry one. But so thoroughly was the commission-manager government in the people's confidence that they carried every item of the bond issue this year by a vote of three to one. The government's success lay in the fact that the commission and the manager had gone to the people and explained to them frankly just what was needed.

Converting Dad

A Story for Young Farmers

"What are you doing, Phillip? Go to work."

It was a warm forenoon in early July. The boy was kneeling between two rows of potato vines while he examined the contents of a tin pan on the ground before him.

"What do you think you are doing?" repeated the boy's father as he came up and stood beside the interested lad.

"Why, Dad, you see these harmless lady-beetles get knocked into the pan with the potato bugs, and I am picking them out before I put kerosene on the rest." The boy carefully placed a rescued beetle in a safe place beside a little apple tree.

"Well, of all the schemes to get out of work," exploded the busy man, "this is the latest. Go ahead and kill the lady-bugs with the rest. What are they doing on the vines if they are harmless? Don't waste any more time picking out lady-bugs, but get busy."

"But, Dad," said the boy seriously, "no time is wasted that is spent in saving lady-beetles. See here," and the boy pulled down a branch of the young apple tree near them. The twigs seemed alive with green plant lice. Stalking up and down among the lice were several lady-beetles. Father and son watched them curiously for a moment.

"What are they doing?" asked the man with just a trace of interest in his voice. At this the boy saw his opportunity and proceeded to deliver himself of all he knew about the subject which had thus presented itself.

"In the first place," said the boy, "the lice are sucking the life sap out of the tree. They might never kill it; but, if left unmolested, they would greatly weaken it. The beetles are devouring the lice, and the eggs and young of other insects. The beetles do no harm themselves." The boy hesitated a moment.

"Go on," said his father. "I guess that new study of agriculture you had in school last winter didn't do you any harm. I did think, though, that the same time spent on arithmetic and spelling would be more practical than reading text-books on farming, government bulletins, and such trash."

The boy continued his account. "You know, Dad, there are three classes of harmful insects. Those like the potato bugs get their living by eating the tender parts of the plants. They can best be destroyed by poisoning the leaves of the plants with Paris Green, or some such poison. Another class of insects bore into the wood, and their work can be detected by the sap or gum which oozes out of the burrows. The grubs can be cut out with a knife as we did on the peach trees this spring, or they may be killed by using a piece of stiff wire. The third class of harmful insects suck their food from the bark and leaves of plants. They are sucking insects and cannot be killed with poison. They must be smothered with some soapy or oily mixture which will get into their breathing pores. Kerosene emulsion and lime-sulphur mixtures are most commonly used. These green plant lice belong to this class of pests; but there are many sucking insects, the San Jose scale being about the worst. The lady-beetles live almost entirely on the several kinds of plant lice and scales."

"Do you mean, too, that the worms on the currant and gooseberry bushes are insects?" questioned the man, now thoroughly interested.

"The worms or caterpillars are one stage in the life history of the insects. There are generally four stages in the complete life of an insect, though, in some cases, the story is shortened by the omission of one or two stages. The adults lay eggs which may be called the first stage. In due time the eggs hatch into worms or caterpillars called larvae. The larvae feed for a time and then go into a resting stage. They are now called pupae. In this condition they are often encased in a cocoon and undergo the change from larva to adult. The adult chews its way out of the cocoon and the life story is complete. It is in the larval or worm stage commonly that the insect does the most damage. The soft potato bug is in the larval stage. Adult insects eat very little. Knowing the life history of the destructive insects is very useful in fighting them."

"Why, yes, of course," said the man; "but there goes the dinner bell. Run and feed the horses now and after dinner you may drive down to the store and get some Paris Green, and one of those new potato sprays. Do you think the lady-bugs will eat any of the poison on the potato leaves and be killed?"

"No, Dad," yelled the boy as he ran on his way to the stable.

"AMERICA FIRST AND AMERICA EFFICIENT."

These words are the key-note of Mr. Hughes's speech of acceptance.
They emphasize his clear thinking, his far-seeing vision and his clarity of expression. They take one beyond the confusion of today and into the life of tomorrow—of that tomorrow which shall follow the conclusion of peace in Europe, when the world will take up its readjustment and when the fashion of that readjustment will determine for the United States whether we shall maintain, in any measure, the commercial and industrial supremacy which we now enjoy.

That supremacy is nothing for which we can take special credit to ourselves. It was not created by Woodrow Wilson nor is it the outgrowth of any of the policies of his party. It exists not because of, but in spite of, the Wilson administration, the Democratic congress and the Underwood tariff law. It may disappear as suddenly as it came—and it will so disappear if the Wilson administration, the Democratic congress and the Underwood tariff are to be retained.

If America is to remain first,
America must be made efficient—efficient in legislation as well as efficient in administration, efficient in politics as well as efficient in business. That will be the task of the national government in the next four or eight years—and it is this vista which attracts the attention of Hughes. He is not looking to the fourth of March, 1917. His gaze is toward the fourth of March, 1925—when his successor will take office; and when, by the effect of the policies which he has in mind and which he will put in force in cordial cooperation with a congress of his party, an America, first and efficient, will stand forth pre-eminent as never before.

That is Hughes's vision of his task —an alluring vision of selfishness and patriotism. He has set it before the country; and it summons every American, and especially every efficient American, to join with Hughes in carrying the task forward to triumphant completion. This is a summons which every efficient
American will hear and heed.
Hughes will lead us all to "America first and America efficient."

CHANGED METHOD OF CAM- PAIGNING

The season observer of political battles can remember methods of conducting political campaigns that would seem very archaic in this fall election.

The most typical feature of the campaigns of 30 years ago was the torch light procession. A small town might get up such a parade bigger than its entire population. If it had a well drilled company, it could attract detachments from miles around on the understanding that it was to send its company for a return engagement.

Some terribly long marching jaunts were taken. If a loyal party member and contributor was not rewarded by having the boys march past his house in their flaring glory, he might get sore on the ticket. The marchers cheerfully tramped over the whole town for the reward of doughnuts and coffee and the general romp of the thing.

Not the slightest appeal to public intelligence was made by this form of campaigning. If the parade wound up with a rally, as often occurred, the speaking was mostly funny stories. These could be applied equally well to the other side by changing the name. Yet these parades made votes. The side that produced the longest line and the most skillful marchers gave an impression as winners.

If a fellow had drilled and paraded with the Republicans, he voted Republican, not merely that year but for several years, and similarly with the Democrats. The political managers understood perfectly how to use these associations for political value.

That these parades have so largely been given up is due to common sense. It was foolish expenditure.
People became unwilling to burn up money for something that added nothing to education, gave no information about issues, and turned out no more intelligent voters. Today the newspapers are the real political educators, and campaign funds spent in print go furthest.

YES, IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE

Most men out of politics have the moral courage to say their soul is their own; most of 'em in politics would confess that their souls belonged to the devil if it would get them a vote.

Take Governor Ferris, for instance. When the good governor was campaigning for his first term, he was questioned one day about his stand on the liquor question. The community was a wet one, the audience looked wet, and Mr. Ferris decided it would be more comfortable and profitable for him to become wet, on this particular occasion at least, so he said: "If I wasn't wet, I'd be dry; and if I wasn't dry, I'd be wet," or at least words to that effect, meaning that as a private citizen he had always supported local option but that, as a candidate for governor he was opposed to statewide prohibition.

And during his four years in the governor's chair, Mr. Ferris has kept his mouth shut as tight as a clam shell on the prohibition issue.

But now that the good Governor has decided not to become a candidate for a third term and will soon be a free man once more, with about as much influence in state affairs as a senate page, he has broken his long silence, stiffened up his backbone, and laments over the evils of the liquor business.

Governor Ferris, we commend you to a character study of Arthur Capper, the dry and fearless governor of dry and prosperous Kansas.—
Gaylord Advance.

SENATOR TOWNSEND

Senator Charles E. Townsend, of Michigan, has earned the renomination which the Republican party undoubtedly will give him next August, and the re-election which the voters will then give him next November.

Senator Townsend has been painstaking and effective in his public work. In views and votes, his attitude toward pressing public problems has been sound, sane and sincere. His reflection of the desires and demands of Michigan's electorate majority has been accurate and aggressive. He deserves a renewal of his senatorial commission.

Eight years in the lower house of congress and six in the upper house have seasoned him with an invaluable experience which could not be duplicated in any other direction in this particular election. Service is the best measure of a man's ability and availability. Senator Townsend's service speaks for itself, and eloquently. The nation will need experienced statesmen more than ever in meeting the problems which inexperienced statesmanship has been accumulating and multiplying as a legacy for the next congress and the next administration. If Michigan's senatorial contribution to this next congress and this next administration shall return the gentleman from Jackson to his seat in the upper house, Michigan will have honored herself and helped the country.—

Every family in Charlevoix county should be a subscriber to their own county paper. Yes, I will go a little farther and say papers. Without a paper, what can people in the eastern townships know what is going on in the western part along the lake shore; also, what can people along the lake shore know about what is going on in the eastern part of the county unless they do subscribe for their county papers. I trust that there will be enough people sufficiently interested in what is going on in our county for those in the eastern part to subscribe for the western papers and for the west to subscribe for the east. For our own welfare and the general good of the county, there should be as intimate relations existing between the extreme portions of the county as there is between our nearest neighbors and ourselves. I venture to say that there are people in the eastern portion of our county who are ignorant of the fact that there are tourists here from almost all the southern and western states. These people come by way of the West Michigan Pike and the Dixie Highway, which is one and the same road from Chicago to Mackinac; in fact, it is the road over which nearly 95 per cent of our tourists have to take or do take to go into our county. It skirts along Grand Traverse bay and Lake Michigan and has as many beautiful spots for building as the high hills surrounding Pine lake.

Great complaint used to be made about the roads in our county, but they are gradually growing better.
Each one of our road commissioners have been doing good work, but it is a great pity that so much of this work goes to waste because of the fact that no dirt or macadam road can be built strong enough to withstand the wear and tear of the heavy machines coming into our county.
The big machines are what we want, because they bring the people with money and there is only one kind of a road that can be built that will withstand the wear and tear of these big cars and that is the concrete road, and a concrete road nine feet wide, with shoulders of crushed rock on either side can be built at an average of about $2,000 more per mile than the macadam.

CHAPTER XVII.

O'Neil Verifies Suspicion.

THE locomotive had been switched out by this time, and O'Neil hurried to board it. On his way to Omar he had time thoroughly to weigh the results of this unexpected complication. His present desire was merely to verify his suspicion that Appleton had told his secret to Natalie. Beyond that he did not care to think, for there was but one course open.

His anger reached the blazing point after his arrival. As he stepped down from the engine car Gray silently handed him a code message from London which had arrived a few moments before. When its contents had been deciphered O'Neil cursed, and he was furious as he stumbled through the dark toward the green hangar on the hill.

Swinging around the corner of the house, he came into a bright radiance which streamed forth from Eliza's window, and he could not help seeing the interior of the room. She was there, writing busily, and he saw that she was clad in the elaborate kimono which he had given her. Yet it was not her personal appearance which arrested his angry eyes and caused his step to halt; it was, instead, her surroundings.

He had grown to accept her prim simplicity as a matter of course and never associated her in his thoughts with anything feminine, but the room as it lay before him now was a revelation of dulness and artful decoration. Tasteful water colors hung on the walls, a warm rug was on the floor, and everywhere were rosy touches of color. The plain white bed had been transformed into a couch of oriental luxury. A lace spread of weathlike texture covered it; then pillows were hidden beneath billowing masses of ruffles and ribbons. He saw a typical woman's crazy corner piled high with cushions. There was a jar of burning incense sticks near it—everything, in fact, was utterly at variance with his notions of the owner. Even the girl herself seemed transformed, for her hair was brought forward around her face in some loose, mysterious fashion, which gave her a bewitchingly girlish appearance.

O'Neil's eyes photographed all this in a single surprised glance as he passed. The next moment he was mounting the steps to the porch.

Dan flung open the door, but his words of greeting froze. His smile of welcome vanished at sight of his chief's forbidding visage.

Murray was in no mood to waste words. He began roughly: "Did you tell Miss Gerard that Pontney Hills is backing me?" Dan stammered. "I—perhaps—I—What has gone wrong, chief?"

"Did you tell her the inside—the story of his agreement with the steamboat people?"

Dan paled beneath his tan, but his eyes met Murray's without flinching. "I think I did—tell her something. I don't quite remember. But anything I may have said was in confidence."

"I thought so. I merely wished to make certain. Well, the whole thing is in the papers."

Appleton laid his hand upon the table to steady himself.

"Then it didn't come from her. She wouldn't."

"Gordon has spread the story broadcast. It couldn't have come from any other source. It couldn't have reached him in any other way, for none of my boys has breathed a word." His voice rose despite his effort at self control. "This agreement was illegal," he said savagely. "It will probably forfeit the charter of the North Pass or land him in court. I suppose you realize that! I discovered his secret and assured him it was safe with me. Now you peddle it to Gordon, and the whole thing is public. Here's the first result." He shook the London cablegram in Dan's face, and his own was distorted with rage. There was a stifled cry in Eliza's room which neither noticed. Appleton wiped his face with uncertain hand. He moistened his lips to say:

"I—I'm terribly sorry. But I'm sure Natalie wouldn't spy. I don't remember what I told her or how I came to know about the affair. Doc Gray told me, I think, in the first excitement, but she—wouldn't knowingly."

"Gordon fired you for talking too much. I thought you had learned your lesson, but it seems you hadn't. Don't blame Miss Gerard for pumping you—her loyalty belongs to Gordon now. But I require loyalty too. Since you lack it you can go."

O'Neil turned as Eliza's door opened. She stood before him, pale, frightened, trembling.

"I couldn't help hearing," she said. "You discharge us?"

He nodded. "I'm sorry. I've trusted my boys so implicitly that the thought of betrayal by them never occurred to me. I can't have men close to me who make such mistakes as this."

"Perhaps there was an excuse or the shadow of one, at least. When a man is in love, you know?"

Murray wheeled upon Dan and demanded sharply:

"What's this?" Then in a noticeably altered tone he asked, "Do you love Natalie?"

"Yes."

"Does she love you?"

"No, sir."

O'Neil turned back to the girl, saying: "I told Dan when I fired him that he would be called upon to dare much, to suffer much and that my interests must be his. He has disregarded them and he must go. That's all. There's a little difference between treachery and carelessness."

He left them standing there unhelpfully dumb and stiff with shame. Once outside the house he plunged down the hill as if feeling from the scene of some crime.

He rushed through the night blindly, for he had loved his assistant engineer, and the memory of that chalk faced, startled girl hurt him abominably.

"To think that I spent the best part of two years studying this spot!" he told Gray as they started for the office.

"I fired Appleton," he broke out at last. Gray looked up quickly. "He acknowledged that he did it. I had no choice. It came hard, though."

"He did some great work, chief!"

"I know. That affair at the Crossing—I intend to pay him well if he'll accept. It's not that I like those kids, Stanley. Eliza took it harder than he. It wasn't easy for me either," he sighed wearily. "I'd give $10,000 if it hadn't happened. She looked as if I'd struck her."

"What did she say?"

"Nothing. He has been careless, disloyal."

"You told them so?"

O'Neil nodded.

"And they said nothing?"

"Nothing. What could they say?"

Gray answered gruffly: "They might have said a good deal. They might have told you how they paid off your men and saved a walkout when I had no money."

O'Neil stared incredulously. "What are you talking about?" he demanded.

When he had the facts he rose with an exclamation of dismay.

"Heaven! Why didn't you tell me? Why didn't they speak out? I—I—"

"To think I spent the best part of two years studying this spot!"

why, that's loyalty of the first kind. All the money they had saved, too, when they thought I had failed. Jove, that was fine! Oh, I'm sorry! I wonder what they think of me? I can't let Dan go after that. I—I— seized his cap and hurried out of the building.

"It's hardly right—when things were going so well, too," said Dan. He was sitting crumpled up in a chair, Eliza's arm encircling his shoulders. "I didn't mean to give up any secrets, but—I'm not myself when I'm with Natalie."

"We must take our medicine," his sister told him gravely. "We deserve it, for this story may spoil all he's done. I didn't think of her, though."

Dan groaned and bowed his head in his hands. "I don't know which hurts worse," he said. "His anger or her action. She—couldn't do such a thing. She—she just couldn't!"

"She probably didn't realize. She hasn't much sense, you know. But, after all, he's suffered, to think that we should injure him! I could cry."

The door opened before a rough hand, and O'Neil strode into the room, huge, shaggy in his coonskin coat. They rose, startled, but he came to them swiftly, a look of mingled shame and gladness in his face.

"I've come back to apologize!" he cried. "I couldn't wait. I've learned what you children did while I was gone, and I've come to beg forgiveness. It's all right—it's all right."

"I don't know what you mean!" Dan gasped.

"You told me how you paid those men. That was real friendship; it was splendid! It touched me, and I—I want to apologize. You see, I hurried right back."

They saw that his eyes were moist, and at the sight Eliza gave a quivering cry, then turned swiftly to hide her face. She felt O'Neil's far hand patting her, and he was saying gently: "You are a dear child. It was tremendously good of you both, and I ought to be shot for letting us I did. I wonder if you can accept a wretched apology as bravely as you accepted a wrong accusation."

"It wasn't wrong; it was right," she sobbed. "Dan told her, and she told Gordon."

"There, there! I was to blame, after all, for letting any one know, and if Dan made a mistake he has more than atoned for by his unselfishness—his sacrifices. It seems I forgot how much I really owe him."

"That affair with the shift bosses wasn't anything," said Dan hastily, "and it was Eliza's idea. I refused at first, but when she started to pay them herself I weakened." He stuttered awkwardly, for his sister was mortifying him desperately to be silent. But he ran on: "Oh, he ought to know the whole truth and how miserably I acted. I deserve to be discharged."

"Please don't make this any harder for me than it is," Murray smiled. "I'm terribly embarrassed, for I'm not used to apologies. I can't afford to be unjust. I have a few friends that I want to cherish them. I'm sorry you saw me in such a temper. Anger is a treacherous thing, and it always betrays me. Let's forget that I was here before and pretend that I just came to thank you for what you did."

He drew Dan into the shelter of his other arm and pressed the two young people to him. "I didn't realize how deeply you kids care for each other and for me."

The same ship which had brought the ominous news to O'Neil also brought Curtis Gordon north. He had remained in Seattle only long enough to see the hills story in print, and then had hastened back to the front. But his satisfaction over the mischief he had done received a rude jolt when at his first moment of leisure he looked over the late magazines which he had bought before taking leave. In one which had appeared on the newspapers that very day he found to his amazement an article by Miss Eliza Appleton, in which his own picture appeared. He glanced upon it eagerly, and then as he read his eyes narrowed and his jaw stiffened. The spread out to the public gaze, was his own record in full, including his initial venture into the Kyak coal fields, his abandonment of that project in favor of Hope Consolidated and an account of his connection with the latter enterprise. Eliza had not hesitated to call the mine worthless, and she showed how he, knowing its worthlessness from the first, had used it as a lure to investors. Then followed the story of his efforts to gain a foothold in the railroad struggle, his defeat at the Salmon River canyon, his exit at the delta crossing and his final deathblow at Kyak. His career stood out boldly in all its fraudulent colors; failure was written across every one of his undertakings. The naked facts showed him visionary, in competent, unscrupulous.

Thus far he had succeeded in keeping a large part of his stockholders in ignorance of the true condition of Hope Consolidated, but he quailed at the inevitable result of this article, which had been there for and wide into every city and village in the land. He dared not think of its effect upon his present enterprise, now so conspicuously launched. He had made a ringing appeal to the public, and its support would hinge upon its confidence in him as a man of affairs. Once that trust was destroyed the Cortez Home railway would crumble as swiftly as had all his other schemes.

The work of it was that he knew himself shut out from the world for five days as effectively as if he were locked in a dungeon. There was no wireless equipment on the ship, he could not start the machinery of his press bureau, and with every hour this damning story was bound to gain momentum. He cursed the luck which had set him on this quest for vengeance and found his hands.

Meanwhile Dan was struggling with his problem in his own way. The possibility that Natalie had voluntarily betrayed him was a maddening torture, and the remembrance of Eliza's words added to his suffering. He tried to gain some hint of the chief's feeling, but Murray's frank and friendly attitude baffled him.

When at last he received a brief note from Natalie asking him to call he rushed to Hope island, yet eager to hear what she might say. She met him on the dock as he left the S. R. and N. motorboat and led him directly to the house.

Natalie went straight to the point. "I'm in dreadful trouble," she said. "And I want you to tell me that I had no idea of betraying confidence."

Dan uttered some vague platitudes, but his eyes lighted with relief.

"When I saw in the papers what a stir that North Pass and Yukon story had made I was afraid I had done something dreadful. Tell me, is it so? Did I make trouble?"

"You certainly did. O'Neil was furious, and nobody knows yet what the result will be. It—it nearly cost me my head."

"Does he blame me?"

"No! He says you're on Gordon's side now. He blames me or did until he generously took it on himself."

"What does it all mean? I'm nearly distracted," Natalie's eyes were pleading. "Did you think I spied on you?"

Dan glowed with embarrassment and something more. "I didn't know what to think," he said. "I was wretchedly miserable, for I was afraid. And yet I knew you couldn't do such a thing. I told O'Neil I wasn't responsible for what I did or said when with you."

"Mr. Gordon sent me to Omar purposely. He sent me twice. It was I who brought him word that the road was saved. I told all I'd learned because I believed he no longer hated Mr. O'Neil. I was happy to tell all I knew, for he deceived me as he deceives every one. I learned the truth too late."

"Why do you stay here?" Dan demanded hotly.

"Why? I—don't know. Perhaps because I'm afraid to leave. I'm alone. You see, mother believes in him. She's completely under his sway, and I can't tell her the sort of man he is. She's happy, and her happiness is worth more to me than my own. But—I shall go away. I can't stand it here much longer."

"Where will you go?"

"Back to my old home perhaps. Somewhere—anywhere away from Alaska."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Appleton Confronts Gordon.

"I SUPPOSE you know I can't get along without you," said Dan.

"Please don't! You have been very good and sweet to me, but— She shook her dark head. "You couldn't marry me—even if I cared for you in that way."

"Why? I intend to marry you whether you want to or not."

"Oh, Dan, it wouldn't do. You know—about mother. I've nearly died of shame, and it would be sure to come up. Somebody would speak of it some time."

Dan's blue eyes went cold and smoky as he said:

"It would take a pretty brave person to mention the subject in any presence. I don't care a whoop for anything Gordon or your family may say or do."

There was a stir in the hall outside, and the speaker turned to behold Curtis Gordon himself in the doorway. The latter in passing had been drawn by the sound of voices and had looked into the library. Recognizing Natalie's caller, he frowned.

"What is this?" he inquired coldly. "A proposal? Do I interrupt?"

"You do," said Dan; then, after a pause, "I'll finish it when you leave."

Gordon entered and spoke to his stepdaughter.

"What is this man doing in my house?"

"He is here at my invitation," she replied.

"Tell him to leave. I won't have him here."

"Why don't you tell me?" cried Dan. "I don't need an interpreter."

"Young man, don't rush. There is a limit to my patience. If you have the indecency to come here after what you have done and after what your sister has said about me, I shall certainly—"

Dan broke roughly: "I didn't come to see you, Gordon. You may be a greenie sight to some people, but you're no golden sunset in my eyes. Eliza flattered you."

Natalie gave a little terrified cry, for the men were glaring at each other savagely. Neither seemed to hear her. "Did you read that article?"

"Read it? I wrote it!"

Gordon's face flamed suddenly with rage. He pointed to the door with trembling fingers and shouted: "Get out! I'll not have you here. I discharged you once. Get out!" His utterance was rapid and thick.

Dan smiled mirthlessly, dangerously, in a soft voice he said:

"I haven't finished proposing. I expect to be accepted. You'll pardon me, I know."

"Will you go, you?"

Dan turned to the girl, who after that first outcry had stood as if spellbound, her face pale, her eyes shining.

"Natalie, dear," he said earnestly. "You can't live in the same house with this beast. He's a cheat and a scoundrel. He's done his best to spoil your life, and he'll succeed if you stay, so come with me now. Eliza loves you and wants you, and I'll never cease loving you with all my heart. Marry me and we'll go."

Gordon uttered an inarticulate sound and came forward with his hands working hungrily.

"Don't interrupt!" warned Dan, over his shoulder, and his white teeth gleamed in sudden contrast with his tan. "No man could love you as I do, dear!" Gordon's clutch fell upon him and tightened. Dan stiffened, and his words ceased. Then the touch upon his flesh became unbearable. Whirling, he wrenched himself free. He was like a wild animal now. Body and spirit had leaped into rebellion at contact with Gordon. His long resentment burst his bonds. His lean muscles quivered. His frame trembled as if it restrained some tremendous pressure from within.

"Don't do that!" he cried hoarsely and brushed the sleeve where his enemy's fingers had rested as if it had been scalded.

Gordon started and stretched out his hands. (Continued on page six.)

hand a second time, but the younger man raised his fist and struck. Once, twice, again and again he flung his bony knuckles into that purple, distorted face, which he loathed as a thing unclean. He battered down the big man's guard; right and left he rained blows, stepping forward as his victim fell back. Gordon reeled, he pawed wildly, he swung his arms, but they encountered nothing. Yet he was a heavy man, and, although half stunned by the sudden onslaught, he managed to retain his feet until he brought up against the heavy mahogany reading table in the center of the room. His retreat ended there; another blow and his knees buckled, his arms sagged. Then Dan summoned all his strength and swung. Gordon groaned, lurched forward and sprawled upon the worn red velvet carpet, face down, with his limbs twisted under him.

The vanquisher stood over him for an instant, then turned upon Natalie a face that was now keen and cruel and predatory.

"Come! We'll be married today," he said. And, crossing swiftly, he took her two hands in his. His voice was harsh and imperative. "Let's down and out, so don't be frightened. Now, hurry! I've had enough of this nonsense."

"I—I'm not frightened," she said dazedly. "But—I—" Her eyes roved past him as if in quest of something.

"Here! This'll do for a wrap!" Dan whipped his fur overcoat from a chair and flung it about her. "My hat, too!" He crushed it over her dark hair and, alluding his arm about her shoulders, urged her toward the hall.

"Mother! She'll never—"

"We'll call on her together. I'll do the talking for both of us." He jerked the front door open with a force that threatened to wrench it from its hinges and thrust his companion out into the bracing cold. Then, as Gordon's Japa-

"Come! We'll be married today," he said.

nese butler came running from the rear of the house, he turned.

"Tidy, you!" he cried sharply. "The boss has gone on a little visit. Don't stumble over him. And tell Mrs. Gordon that Mr. and Mrs. Appleton will call on her in a few days—Mr. and Mrs. Dan Appleton of Omar!"

It was but a few steps to the pier. Dan felt that he was treading on air, for the fierce, unreasoning joy of possession was surging through his veins. His old indecision and doubt were gone, and the man he met recoiled before his hostile glance, staring after him in bewilderment.

But as he lifted Natalie down into the launch he felt her shaking violently, and of a sudden his selfish exultation gave way to a tender solicitude.

"There, there!" he said gently. "Don't cry, honey. It's all right. It's all right."

She rubbed her face to his, and his head swam, for he saw that she was radiant.

"I'm not crying; I'm laughing. I—I'm mad—insane with happiness."

He crushed her to him. He buried his face in her neck, mumbling her name over and over. And neither of them knew that he was rapturously kissing the combskin collar of his own great coat. The launchman, motor crank in hand, paused, staring. He was still open-mouthed when Dan, catching sight of him, shouted:

"What's the matter, idiot? Is your back broken?"

"Yes, no, sir!" The fellow spun the flywheel vigorously. The little craft began to vibrate and quiver and then swung out from shore.

A moment later and the engine man yelled. He came stumbling forward and seized the steering wheel as the boat grazed a buoy.

"That's right, you steer," Dan laughed, relaxing his hold. To Natalie he said, "There's a sky pilot in Omar," and pressed her to him.

"It's a long way to Omar," she answered, then hid her face against his breast and said meekly, "There's one in Cortez, too, and he's much nearer."

O'Neill behaved handsomely when he was told what had happened. He hurried into town on the following morning, and his congratulations were so sincere, his manner so hearty that Dan forgot his embarrassment and took a shameless delight in advertising his happiness. Nor did Murray stop with mere words; he summoned all his lieutenants and Omar rang that night with a celebration such as it had never before known. The company cheer had been busy all day, the conspiracy had been unmasked, and the wedding supper was of a nature to impart with office duties for many days thereafter. Tom Slater made a congratulatory speech—in reality, a mournful adjuration to avoid the pitfalls of matrimonial inharmonies—and openly confessed that his digestion was now impaired beyond relief. Others followed him; there were music, laughter and a riotous popping of corks, and over it all O'Neill presided with grace and mellowness. Then, after the two young people had been made thoroughly to feel his good will, he went back to the front and Omar saw him but seldom in the weeks that followed.

To romantic Blaine this self-sought seclusion had but one meaning—the man was broken hearted. She did not consider that there might be other reasons for his constant presence at the glaciers.

Of course she the unwelcome publication of the North Pass and Yukon story O'Neill had been in close touch with him, and by dint of strong argument had convinced the Englishman of his innocence in the affair. A vigorous investigation might have proved disastrous; but, fortunately, Curtis Gordon lacked leisure in which to follow the matter up. The truth was that after his public exposure at Blaine's hands he was far too busy mending his own fences to spare time for attempts upon his rival. Consequently, the story was allowed to die out, and O'Neill was finally relieved to learn that its effect had been killed. Precisely how this had effected this he did not know nor did he care to inquire. He had been forced into an inglorious bargain, and, since he had taken the first chance to free himself from it, the question of abstract right or wrong was not a subject for squeamish consideration.

It was at about this time that the sanguinary affray at Beaver canyon began to bear fruit. One day a keen faced, quiet stranger presented a card at Murray's office with the name "Henry T. Blaine."

Bennett was the address of the Hotel Hermann building in New York, but otherwise the card told nothing. Something in Mr. Blaine's bearing, however, led Murray to treat him with more than ordinary consideration.

"I should like to go over your work," the stranger announced, and O'Neill himself acted as guide. Together they inspected the huge concrete abutments, then were lowered into the heart of the giant caissons which protruded from the frozen stream. The Salmon lay locked in its winter slumber now. The glaciers stood as silent and inactive as the snow mantled mountains that hemmed them in. Down into the very bowels of the river the men descended, while O'Neill described the nature of the bottom, the depth and character of its foundations and the measure of his progress. He explained the character of that bar which lay above the bridge site and pointed out the heavy layers of railroad iron with which his cement work was reinforced.

"I spent nearly two seasons studying this spot before I began the bridge," he continued. "I had men here night and day observing the currents and the action of the ice. Then I laid my plans accordingly. They are armored and reinforced to withstand any shock."

"The river is subject to quick rises, I believe," suggested Blaine.

"Twenty feet in a few hours."

"The volume of ice must be almost irresistible."

"Almost," Murray smiled. "Not quite. Our ice breakers were especially designed by Parker to withstand any weight. There's nothing like them anywhere. In fact, there will be nothing like this bridge when it's completed."

Blaine offered no comment, but his questions searched to the depths of the builder's knowledge. When they were back in camp he said:

"Of course you know why I'm here?"

"Your card told me that, but I don't need the Heilmann's now."

"We are prepared to reopen negotiations."

"Why?"

"My people are human; they have feelings. You read Gordon's lies about us and about that fight at Beaver canyon? Well, we're used to abuse, and opposition of a kind we respect. But that man uttered public opinion to such a point that there's no further use of healing it. We're ready to proceed with our plans now, and the public can go to the devil till it understands us better. We have several men in jail at Cortez charged with murder. It will cost us a fortune to free the poor fellows. First the Heilmann's were thieves and grafters and looters of the public domain; now they have become assassins! If this route to the interior proves feasible, well and good; if not we'll resume work at Cortez next spring. Kyak, of course, is out of the question."

"This route depends upon the bridge."

"Exactly."

"It's a two years' job."

"You offered to complete it this winter, when you talked with Mr. Herman Heilmann."

"And—I can."

"Then we'll consider a reasonable price. But we must know definitely where we stand by next spring. We have a great deal of capital tied up in the interior; we can't wait."

"This delay will cost you something."

Mr. Blaine shrugged. "You made that point plain when you were in New York. We're accustomed to pay for our mistakes."

"Will you cover this in the shape of an option?"

"That's what I'm here for. If you finish your bridge and it stands the spring breakup we'll be satisfied. I shall expect to stay here and watch the work."

O'Neill agreed heartily. "You're very welcome, Mr. Blaine. I like your brand of conversation. I build railroads; I don't run them. Now let's get down to figures."

The closing of the option required several weeks, of course, but the outcome was that even before midwinter arrived O'Neill found himself in the position he had longed to occupy. In effect the sale was made and on terms which netted him and his backers 100 per cent profit. There was but one proviso—namely, that the bridge should be built by spring. The Heilmann's were impatient, their investment up to date had been heavy, and they frankly declared that failure to bridge the chasm in time would convince them that the task was hopeless. In a way this was unreasonable, but O'Neill was well aware that they could not permit delay or a third failure. Unless his route was proved feasible without loss of time they would abandon it for one they knew to be certain, even though more expensive. He did not argue that the task was of unprecedented difficulty, for he had made his promise and was ready to stand or fall by it. It is doubtful, however, if any other contractor would have undertaken the work on such time; in fact, had it been a public bridge it would have required four years in the building. Yet O'Neill cheerfully staked his fortune on completing it in eight months.

With his option signed and the task squarely confronting him, he realized with fresh force its greatness and the weight of responsibility that rested upon his shoulders. He began the most dramatic struggle of his career, a fight against untold conditions, a desperate race against the seasons, with ruin as the penalty of defeat.

(To be continued next week.)

$100 REWARD, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Calumet. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

YOU CAN'T GO WRONG ON A CHEVROLET

Whatever your first consideration in buying a motor car—speed, power, beauty, durability, economy of operation—you make no mistake in the purchase of a Chevrolet. Chevrolet models represent such a happy combination of all the attributes of full car value that you are sure to be satisfied, whichever feature chances to be your particular hobby.

RIDE ALL DAY IN A CHEVROLET

and when you step out at the end of your journey you will be as fresh and buoyant as when you started on your trip. A long drive in a Chevrolet is a positive delight.

No man wants a racing machine for everyday use. Chevrolet models, when occasion demands, show "Clean Heels" of the thoroughbred, producing a speed-rate unusual for cars of the Chevrolet class.

STABLED IN THE OCEAN.

This Horse Is Not Only Henspecked, but Lives In the Sea.

There is a horse that eats no oats, hay or corn. He is stabled in the deep waters of the Mediterranean and the Atlantic ocean and pastures in submarine fields of seaweed. He wears heavy armor and a tail curved like a monkey's, and yet he's a fish. His animal head has given him his popular name—sea horse.

With all these varied characteristics the sea horse is not fast, vicious nor handsome. Like his cousin, the pipe fish, he is a poor swimmer; also, he is henspecked. Mrs. Sea Horse makes him take care of the children.

To help him in his work as nurse-maid he has a pouch beneath his tail, formed by folds of skin and completely closed except for a small hole in front. In this pouch the eggs are deposited, and they remain there until they are hatched.

There are about twenty species of sea horses in the waters of the globe, a common one being the short snouted variety. Around Australia is a sea horse which is decorated with numerous spines, terminated by barbed appendages. These are so near the color of the seaweeds among which they live that they appear actually a part of the vegetation.—Philadelphia North American.

Does it make you sore to have one always preface his remarks to you with that word "Listen". Well, it does me too, but I started this before I thought how you might feel about it, so I will keep on going. So now, Listen: If your shoe dealer would advertise the fact that he had sold one hundred pair of $1.25 shoes in a remarkable short time, do you think you would fall over yourself to buy a pair just because he had sold so many? No. You bet you wouldn't. You want a better pair; no $1.25 shoes for you, not if you know yourself.

Now, when some firm or other advertises they have sold a large number of furnaces, does that make you think THAT furnace better than any other, or rather, they were like the dealer who sold the large number of cheap shoes. Sold on price and not quality

Now we Sell OUR SHARE of Warm Air Furnaces

I admit we get a little more for our plants, but they are WORTH it. It is just like buying anything else, you have to pay for Quality

TONOLINE IS BEAUTY AID, ANNOUNCES SPECIALIST

Mildred Louisa Talk of Interest to Women

As health is a first aid to beauty this story, told by Mildred Louisa, beauty specialist, of Boston, Mass., is of unusual interest.

"I can recommend no better health giver than tonoline," said Mildred Louisa.

"I was for many months a victim of stomach trouble and nervousness. I had suffered terribly from pains that followed eating. Headaches also would add to my worries. Poor digestion finally brought on nervousness.

"Relief came, however, when I took the advice of several women who said, 'Take tonoline'."

"Not long after I started the tonoline treatment, my patrons began to remind me of the improvement in my condition. And because health is the quickest way to beauty, the improvement was particularly noticeable in my face.

Tonoline is a purely vegetable preparation which goes to the seat of common maladies—stomach and kidney trouble, catarrhal affections of the mucous membranes, liver ailments and impurities of the blood—and quickly restores proper action. Tonoline is being explained daily to many people at all druggists.

Notice—As tonoline is a wonderful flesh builder it should not be taken by any one not wishing to increase his weight ten pounds or more. Although many reports are received from those who have been benefited by tonoline in severe cases of stomach trouble and nervous dyspepsia, chronic constipation, etc.

The Union Mission picnic of the Reformed churches in Banks township was held in Peeblea grove, Tuesday the 8th. A large crowd attended and in the afternoon were treated to a band concert by the Central Lake band, who came over and played free of charge. However we want the picnicers to know that the story that the Ellsworth band refused to play unless $15.00 was paid them is entirely false, as they received no invitation to play at all.

Thanks, Mr. Knoeker, for this little bit of news which was spread about. Little things like this don't hurt us any.

The Race With the Ram.

In Morocco the strange custom of the Mohammedan new year, beginning March 1, is generally called "Al-el-Hanveln," the rain feast. The people of Morocco pay more elaborate attention to the item of sacrifice than any other Moslems. In every town a supreme offering of a ram or he goat takes place at the door of the principal mosque. Immediately after it is struck by the official mulla in presence of the multitude it is hung on the shoulders of a stalwart Moor, who, exerting his utmost strength, runs like a deer through the narrow streets, pursued by a rabble. The poor animal is pelted with stones by boys and is jeered at with execrations from every house, as it is reputed to be carrying the sins of the people. The man rushes along with his burden till he reaches the door of the mulla's palace. If the animal is still breathing the augury is excellent, for good luck is to be expected all through the year. But if the ram is dead all sorts of evil prognostications are muttered.

Not Such a Fool.

"Here's a strange case," said Mrs. Spotter to her husband. "A man they called the town fool died, and they weighed his brain. It was heavier than the average."

"Is that all it says about him?"

"Yes—except that he was for many years entirely dependent on well to do relatives."

"Huh, he was no fool! If you have well to do relatives, why use your brains?"—Indice

HIGH COST OF FEAR

The high cost of fear is the greatest tragedy in the life of the nation. Fear takes more from life and gives less than any human force. It is the courier of waste, woe and want and a messenger of sorrow and misery.

Our Army and our Navy are shining examples of the high cost of fear. We have today about 400 battleships and other fighting vessels afloat, representing an investment of approximately $400,000,000 and spend annually $250,000,000 in naval and military appropriations. Thirty-six cents of every dollar paid into the Federal treasury goes for preparation of war.

We have a fleet of battleships and armored cruisers with a displacement of over a million tons and this tremendous weight is resting upon the backs of the tolling masses, for the man who sweats is the man who pays.

The boom of one of the big guns mounted upon our forts snuffs out values that exceed the annual production of two farms. It costs more to fire the ordnance of a dreadnaught than it does to build ten churches and the annual expense of maintaining our Army and Navy equals the cost of constructing twenty-five Mendenham highways across the continent.

The nations of the earth in time of peace spend approximately $2,500,000,000 annually preparing for a battle and when the dogs of war are loosed, we should add to this the destruction of the sword and of the torch; the value of new made graves, empty sleeves and the sobs of widows and orphans. Arresting this terrible waste, stanching the flow of a river of human blood, and staying the hand of famine and pestilence is the greatest possible service that can be rendered mankind in this age. It is the mission of the church to disarm the nations and it is the most tremendous task of the Twentieth Century.

Civilization today is crying aloud for a man who can organize the force of Christianity into a working unit, and swing them around the Prince of Peace. If the church is to occupy a big place in a big age, it must do big things in a big way.—Peter Radford.

HOW TO SECURE A GOOD LAWN AND KEEP IT.

IT—All lawns may be improved if there is a reasonably good turf, as it is possible to better it materially by reseeding, fertilizing and watering. In the spring many bare spots will be in evidence, and if the spots are small they can be reseeded. If they are large it is usually advisable to spade them up and reseed. Doing the work early in the spring. If the grass is thin over the entire lawn the work should be started early in the spring, while the soil is loose and in condition to permit the seed to be covered with little difficulty. The whole lawn should be raked with an iron rake and seeded and rolled as soon as the ground is sufficiently dry.

The care of the lawn after it is established is important. Liberal fertilizing should be given, and one of the best fertilizers is nitrate of soda. Five pounds of nitrate of soda is sufficient for 1,000 square feet of lawn, applying this with a watering pot, then watering thoroughly with the hose. Bonemeal is one of the best commercial fertilizers to use on lawns, eight pounds being sufficient for 1,000 square feet. Any fertilizer used should be applied early in the spring, when the grass begins to grow. Bonemeal can be applied every month during the growing season excepting July and August. Prepared sheep and stable manure is also beneficial. Shaded lime can be applied with beneficial results late in the fall.

If a good lawn is wanted buy the best lawn grass seed to be had, well cleaned and free from weeds. Much of the lawn grass seed is from 25 to 50 per cent weed seed. If weeds are wanted do not bother to plant seeds; the weeds will grow without a special treatment.

STATE MENAGED BY RYE SMUT

HAS APPEARED IN SEVERAL SECTIONS

Growers Urged to Examine Their Fields and Determine Condition of Crop.

Rye is ordinarily rather free from fungous diseases other than the too frequent ergot and the ever present rust. This year, however, there has appeared at several different points in the state the smut caused by the fungus Urocystis Occulta. This has been reported in the United States only a few times and has not been observed in Michigan except one specimen which was found in 1915. Thus far it has not been found doing much damage, the highest percentage of injury noted being five to six per cent. The danger lies in the increase to much higher figures, as it has been observed in Central Europe as a serious pest and in South Australia a good many years ago it destroyed two-thirds of the crop.

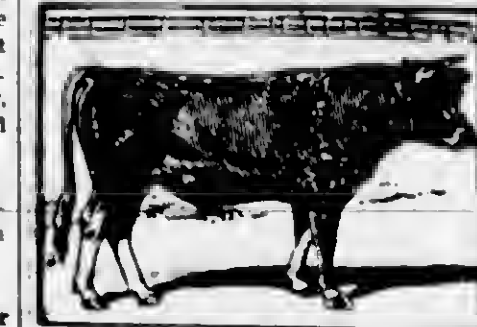

In view of the dangerous nature of the disease under favorable conditions all rye growers should examine their fields with extreme care this season before harvesting the crop so as to determine whether it is present. If it is found in a field the seed should not be used for planting purposes without formaldehyde treatment as described below. The land should not be used for rye again for at least one year.

Unlike wheat and oat smuts, the chief seat of injury for rye smut is not the head but the stem below the head. This is more or less swollen, as are the leaf sheaths, and, with these, shows longitudinal black lines. On cutting across the infected portion of such a stem it is found to contain an abundant dark brown or black powder, the spores or seeds of the fungus. As the grain in the healthy plants approaches ripeness, the diseased portions split open, permitting the escape of the spores. The portion of the stem that is most often affected is a short distance below the head. It is sometimes partially concealed by the uppermost leaf sheath but often extends out beyond it. The sheath is often affected as well. On badly diseased plants the whole stem from bottom to top may be affected. Ordinarily the heads are blasted without any sign of the smut in them. Occasionally, however, they too are smutted, in which case they are dwarfed and distorted, the chaff being swollen and twisted and filled with the dark masses of spores. All of the stalks arising from one seed will be diseased as in oat smut. They are dwarfed somewhat, varying from half the height to only a few inches shorter than the healthy plants.

The fact that the spores are set free at the time of ripening of the grain (as in oat smut) and not at flowering time (as in loose smut of wheat) tends to confirm the findings of the men who have given a little study to this disease and who believe that infection takes place when the grain germinates, by means of smut spores that adhere to the outside of the grain. This would make it advisable to use the formaldehyde treatment for seed coming from fields, showing the disease. This is as follows:

Add one pound of 40 per cent formaldehyde to 40 or 45 gallons of water and sprinkle over the grain, which should be spread out in a thin layer on a clean floor or canvas. About one gallon of the mixture will suffice for a bushel of grain. Shovel over the latter until it is evenly wet and then shovel it into a pile and cover with canvas or sacking for 6 to 12 hours. Then spread out thin and shovel occasionally until dry enough to drill.

If suspicious specimens are found that are thought to be affected with this disease they should be sent to the Department of Botany, Michigan Agricultural College, together with a note as to the abundance of the trouble, source of the seed, etc.

Township Hall Burns.

The Milton township hall, located at Kewadin, was totally destroyed by fire early Sunday morning, July 30. The building was valued at $4,000 and was insured for $1,000. The Gleaners lost about $600 in lodge property. It is thought that the careless dropping of a lighted match started the fire which was not discovered for several hours after a meeting of the Gleaners adjourned. It had gained such a headway that nothing could be done to save the building.

MILLIONS FOR GOOD HIGHWAYS

$85,000,000 OF FEDERAL FUNDS AVAILABLE

Michigan's Share to Be $2,559,750—Agitation for Better Roads Due to Auto.

"By the passage of the Federal Aid Road Bill this month, the government of the United States has put itself in the way to reap great benefits. According to the new law, the sum of $85,000,000 of federal funds is made available for the construction of country roads. Of this amount, $75,000,000 is to be expended for the construction of rural post roads under co-operative arrangements with the highway departments of the various states and $10,000,000 is to be used in developing roads and trails within or partly within the national forests.

This law is proof of the national awakening to the fact that our country is lamentably deficient in well constructed highways. The main lines of travel in the early days were the shores of great waters and the rivers and canals. The railroad building was followed close upon the period of the river steamboat and for these and other reasons the highways of the land were neglected.

One of the most powerful of the agencies now at work for better roads is the automobile. The country owes a debt to the motor driven car for making insistent demand for adequate highways over which to travel.

The expenditure of these many millions of dollars will benefit the people very greatly by helping to convey farm products to market and thus to some extent it will make living cheaper and more comfortable. Moreover, the country with an abundance of good roads within its boundaries is more easily defended when threatened from without. The best result of all, however, will be the quickening of intercourse and intelligence and the unifying of this great nation, which as yet is too much given to sprawling physically and otherwise."

The representative of the government, Mr. Fauntleroy, on the trip of the West Michigan Pike and the Dixie Highway association, to Mackinac City on the 13th inst, said that our share (the state of Michigan's share) would be $2,559,750. This, of itself, is sufficient to spur Charlevoix county to be up and doing. We need the roads in order to induce the tourists to come here. We have the climate, the beautiful spots and the fruit with a flavor, good flavor—the best flavor in fact.

Badly Injured in Runaway.
Ray Wilkinson met with a serious accident at Frederick, Monday, July 24. He was in the act of climbing on a load of hay when he slipped and fell backward, landing on the wagon tongue between the horses. The team became frightened and ran away, throwing Mr. Wilkinson to the ground. It is thought that an axle of the wagon caught him as he struck the ground. Although the ligaments in his back were torn loose, he walked nearly half a mile to his lumber camp. He was taken to East Jordan for medical aid, and is now at his home in Eastport. He will be laid up for some time, although he is recovering rapidly at present.—Torah.

One of the most prominent druggists of America made a statement a few weeks ago which has caused a great deal of discussion among scientists in the medical press. He said: "If the new hair grower, Mildredina Hair Remedy, increases its sales as it has during the past year, it will be used by nearly every man, woman and child in America within eight years. "When Mildredina Hair Remedy is used almost universally, dandruff will disappear and with its departure baldness, itching scalp, splitting hair and all scalp diseases will follow and twenty years from now a bald head will be a rarity." PEACE IS HELL

TEXAS ECONOMIST DEFINES PEACE AS SHERMAN DEFINED WAR.

Constitution is Citizens' Contract With Government for Justice, Liberty and Freedom.

By J. A. Cullinan.

The Administration of Justice is the heart and soul of government. It is there that the citizen comes in contact with his government and hears an interpretation of the Bill of Rights and the Constitution of the United States, which is the citizen's contract with government for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. To those who may feel that this subject is not one of pressing importance, I want to say that no matter what Sherman said about war, in my opinion we are reaching a point where PEACE IS HELL, and I believe that most of the active and responsible members of society in this country will join me in this conclusion. When government reaches a point where to enjoy liberty one must become a tramp, and to be free one must seek the habitat of a savage, then the citizen is justified in demanding a cancellation of his contract with government.

It is my conception of our government that its mission is to increase liberty and expand freedom, and it is not only the privilege, but the duty, of the citizens to challenge any act of government that interferes with these ends. In the Constitution, the citizen has a written agreement with government for liberty, freedom and justice; our government contracts to preserve, safeguard and administer them.

In order that every citizen may feel perfectly within his rights in entering into this discussion, I want to quote a clause from the Declaration of Independence, giving the citizen the right to alter or abolish government: "We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men; deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

And continuing the discussion of the rights of a citizen, the Declaration of Independence states: "It is their right, it is their duty to throw off such government and to provide new guards for their future security." I would neither abolish nor alter our form of government, but I would use it, for one, claim my Constitutional rights as a citizen to liberty and freedom, and to the extent of my ability I propose to defend it. It is not a better form of government we need, but better citizenship, and a more efficient Administration of Justice.

Indifference the Cause.

We have been going through a period of contraction of our rights until we have almost changed our form of government, and the fault lies in the incompetent application of law and the faulty Administration of Justice. It is not the will of the people, but they have suffered it to obtain through indifference to the public welfare. It is the unauthorized acts of servants of government who yield to undue partisan, business, financial, religious, fraternal, educational or class influence, rather than safeguard liberty and justice as demanded by the Declaration of Independence and guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

To those who may feel that there is safety in indifference, and who place blind confidence in our system of government, I want to quote a paragraph from a statement recently made by Hon. Thos. R. Marshall, Vice President of the United States, as follows: "Equitable enforcement of the law can never be made to rest upon the office holders of the land. It must rest upon the individual. It cannot be said that it is the system of government which is wrong. It is the unjust use of the system. It has not been the use, but the misuse of the powers of government which has produced this discontent in the minds of men."

The citizens are the joint stockholders and owners in government, and it is for them to define the rights of persons and of property. This government is ours—yours and mine—and we have no right to farm it out. If we are not willing to discharge our responsibilities as sovereigns, then we should change our system of government and employ a king to run the country.

the Program.

The annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican club will be held in the Armory at East Jordan on the evening of Tuesday, August 15, and will be largely attended by republicans from this city, as well as Petoskey, Boyne City, Harbor Springs and neighboring towns. Speakers of state and national reputation will be on hand and everything done to make the event a big one. The Metropole orchestra has been engaged to furnish the evening's music, and the feast will be a most satisfying one.

Various committees are now busy at work getting ready for the big event. Congressman Frank D. Scott has already notified the committee that he will be present. Other speakers of note are being booked. A host will carry the big crowd from this city as well as numerous automobiles.

Following that will be a ball game and the athletic sports. A state speaker is being planned for which will be announced later. Dance in the evening. Hope to see a good attendance at the next regular meeting, August 15.

Political Announcement.

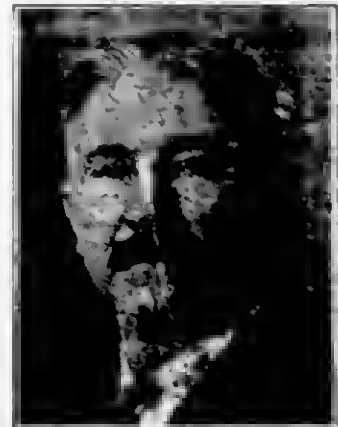

To the Voters of Charlevoix County: I desire to announce to my friends and all voters of Charlevoix county that I will be a candidate to succeed myself for the office of Register of Deeds on the Republican ticket, at the primaries August 29, 1916.

I feel that my experience in the register's office has fitted me to the charge the duties of the office in a manner satisfactory to all and to the best interests of the county. Expecting to abide cheerfully by the action of the voters, I desire to say that if nominated and elected, I shall continue to give the office my very best efforts, and to conduct it in a business-like and economical manner. Very truly yours,

DAHLIAS FROM SEED.

How They Can Be Started and Transplanted.

For several years I have had grand success raising dahlias from seed, starting them in a box or pan in the house as soon as April 1 and transplanting them in the garden as soon as the ground is warm enough—usually about the last of May, at which time they will have four or six leaves. From a packet of mixed seeds I have had as many as eight different colors, ranging from snowy white to darkest crimson, besides some beautifully striped and variegated. They were the admiration of all beholders, says a writer in Farm and Home.

Should there be a few single ones (as there probably will be) they are by no means to be despised, as they are nice for cut flowers. Set them out along the side of the house or each side of the door, where you can see them as you go about your daily vocations, and you will be more than satisfied with the results. Water them with the water from the weekly wash, as they are greatly benefited by frequent waterings in dry weather. Even if they are not a joy "forever," they will surely give much pleasure through the long hot days of summer.

How to Massage the Scalp Daily Without Making an Event of It.

Press the finger tips (fingers close together) to the scalp and with a gentle pressure rub the scalp in a circular manner, causing it to move. The object is to loosen it as much as possible and bring a warm glow to it by causing the blood to flow to the surface.

When this is accomplished move the fingers to another spot, and in this way go over the whole scalp. If the hair is very dry a very small amount of vaseline may be rubbed into the fingers and applied to the scalp only, as any grease will cause the hair to lie flat if applied to the hair itself.

Any tonic which is chosen should be applied with massage, as most of the benefit is obtained by the massage.

How to Make the Bed So That Slumber Really Refreshes.

To make up a bed so that it will be smooth tuck the clothes in, one piece at a time, at the sides, and complete the work all but tucking the clothes in at the foot. Now draw the clothes down, one piece at a time, as tight as possible and tuck them in at the foot. The bed will be far nicer looking than would be otherwise possible. If the bed is of iron or brass, which does not permit of tucking in the coverlet, tuck in the other clothes as directed, placing the coverlet over all.

How to Do the Family Mending in the Easiest Way.

LEARN TO DECIDE QUICKLY.

It May Often Prove to Be a Great Help in Business Matters.

In the American Magazine is the story of a successful business man who attributes his success largely to his faculty for making quick decisions. "Once decided, you ought not to waste time. If a man decides rightly then he has a running start on rivals who hesitate. If he decides wrongly then he has discovered his blunder, backed up and is ready to start on even terms with the hesitating rival, for a man of decision can decide he is wrong as quickly as he can decide he is right. Also, in a great number of cases, the man who decides quickly may fail to decide the best way and still carry it through to success and even convince others he was right all the time. This has happened to me many times in cases where there were a number of ways in which a thing might be done.

"While we blunder inevitably I believe our batting average is higher than that of timid ones, and the rewards much greater. I do not think I have erred in 15 per cent of my decisions in business, and not in 5 per cent seriously.

"The great advantage of quick decision lies in the larger rewards that come to those who are bold for it is bold to decide vital matters quickly. The timid and the hesitating get small profits."

The Secret of Success.

"There has been altogether too much talk about the secret of success," says Dr. Russell H. Conwell in the American Magazine. "Success has no secret. Her voice is forever ringing through the market place and crying in the wilderness, and the burden of her cry is one word—will. Any normal young man who hears and heeds that cry is equipped fully to climb to the very heights of life."

Mrs. Eaton, of Pellston, was the guest of Miss Nita Mayne, Monday. Mrs. Eaton was formerly Miss Opal Emery of this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Greenaway, of Fowlerville, drove to Charlevoix, to spend a short time visiting their daughters, Mrs. A. Fitch and Mrs. Will Bellinger.

Monday's electrical storm, which struck Traverse City, Manistee and Alba, put the Western Union wires out of commission, but did small damage to growing crops.

Mrs. B. L. Adams, of Newman, Illinois, and Miss Margaret Bott, of Urbana, Illinois, are visiting friends and relatives in the city enroute from Chicago to Sault Ste. Marie.

Deputy Great Commander Ella E. Tillotson entertained Lorena Hise No. 33, of Manistee, Tuesday. A fish dinner was served, the ladies returning to Manistee in the evening. Carpenters are at work repairing the spire to the M. E. church, struck by lightning some ten days ago. The spire will be lowered, which will greatly improve the looks of the building.

Hereafter the United States coast guards will be designated only by number. Instead of using the name of the harbor on which a station is located. The new designation of stations make Charlevoix 272, and Beaver Island 271.

Among the visitors to arrive in Charlevoix, August 4th, for a month's stay among friends and relatives were Mrs. R. L. Allen and granddaughter, Alice Meisner. They will be followed August 12 by Mrs. Grace Meisner, daughter of Mrs. Allen. All are from Detroit.

SUPPORT OF CITIZENS ASKED

ALL URGED TO BOOST FOR A HOSPITAL

Clergy Spoke in Its Behalf From Pulpits Sunday—Musical Recital Friday Evening.

Last week our readers were informed about the proposed establishment of a hospital in the city of Charlevoix, and the plans are now well under way.

Last Sunday morning all the members of the clergy gave a short talk upon the subject at the various churches and each church appointed a soliciting committee to work among its members and the townspeople and raise the necessary funds as rapidly as possible.

This week, Friday evening, at 8:00 o'clock p. m., there will be a musical recital at the Inn hotel casino for the benefit of the hospital. Dr.
Darling Yakove Spivakowski, a famous Russian violinist, will be the leading entertainer; Dr. Vernon VanPelt, a young physician and surgeon of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, who has just returned from the war trenches abroad, will give a short talk upon this subject and it promises to be a very interesting and pleasant evening. Tickets for the hospital entertainment are $1.50 each and are now on sale at the news stand at the Inn hotel; at either bank in Charlevoix, and by a committee of young people assisting in the program.

A hospital can be started with as little or much money as can be gathered for such purpose, but it has been estimated that to construct one and equip it in keeping with the city of Charlevoix, and the demands of modern fire proof construction and modern appliances, that no less than $15,000 should be secured and available.

The advantages of a hospital are so numerous that it would be impossible to enumerate them all but it is desired to touch upon a few. All operations incur a certain amount of risk, even in the minor ones—and this risk is magnified or minimized by not only the skill of the surgeon, but largely by the means at hand, in being able to provide an operating room with every modern equipment, and having same always ready for an emergency.

Many a life has been lost by delays, and such delays can only be avoided by a properly equipped hospital.

A modern hospital contains a properly equipped laboratory, where all investigations on doubtful cases can be made, thereby insuring the patient the benefit of modern treatment.

Charlevoix must have a hospital.
It is hoped that we may have it soon. The opening day depends upon the support of our people. We have long helped support hospitals in other towns and cities and now is the time to get together and work together for one in our own home town. The temporary officers and trustees of the hospital association make this appeal and in behalf of all the people ask your liberal support.

OPEN TAP BLAME FOR LOSS OF GASOLINE

Walter Taylor Loses More Than Would Run His Ford for a Year.

Midnight joy rides and useless consumption of gasoline was put into the shade the first of the week by Walter Taylor, grocer, on Antrim street.

The oil wagon made their weekly visit to his store and put 70 gallons of the oil trust's best dope in the tank and went on to their next stopping place. Soon after their visit Taylor wanted a small amount of gas to make a long run with his Ford. But the tank was empty and his first thought was that he had been touched. Upon investigation as to conditions in the basement, it was found that the oil man had delivered the gas, but failed to see that the tap was closed, with the consequence that the 70 gallons of gasoline had trickled slowly away in the sand.

Moral—Don't dim your lights when you are buying gasoline.

DIVES FROM TOP OF BLINKER LIGHT

Professional Diver Gives Public Exhibition Three Times a Week.

The free exhibition of diving given three times a week by an unknown professional in the employ of the Hotel Michigan, is receiving considerable favorable comment among those who have witnessed the performance.

The "unknown" climbs to the top of the blinker light, on the north pier, and dives from there into the channel, a distance of some 60 feet.
From his actions and the manner in which he conducts himself, the man is strictly "on the job" and makes one of the cleanest exhibitions ever witnessed here. His performance has been so far given three times a week, and at a later date it has been announced that he will make the dive enveloped in fire, which will be a thriller. Announcement will be publicly made when this event is to take place.

ANNUAL CADDY EXCURSION SUNDAY, AUGUST 20

Steamer City of Boyne to Carry Bunch to St. Helena Island.

The caddy boys will be given their annual outing as guests of the Chicago Golf Club, Sunday, when the City of Boyne will carry the bunch to St. Helena island. The excursion is the event of the season for the boys, and has become an annual occurrence.

On this day the caddies will enjoy the hospitality of the golf association. The excursion will leave the Wilbur dock at 7:00 a. m., returning about 8:00 in the evening. If the weather is inclement for a trip of this distance, on lake Michigan, other arrangements will be made.

One of the features of the excusion will be the "big feed" given the boys. This will be in charge of competent men, as will also the welfare of the boys. After the arrival at the destination, games, swimming and other sports will be indulged in.

RETURNED TUESDAY FROM TRIP WEST

AN ENJOYABLE OUTING FROM START TO FINISH

Will E. Hampton Tells of Trip to Portland and Meeting Former Charlevoix Residents.

Will E. Hampton returned Tuesday morning from Portland, Oregon, where he has been for the past three weeks, attending the supreme lodge, Knights of Pythias, and the Association of Grand Keepers of Records & Seal. Mr. Hampton was elected president of the latter organization for the ensuing two years. Asked regarding the trip, he said:

"It was a most enjoyable outing from start to finish. We made the outgoing trip in two special trains, and were shown every courtesy at many places, where short stops were made, taking in Aberdeen, Butte, Missoula, Coeur d'Alene, Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma, on the way to Portland. After the first two days the weather was ideal, just like the usual summer days in Charlevoix. On the coast they have had no hot weather at all, in fact it has been the coolest summer they have experienced in years. Business is "rotten" out there. Portland has five thousand empty houses. The lumber trade is very slack. I saw Guy Brown, formerly of Central Lake and Charlevoix, and he said it was worse in British Columbia than in Oregon and Washington. Crops on the coast looked well, but in the great wheat belt in the Dakotas, and in Alberta and Saskatchewan, the wheat did not look first rate, and evidently they were having too much rain. In Portland I saw the LeFevres and Chapels and all desired to be remembered to Charlevoix friends. It is a great country out there, but after all, Charlevoix and old Lake Michigan look mighty good to me, and they can have their old mountains and their Pacific ocean and welcome.
There's no place like home, especially when home is in Charlevoix."

THE SITUATION

LITTLE DOING NOW AT CAMP FERRIS

OTHER THAN DAILY DRILLS AND LONG MARCHES

Rioters in Frederick Mix-Up Fined and Punished—Want No Strike Duty.

(BY HAROLD W. USHER.)
Camp Ferris, Aug. 15.—Now that the excitement of pay day is over life in Camp Ferris has fallen back into the old monotony. The men are entering into three periods of drill. First battalion period, then regimental and last brigade. Battalion and regimental parades are held nearly every night. The men who left without leave have nearly all returned. There are still 10 men missing from the 3rd battalion, 19 from the second and 11 from the 1st. These men will be brought back and punishment dealt out to them.
The men who caused disorder in Frederick were all fined $3.00 apiece and one corporal was given the limit of $4.00.

Saturday the regiment was given a touch of real marching. Loaded in heavy marching order, which consists of one blanket, one poncho, one shelter half, one meal's rations, knapsacks, canteens and entrenching tools, then a tramp three or four miles over the hills and make camp.
Each man cooked his own dinner and a military problem was worked out.
The men in camp were much excited over the report that they were possibly going on strike duty, as they preferred the border. Sunday morning the first regular gun inspection was given and the men were astonished with the rigidity of it.
Corporal Kromeadt was appointed sergeant last week. Private Gene Miles and Albert Lalone corporals.
Because of the serious illness of their mothers, Joe Wederburn and Mort Orvis were called home last Thursday.

M. E. Special Services.
Dr. H. H. O'Neil, of Mississippi, the eloquent preacher who has been delighting the Bay View audiences each Sunday this summer will preach in the Methodist church next Sunday morning, August 20, at 10:30. Dr.
O'Neil has a message that burns its way through the head to the heart.
Miss Maud Shapton will sing. At 7:30 the pastor will preach on "The Way to Win." A most cordial invitation is extended to all.

Notice to Property Owners.
Owners of lake frontage north of the Beach hotel are requested to see that all poison ivy is cut and destroyed at once. Many instances where cases of severe poisoning have occurred has been reported and property owners are requested to co-operate with the city in doing away with the source of trouble.

MOTION PICTURES OF CHARLEVOIX

WEST. MICH. DEVELOPMENT

Pictures of Charlevoix's Beauty Spots Taken and Will Be Shown Throughout Country.

John I. Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, Roy Vandercreek, head of the publicity department of the Pere Marquette railroad, and a corps of workers were in the city on Thursday last to secure motion picture scenes of the beauty spots of Charlevoix.

The visitors made the trip north on a special train furnished by the industrial department of the Michigan railroads and the railroads will also aid in having the pictures exhibited in all parts of the United States and lectures made covering the subjects in the pictures.

Scenes were taken from the break water north, including the Beach hotel. In all, about 100 feet of views were taken from this point. From there the party took a number of feet of views looking south from the north end of Michigan avenue, including many of the beautiful summer cottages. Views of the Belvedere hotel, The Inn and golf course were also taken.

The views will also be shown in connection with the big exhibit made by the Chicago Herald, and possibly may be included with a quantity of views exhibited in Europe.

Besides Messrs. Gibson and Vandercreek, the party taking the views here included W. P. Hartman, Charles N. David, Dana H. Hinkley, of Petoskey, and several local men.

TO SUBSCRIBERS

Over $1,500 is due in subscriptions to the Courier. This means that we have been obliged to go down in our pockets for a sum almost as large as this to carry on the publication of our paper. It has been a hardship to us to do this and with the big advance in the cost of paper it is impossible for us to continue it any longer. If every person now indebted to us on subscriptions would pay us even a part of the sum due, it would be of very material assistance at the present time. Many asked last fall they be carried over until summer. We did so, but must now insist that what is due be settled. Do your part in helping us out in our present difficulty.

BEAN CROP IS HARD HIT BY HEAT WAVE

Crop Will Be No More Than 50 Per Cent of Normal, Is Prediction.

A survey of the bean area of Michigan made by James N. McBride, director of markets, discloses the fact that the present season has been a very unfavorable one for this crop.
According to the estimate made by Mr. McBride the crop will not be more than 50 per cent of normal.

While in some sections local rains have helped the growing beans to a noticeable degree there are many sections where the hot weather that prevailed during July has done damage that no amount of rain can now repair.

In some sections the bean crop is being abandoned and stock is being turned into the bean fields. Director McBride in speaking of the market outlook said:

"The growers should know the actual conditions and should keep these in mind when making contracts for future sales and they should be careful not to agree to part with their prospects at figures below those likely to prevail. The grower rather than the speculator should be the beneficiary of the probably high prices."

FORD TURNS TURTLE

Evening's Joy Ride Ends in Expensive Mishap.

The latter part of the week a party of well known young men of this city rented a Ford car of W. E. Byers and started out for an evening's joy ride.

Everything went lovely until the party reached the top of Greenski Hill. Here the bunch met a man on a bicycle, and with an over-indulgence of road courtesy, attempted to give him a big share of the road. The result was the car ran into the sand, snorted, plunged, bucked, and nearly turned over. Now the settlement for badly smashed fenders and a broken wind shield will make a big hole in their summer's savings.

Even a Ford will become unruly at times.

COUNTY FAIR SEPT. 5, 6, 7, 8

PROMISED TO BE BETTER THAN FORMER YEARS

Many New Attractions Booked—Two Aeroplane Flights Daily—Urged to Boost.

The thirty-second annual fair of the Charlevoix County Agricultural society will be held on the society's fair grounds at East Jordan, Michigan, on September 5, 6, 7 and 8.

As in the past, the officers are making an especial effort to make this fair a better and more successful one than any previous fair. This year Charlevoix county is blessed with an abundance of crops of all kinds. The Agricultural society offers premiums for the various exhibits which compare more than favorably with the premium lists of the surrounding counties and the association expects that the departments will be filled to the limit with exhibits.

Each year the society has been improving its grounds as its means would permit and now has grounds which are unexcelled by the fair associations of any county in the state.
This year a road is being built which will separate automobiles and horse driven vehicles from the pedestrians.
The race track is being kept in condition and excellent races are assured.

The association offers as free attractions the following:

Two aeroplane flights daily by C.
E. Williams, of the Williams Aero-plane company. Flights are assured as this company signed a "No flight no pay" contract.

Copeland & Wenzell, premier horizontal bar comedians.

Paul Wenzell in an impersonation of the African monkey. A very clever aerial act.

Bessie Mack, aerial flying trapeze.
Bessie Mack, aerial swinging ladder.

Sandy Copeland, flying muscular ring act.

Races.
Band music.

A series of ball games for the championship of the county is being arranged between the East Jordan, Boyer City and Charlevoix business and professional men.

Company I, 33rd Infantry, M. N.
G., will put on an exhibition ending with sham battle with aeroplane one day of the fair, if they are released from United States service by that time.

The officers of the society realize that they have undoubtedly made some mistakes in the past, and, being human beings, presume that it is likely they will make mistakes in the future. Inasmuch, however, as the Agricultural society is an institution of the people of Charlevoix county, they expect the people to stand back of it, to push the fair, not knock it, and to do everything in their power to make it a brilliant success, and suggest that if anyone has a legitimate grievance or does not like the manner in which the fair has been run in the past, that instead of sulking and refusing to help, this person buy a membership ticket and see to it that officers are selected for the society who will be capable, in his judgment, of properly conducting the affairs of the society.

Bring in your exhibits, talk the fair, be there yourself and see to it that your friends come. Make this fair one to be remembered as a brilliantly successful one.

Many voters are wondering and asking if there is to be a registrano provision for such a day.

An elector, may, however, be reg-if he will make a personal visit to his office. He can also register and vote on primary day.

DEMOCRATS AND PENSIONS

Among the claims which are to be advanced by Democrats in this campaign as a reason for their continuance in power, especially in congress, is the argument that they have supported a liberal policy toward the pensioners of the Civil war. This claim is to be put forth with especial emphasis by some senators of Democratic persuasion who are candidates for re-election and who will point, in some instances to their own votes on such legislation.

While, in some instances, there will be slight basis of personal truth in these declarations, the general fact is that the Democratic party has displayed a constant hostility toward the veterans of the Rebellion, whom they have accused—and truthfully—of having fought "a Republican war" to a successful issue.

The pages of the Congressional Record, for the past fifty years, reek with the words and votes of rancor which have been uttered and cast by Democratic legislators whenever general pension measures have been under discussion. Had the veterans of the great war, their widows and orphans been dependent upon Democratic assistance for the stipends which have been granted to them from time to time, they would long since have died of starvation. In no case since the war ended have the Democrats in congress—whether in the majority or in the minority—given cordial, ungrudging or even a helpfully contributory support to general pension legislation. Almost invariably more Democrats have voted against such bills than have voted for them—and whenever a Republican congress has passed such laws it has been compelled to do so in the face of bitter Democratic opposition. When the congress has been Democratic, it has always been the well-nigh solid vote of the Republican minority which has resulted in the passage of a general pension act.

The last of these measures was passed in May, 1912—the House then being Democratic, the senate and the presidency being still in Republican hands. The service pension act of that time was passed in the House with only 99 Democrats, out of a total party membership of 229, voting for it—while 85 Democrats voted against it. The bill was carried by the combined votes of 129 Republicans and the 85 Democrats, while only eight Republicans recorded their opposition. In the senate the vote was even more significant. Thirty-nine Republican senators voted for it, no Republican voted against it. Twelve Democrats voted for it, and 16 Democrats voted against it.

A Democratic senator may be in favor of pensions—for personal reasons. But the Democratic party is hostile to pensions—for party reasons. The veterans of the Civil war will not be deceived.

Another example of Democratic inefficiency is being talked about at the capitol. It is the slowness in the payment of the soldiers in the Federal service on the Mexican border. Not only has this policy of delay been exasperating to the soldiers, but it has caused much annoyance to members of congress who have been besieged with letters asking for the reason for the delay, and who have been unable to obtain any satisfaction from the administration.

How easy it is to sign a petition may be determined by a glance at those filed by candidates for county office. Across the top of each petition it reads "each signer of said nomination paper shall sign but one such paper for the same office—he shall therein declare that he intends to support the candidate named therein, etc." And still we find the same names on two or three petitions. Trying to make a good fellow of yourself is great stuff.

There are some old soldiers still living who have not forgotten Grover Cleveland and his pension votes. These men will smile grimly when Democratic orators begin to claim their votes for Democratic candidates on the ground that the Democratic party has been in favor of liberal pension legislation.

The adjutant general of the Massachusetts militia is to be the Democratic candidate for governor of the Bay state. His campaign slogan, of course, will be, "He kept us out of war."

Suffers Broken Leg.

Mrs. Loren Duffee was thrown from a buggy, near Ironton on Friday of last week and sustained a compound fracture of the leg just above the ankle. A heifer which was tied behind the buggy was the cause of the accident. The animal jumped over the wheel when it became frightened at a passing auto. Mrs. Duffee was taken to Charlevoix where Drs. Armstrong and Greenfelder reduced the fracture.

CROPS FOUND IN GOOD CONDITION

SAYS AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE FIELD AGENT

Value of Commercial Fertilizer Demonstrated on Sanderson Farm—Little Oat Smut.

I. K. Maystead, field agent for the farm crops department of the agricultural college, spent Friday and Saturday inspecting the work of the Eveline Experiment association. Lack of time prevented him from visiting all of the 30 members. The fall work of the association will consist of comparative trials of Red Rock wheat, Rosin rye, winter barley and san yetch. The work of the summer has been generally satisfactory, but members must still give careful attention to the yields of the crops in order that the relative productivity can be determined.

A striking illustration of the value of commercial fertilizer on corn was found in a small field across the corner from M. A. MacDonald's house, where William Sanderson planted alternate rows of fertilized and unfertilized corn. A surprisingly small amount of oat smut was found, due probably to the very general use last spring of treated seed. One farmer reported that he found no smut although his seed came from a crop which was fully one-fifth smut last year. The seed had been carefully treated with formalin. Although soy beans have generally been grown much farther south, Emil Nasson has the promise of a fine crop of the Ogemaw variety. Sudan grass which had been given considerable attention in the agricultural press is being successfully grown on Breezy Point Farm.

SLIGHT DECREASE SHOWN IN HIGHWAY TRAFFIC

Count Taken August 8 On a Cloudy and Rainy Day.

On account of Tuesday, August 8, being a cloudy day and threatening rain, the count taken on the Emmet and Grand Traverse road, at the foot of Greenski Hill, show a slight decrease over the preceding one. However the lull in traffic was for that day only, as on the following day it is reported to have run higher than usual. The August 8 count is as follows:

Single horse rigs	54
Double teams, light	15
Double teams, loaded	6
Auto runabouts	40
Touring cars	351
Motor trucks	7
Total	473

From reports received, traffic for the past week has reached the highest number, and it is quite likely it will continue during the entire month.

CITIZENS URGED TO HELP THE BOYS

"Brick" Sale for Their Benefit Held Here Saturday.

People representing the Starr Commonwealth for Boys, located at Adrian, will hold a "brick" sale in this city Saturday, the proceeds from the sale of each "brick" to be used in meeting the expenses of the home. Headquarters will be at the Blanchard Hardware company's store on Bridge street. Local women will be in charge of the affairs of the day. The object of the Starr Commonwealth for Boys is to maintain a real home for the homeless, friendless and dependent boy; to give to the wild, wayward child of the streets, the so-called "bad boy," a chance to make good; to direct, wisely and lovingly, the misunderstood, badgered and beaten child of ignorant or immoral parents, and to provide for the incorrigible, a normal, healthful environment, where the lads will be taught the meaning of responsibility and the purpose of law. In no sense is the Commonwealth a prison. It is not a detention home nor a reform school. There are no bolts nor bars.

Every person who believes in hospitals should help build our hospital. Charlevoix has three thousand inhabitants and in the summer time we have, roughly estimated, twelve thousand visitors at least.

Every tourist who believes in hospitals should help build our hospital. The doctors need a hospital and the sick and injured need a hospital. The better the hospital the better the doctors can do their work and the greater the chance for the patient to recover.

Now, the question is, how is this hospital to be built. I don't feel that I would like to impose upon our tourists any more than I would like to be imposed upon myself. It is simply a business proposition and a man is likely to be stricken with some severe malady, particularly if he is looking for it and expects it, so it is up to him to protect himself and to be prepared to meet the emergency. He might die en route home if there were no place prepared for him here. Then his family surely would wish that there had been a good hospital to which he could immediately have been taken.

We people, with our own homes here would not be so badly off. It really looks to me as though the tourists would be the greater gainers were the hospital built. It would guarantee to them an ark of safety for themselves and their families and instead of their being compelled to go to their own hot weather homes with their sick or injured, they could remain here in our present delightful climate, which we claim is the very best on earth and this also would insure a greater chance for rapid recovery and at very much less expense.

Yours truly, VAN PELT.

Special Notice.

PLAN TO MAKE PICNIC A COUNTY AFFAIR

Big Time Planned for at Ironton on Friday, August 25.

Bills are out advertising a big Farmers' picnic in Bird's Grove, at Ironton, on Friday, August 25. The members of Ironton Grange are promoting the affair, but do not contemplate confining it to Grangers alone, but want everyone in the county, whether Grangers or not, to spend the day there.

Dr. Eben Mumford, of the Michigan Agricultural college, has promised to be there and speak on the much discussed topic, "The Need of a County Agent." Other speakers will also address the crowd on the leading topics of the day.

A fine program has been prepared, including a ball game, athletic sports, besides a literary program. Those who desire will be given an opportunity to spend the evening dancing in the hall.

The ladies will serve one of their famous Grange dinners, during the noon hour, and supper can also be obtained on the grounds.

It is the intention of the promoters to make the affair of much usefulness to farmers, and the speakers will make their address along these lines.

LISTEN!!

Does it make you sore to have one always preface his remarks to you with that word "Listen". Well, it does me too, but I started this before I thought how you might feel about it, so I will keep on going. So now, Listen: If your shoe dealer would advertise the fact that he had sold one hundred pair of $1.25 shoes in a remarkable short time, do you think you would fall over yourself to buy a pair just because he had sold so many? No. You bet you wouldn't. You want a better pair; no $1.25 shoes for you, not if you know yourself.

Now, when some firm or other advertises they have sold a large number of furnaces, does that make you think THAT furnace better than any other, or rather, they were like the dealer who sold the large number of cheap shoes. Sold on price and not quality

Now we Sell OUR SHARE of Warm Air Furnaces

I admit we get a little more for our plants, but they are WORTH it. It is just like buying anything else, you have to pay for Quality

We handle the PENINSULAR FURNACE made by one of the oldest and best known firms in America. It has few Peers and no Superior. Give us a chance to install one in your home and if you don't feel that you have something to be proud of—something you will take delight in showing your neighbors—just say so and we will take it out and not charge you one cent Late Crops in Excellent Condition—Hay and Forage Above Average.

The average estimated yield per acre of wheat in the state is 16.31, southern counties 16.19, in the central counties 16.32, in the northern counties 16.23 and in the upper peninsula 18.89 bushels. The estimate at present indicates that the state yield will be very close to 12,500,000 bushels. The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in July is estimated at about 1,500,000, these figures indicate that at least 3,000,000 bushels of last season's crop is held by the farmers, but owing to the very wet harvest of last year, much of the wheat being unfit for market, was used for feeding stock and we are of the opinion that all the merchantable wheat has been disposed of by the growers.

Oats—The estimated average yield in the state is 35.23, in the southern counties 35.22, in the central counties 34.68, in the northern counties 34.11 and in the upper peninsula 43.07 bushels per acre. The above estimate indicates that the state yield will be very close to 60,500,000 bushels.

Corn—The condition of corn as compared with an average is 71 in the state, 67 in the southern counties, 76 in the central and northern counties and 85 in the upper peninsula. The condition one year ago was 74 in the state, southern and central counties and upper peninsula and 73 in the northern counties.

Potatoes—The condition of potatoes as compared with an average is 72 in the state, 67 in the southern counties, 76 in the central counties, 78 in the northern counties and 87 in the upper peninsula. The condition one year ago was 93 in the state, central and northern counties, 94 in the southern counties and 92 in the upper peninsula.

Beans—The condition of beans compared with an average per cent. is 86 in the state and southern counties, 84 in the central counties, 87 in the northern counties and 97 in the upper peninsula. The condition one year ago was 89 in the state, 87 in the southern counties, 90 in the central counties, 92 in the northern counties and 85 in the upper peninsula.

Sugar Beets—The condition of sugar beets as compared with an average is 75 in the state, 68 in the southern counties, 78 in the central counties, 80 in the northern counties and 91 in the upper peninsula. The condition one year ago was 93 in the state, 94 in the southern counties, central counties and upper peninsula and 91 in the northern counties.

Hay and Forage—The estimated yield per acre of hay and forage in tons is 1.44 in the state, 1.66 in the southern counties, 1.65 in the central counties, 1.56 in the northern counties and 1.73 in the upper peninsula. The above estimate indicates that the state yield will be about 3,824,000 tons, which exceeds the ten year average, 1906 to 1915 by over 1,000,000 tons.

OLDER BUT STRONGER

To be healthy at seventy, prepare at forty, is sound advice, because in the strength of middle life we too often forget that neglected colds, or careless treatment of slight aches and pains, simply undermine strength and bring chronic weakness for later years.
To be stronger when older, keep your blood pure and rich and active with the strength-building and blood-nourishing properties of Scott's Emulsion which is a food, a tonic and a medicine to keep your blood rich, alleviate rheumatism and avoid sickness. No alcohol in Scott's, Scott & Borne, Bloomfield, N. J.

600 tons and the banner year during this period, 1908, by over 500,000 tons.

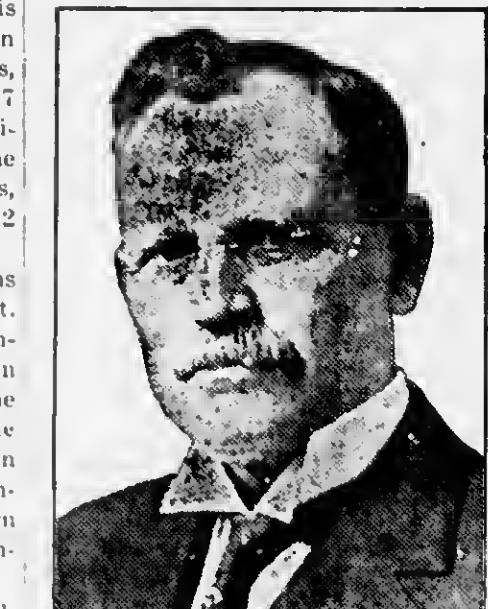

Apples—On the first day of July the prospect for an average crop of apples in the state was 76 per cent., but the extremely dry and hot weather during the month of July has very materially damaged the fruit and the prospect has been reduced 17 per cent. which makes the final estimate but 14 per cent. above the figures of one year ago.

The prospect for an average is 59 in the state, 63 in the southern counties, 50 in the central counties, 63 in the northern counties and 50 in the upper peninsula.

One year ago the average was 45 in the state, 54 in the southern counties, 35 in the central counties, 37 in the northern counties and 50 in the upper peninsula. The winter varieties that promise best, are in their order: Baldwin, Northern Spy, Wagner, Greening, Ben Davis, Tolman sweet, Russet and Hubbardston. Of the early sorts the most promising are Duchess, Wealthy, Yellow Transparent, Elmrose, Maiden Blush, Red Astrachan, Fall Pippin and Early Harvest.

THE OFFICE, THE PARTY, AND THE MAN

WILLIAM H. HILL
Candidate for the Republican Nomination for United States Senator August 29th.

William H. Hill is a Republican and it is as a thorough-going, uncompromising Republican that he offers himself at the Primaries August 29 for the Republican nomination for United States Senator.
But there are certain characteristics of Mr. Hill's Republicanism that he wishes thoroughly understood. He is neither a radical, nor a conservative; least of all is he a reactionary.
By radicalism Mr. Hill understands action not based on good judgment and common sense; by conservatism, a lack of action that amounts to timidity, failure to grasp new conditions; by reactionism, no action at all—stagnation.
Mr. Hill is progressive in his practice and application of Republican theory and doctrine.
By that he means that he recognizes new facts, new conditions, when they arise and believes that theory and principles of government should be adapted to fit these new facts and conditions.
There should always be progress. One cannot stand still. One should advance with the times—molding and adapting principles to the new problems that arise, but never altering the fundamentals. It is this sort of Republicanism that Mr. Hill practices and will practice.
That he has the courage of his convictions was proved in 1912 when, believing that the conditions of that hour demanded it, he followed Colonel Roosevelt. He ran for Congressman-at-large and polled the largest vote, next to Roosevelt, running ahead of his ticket 20,000, and exceeding the vote of the Republican nominee for governor by 5,000.
Mr. Hill remains unshaken in his belief in the soundness of the progressive Republican theories. Those who believe in progressivism as a necessary element in all political action and who supported Mr. Hill so generously in 1912 may rest assured that the same ideals of government for which he stood at that time will actuate his conduct if he is nominated for United States Senator and elected on the Republican ticket.
Support him as you did four years ago and it will mean that the advocates of progress and humanity will have a friend in court. The Primaries are August 29th. Get out and place an X before the name of Wm. H. Hill. August 29th

BARBECUE A GRAND SUCCESS

ESTIMATE OVER 2,500 PEOPLE WERE PRESENT

Program Was Carried Out as Planned—Home Team Won Ball Game by Score 4 to 1.

On Thursday, August 10th, occurred the second annual barbeque given by the Ellsworth business men to their farmer friends, and judging by the attendance it was thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated by all. The day was an ideal one for the occasion, although at about noon a small shower came up which caused some to believe that the day would end in a downpour of rain, but after a little it cleared away and nothing the worse for the sprinkle.
The crowd began to gather early in the morning, even before the trains came in, and, with the band went to the depot and met both the north and south bound trains which each brought its large load of people from both directions. Then with the band at its head, the crowd wended its way to the cool and inviting park where the roast ox was under way.

Promptly at eleven o'clock the program, which had been prepared for the benefit of the visitors, was opened by remarks by Hon. E. R. Harris, followed by a song by two little nieces of Mrs. Hartman from East Jordan.
Hon. Thomas D. Meggison, of Central Lake was next on the program and spoke words of enjoyment to the many people of this vicinity who are always glad of an opportunity to hear him speak. He was followed by Hon. W. W. Potter, of Hastings, candidate for attorney general on the Republican ticket, and for some time the audience was delighted with his flowing words of oratory. The principal speaker of the day, Congressman Frank D. Scott, of Alpena, had the misfortune to miss his train and was unable to be with us as he had planned. The band furnished patriotic music throughout the program, also during the course of the program Mrs. Phillips, of the East Jordan theatrical colony, gave some patriotic solos which were fine.

Immediately after the program the call to dinner was sounded and it was a hungry bunch of people who formed in line and waited their turn in partaking of the roast ox, doughnuts, and coffee, which were served out to them. This with other delicacies most people brought, made an excellent picnic dinner.
At two o'clock the noted Hungarian dancers, Hartman & Varary, gave several exhibitions of their skill on the smooth dance floor which had been prepared directly in front of the speakers stand, with the Ellsworth band furnishing the music. Their dances were even more enjoyed than last year and we were extremely fortunate in procuring them for the occasion.

Next on the program was the base ball game held on Harris Field between Ellsworth and the Y. M. C. A. camp, which resulted in a victory for the home boys, by a score of 4 to 1. Veitengruber pitched an excellent game for Ellsworth.
It was regretted that the visiting team was delayed in getting here so that the long wait at the grounds was necessary, but which the management was unable to help.
Dancing in the Blue hall in the evening finished the day's sport. The committee in charge of the barbeque this year are to be congratulated on the excellent manner in which the day was made an enjoyable one both to the farmers and town people. The profits from the stand on the grounds was used to help defray the expenses of the barbeque and amounted to considerable.
We can do no better than duplicate this feat another year.

For Treasurer of Antrim County, Robert E. Morrow respectfully asks the consideration and support of Antrim county voters at the Republican primary August 29, 1916. He is a farmer residing on his farm two miles northwest of Central Lake. He now is treasurer of the Antrim County Fair and secretary of the Antrim County Grange. Has been treasurer of his township. Has held numerous other offices of trust and honor during his 36 years of residence in this county. Those who know him consider him well qualified to perform the duties of the important office of county treasurer.

August F. Banowsky

In coming before the electors of Antrim County asking for the republican nomination for the office of County Treasurer, I am sure that I can serve you well in this important position where careful, accurate work is a prime requisite. For many years I have served the people of Kearney Township and the village of Belleire as clerk and treasurer and the records will show that I have always discharged my duties promptly and accurately. I will appreciate your support at the primary election August 29th

MUST BE WILLING TO HELP HIMSELF

IF ONE EXPECTS TO GAIN SUCCESS

The Business Farmer Does Not Need Special Legislation to Become Prosperous.

When you see a farmer come to town with a load of hogs, a big tub of butter, two or three cans of cream per week, some grain or hay for sale, or a calf, colt, cow or mule, you may be sure he is not hanging his hopes on the uncertainty of the cotton market this fall. He is diversifying and living at home.—Morgan, Tex. Messenger.

Neither is he depending upon some new scheme of legislation to make him prosperous while he rests in the shade and abuses the government. The man who works intelligently is rarely a noisy person. He is not a growler who spends his life clamoring for something for nothing and suspecting and abusing everybody who is prosperous.—Galveston News.

The man who diversifies his crops is the man who is going to be traveling the road to independence, if not to fortune. He who places his hopes upon one crop, no matter what that crop may be, is traveling the wrong road, the road that will eventually lead to his financial downfall. And the Galveston News well says that "the man who works intelligently is rarely a noisy person." He has no time to be noisy, except such noise as he makes while at work, and it is by no means a discordant sound, but is sweet music to the ear.

The government is not going to legislate money into any man's pocket. All that a fellow gets he must work for, unless he comes by it through gift or dishonest methods. The fellow who is not undertaking to do anything to better his condition is not much of a man. He may wear good clothes and all that sort of thing, but he is of no real benefit to himself or to any one else.—Columbia Enquirer Sun.

And the Enquirer-Sun speaks a parable when it says the government is not going to legislate money into a man's pocket, and the sooner the calamity howlers get away from such forlorn hopes the better for the country. Legislation we have aplenty.—Americus, Ga., Times Record.

Honest, now, did you ever see a live, progressive farmer running down everything and everybody and acknowledging that he is so poor a business man that some one is always "picking on him?" No, of course you didn't. The man who wears the "poor, abused, downtrodden" air is usually the one who won't treat his grain for smut, is too kind-hearted to deprive the Hessian fly of his meal-ticket, and who keeps scrub cattle, mongrel hogs and depressed chickens. He wants to bring all the live wires down to his level and argues that any one making a few thousand a year is some sort of a crook, because he could never do it.

Sort Defined.

"Is that boy a chip of the old block?" "Why, no. He's only a little shaver."—Halthouse American.

Boston Woman Recommending It To Her Friends

Popular Boston Lady Says Tonaline Has Proven a Godsend to Her

It is always interesting to listen to the statements of our friends, and especially when you know they are sincere and honest in what they say. Added interest is created in a statement coming from one who has spent a lifetime in Boston, where she is well known socially.

Such a person is Annie Stewart, who resides in Boston, and is possessed of the respect and confidence of her associates, and is willing for anyone to call on her to verify the following signed testimonial.

"I have suffered with stomach trouble for the past seven years. It took the form of indigestion and dyspepsia. I had dizzy spells and headaches, and after I ate a little food it would ferment and cause gas to form in my stomach. I had pains all over my body, and was chronically constipated. My liver was torpid, and I felt generally miserable. I had been in the hospital, but received no permanent relief. I was so nervous and restless that at night I could scarcely sleep. The gas pressing under my heart caused palpitation, and when I arose in the morning I was just as tired as when I retired. About two weeks ago I began to take tonoline, and I can truthfully state that it has done wonders in my case. I am feeling like a new woman and can eat any kind of food. I sleep the night through and have no more aches or pains; in fact, it has cured me, and I am recommending it to all of my friends, as it has been a Godsend to me."

All druggists sell and guarantee tonoline.

There are numerous symptoms of this trouble that tonoline can relieve. In fact, any of the following may denote affections of the stomach: Indigestion, dyspepsia, belching of wind, bad breath, sick throwing headache, poor circulation, night sweats, that tired feeling, costiveness, coated tongue or a poor complexion.

Caution:—As tonoline is recommended as a flesh builder those not wishing to increase their weight 15 pounds or more should not take it continuously. Adv. 3344

NEED SCHOOL OF LEADERSHIP

SOME PERSON MUST TAKE THE LEAD.

The Duty of All Interests to Establish Extension Work Upon the Same Basis.

Our schools teach us everything except how to go about it. It is time that we organized a new school for leadership. It makes little difference what the task is. The main thing is how to do it in the quickest and most practical way.

Fifty men who use a piece of road will complain about the county authorities and yet bump along over ruts and plow through mire. The dragging this piece of road after every rain would probably take half a day. At a liberal estimate it would cost $3.00. If thirty of those kickers would put up 10 cents a rain and pay for ten rains the conditions would be entirely overcome.

This is only one illustration to show that leadership is not developed locally. We are always ready to give advice, but seldom ready to lend a hand.

Here is the idea. Suppose that every line of business which is now miserably maintaining a propaganda should meet and agree to train local leaders. It makes no difference what task be assigned to the local leader in the beginning. The salient point is to develop the leadership.

There are many ways to attract and hold public attention and to secure public co-operation and the fundamental thing is to begin.

The fertilizer crowd, perhaps, will not support such a school of leadership, because they can not see how their graduates will sell fertilizers right or wrong, regardless of what fertilizers may mean to that community.

The hankers are not ready to support that school, because they do not see how it will advertise the banks and bring them into the limelight.

The universities could not support such a school, because college blight has not allowed them to see that the university belongs to the people and that the people are not mere feeders to build up the university.

The grain dealers and millers could not support such a school, because they can not see how that school will return the first dollar earned into their pockets. Besides, the country grain dealers want the terminal market to bear the expense and there is an endless friction between farmers' co-operative elevators and the regular elevators, although the result—a large yield of better grain—is paramount with both.

They may not enter into public service for fear of somebody's ulterior motive of making a dollar out of it.

The railroads would not join, because they have formed the policy of making every such thing a railroad proposition and they can not see that local leadership will drop all of its other work and secure more tonnage regardless of the relationship between production and distribution. In other words, every interest, every vocation, and every institution naturally wants to be first and in the scrambling, the result is the same as that of so many rats trying to squeeze through the same knot hole at the same time.

While we must admit that selfishness is the dominating power, we must also admit that well directed selfishness is the only solution.

How can we make them all see that they have a duty to perform prior to putting over their own subject? That is what a school of leadership means. It is a school of extension and the principles of extension must be taught and leadership developed first. We are all trying to build our house on the sand. We are not willing to spend a little time clearing away the sand and getting down to bed rock. That rock is local leadership.

We must encourage every community to look after its own affairs and then we must all become auxiliary to that community, bringing our subject forcibly and intelligently to that community without trying to tear down whatever is already organized and substituting some temporary schism of our own which will last only until some other cult replaces it.

Union Will Distribute Temperance Literature Throughout County —Fine Program.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union meeting held at the home of Mrs. Frank Metcalf, Friday afternoon, August 11, was one long to be remembered. It was a large gathering, nearly 60 persons including the children being present. The magnificent view of Lake Michigan added much to the pleasure of all.

The meeting opened with President Alex in the chair. Mrs. Walker led the devotionals, the scripture selection being the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians, after which all rose during prayer by Mrs. Walker. The W. C. T. U. took steps to purchase temperance literature to be distributed at the county fair. The most of the amount required was raised at this meeting.

Mrs. Cooper, from Huron county, Ontario, who is visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Elston was present and gave a very interesting talk along temperance lines in Ontario, and particularly of Huron county, of which she is the county president. Mrs. Cooper's talk was bubbling with enthusiasm.

The program, in charge of Mrs. J. R. Cooper and Mrs. Annie Metcalf was fine, the children taking prominent part in campaign songs, yells, etc. Mrs. Alex and Mrs. Burns had readings.

"Twentieth Century Patriotism" was read by Mrs. Burns.

Duet, "Our Slogan," by Hildigarde and Clara Wilkinson, with chorus by all.

"Rules of the Game," read by Hildigarde Wilkinson.

The quartet by Richard and Gilbert Saltonstall, Kenneth Pierce and Clara Usher, with chorus by the children, took well.

"America" was sung by all, and in honor of our visitor from across the border, "God Save the King," was indulged in.

Campaign buttons were given to the children to wear during the campaign. Refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake were served to the children.

Thus closed one of the enjoyable meetings of the organization. A "red letter day." One new member was secured. The next meeting will be held with Mrs. Walker at the M. E. parsonage, September 8.

ELOPERS TRACED TO CITY BY DETECTIVES

Found Registered as Man and Wife in Clinton Street Home.

Detectives took all the joy out of an elopement Monday, and brought both parties to realize that they were in wrong.

The couple arrived in the city Saturday and engaged rooms at the Burns home on Clinton street. Monday two detectives arrived on the scene. The man also received a couple of telegrams that worried him, and he hit the trail back to Chicago, which is said to be his home. The woman made a side trip to Boyne City during the day, but was later picked up by the detectives.

Later advices state that the man has also been taken charge of in Chicago. Both were married and had left their better halves for an outing.

It's strange how the hot weather will effect some people.

Hundreds will be there. One of the best attractions of the event is the good dinner served by the ladies. This in itself is well worth a trip to the picnic grounds.

Many Prominent Players in "The Fourth Estate."

Few photoplays of recent making have had stronger casts than "The Fourth Estate," produced by William Fox. The cast includes Clifford Bruce, who was a star under Charles Frohman, and who played with Naude Adams and other favorites. Mr. Bruce also played in "A Fool There Was," with Theda Bara, and has been seen in other Fox features.

Samuel J. Ryan, who plays the part of Boss Duprey, is one of the oldest and best known actors in the business. He was for years leading man for Cohan and Harris and played prominent parts in "The Yankee Prince," "Little Johnny Jones," and other Cohan and Harris plays.

Alfred Hickman, who plays the corrupt judge, was the original "Little Billy" in "Tribby," and has scored notable successes in other productions, including several William Fox pictures.

Victor Benoit, who plays the part of the newspaper reporter, is a screen favorite of long standing. In "The Fourth Estate," he is cast in a part that perfectly fits him.

Ruth Blair, co-star with Mr. Ryan and Mr. Bruce, has appeared on the stage under the management of the Selwyns. She has many successes to her credit.

SLEEPER FOR GOVERNOR AND A UNITED REPUBLICAN PARTY IN MICH.

According to reports received during the past week from every section of the state by Albert E. Sleeper of Bad Axe, leading candidate for the Republican nomination for governor, this slogan has been adopted by the candidates for county office and the Republican workers who are confident that Charles E. Hughes and Albert E. Sleeper will head a united party to a magnificent victory at the November election.

Entrenched to some extent by federal patronage and state jobs obtained during the Wilson and Ferris administrations, Democrats in some sections of the state are planning desperate assaults on the Republican lines next November.

In Charles E. Hughes the Republican party has a candidate who will sweep Michigan by a tremendous majority. To successfully repulse the Democrats all along the line it is necessary that the Republican candidate for governor be a leader capable of welding all factions together. From all indications the county candidates—the boys in the trenches—feel that it is necessary to nominate a man to head the state ticket who will make their campaigns easier in the fall.

While many of the candidates for county office have primary contests of their own and are unable to participate actively in the gubernatorial campaign, many are quietly passing the word to their friends that Sleeper's nomination will clinch their election in November.

During the Republican state convention last spring many leaders declared that the sentiment among the delegates was practically unanimous for Sleeper. "I venture the prediction," declared a man who has watched conventions for many years, "that if a vote could be taken in this convention today, eighty per cent of the delegates would favor Sleeper."

CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR WINS FAVOR IN MASON COUNTY BY PERSONAL VISIT

(Ludington Chronicle, Aug. 3, 1916)
Ludington had the honor of entertaining a distinguished visitor Monday when Honorable Albert E. Sleeper of Bad Axe, ex-state treasurer and prominent republican candidate for the gubernatorial nomination spent the day in the city. While here, Mr. Sleeper probably met and shook hands with not less than 500 citizens and many were the favorable expressions that followed. Although a big business man, Mr. Sleeper is exceptionally democratic in manner and genial disposition. He met the working men in the factories with the same courtesy and cordiality that he greeted the capitalist and business man.

Albert E. Sleeper.

Mr. Sleeper is making a tour of western Michigan in an automobile accompanied by his son, Stephens Sleeper and Senator Fred Woodworth, one of his most able and staunch supporters. The Thumb's candidate for governor makes no pretense of being an orator and stated frankly, that he did not seek any public gatherings but merely wished to come in personal contact and shake hands with citizens of all classes as much as his time would permit. He is essentially a business man and is running for governor on a business man's platform. If nominated and elected governor, he proposes to apply the same principles to the affairs of state that he has used so much success in his own business.

Mr. Sleeper stated that he has not or will he promise a single office, nor does he desire to stand as the candidate of any particular class or faction in the Republican party.

Those who met Mr. Sleeper were more than pleased with his directness of manner, his pleasing personality and his evident sincerity of purpose. Furthermore, since the withdrawal of

To the Electors of Charlevoix County:

I wish to announce my candidacy for the office of County Clerk, on the Republican ticket, at the August primaries. I believe I am fully qualified to fill the position and your support will be greatly appreciated.

Pol. Adv. 19th East Jordan, Michigan.

The Flag and the Man

That the value of Charlevoix Courier advertising is appreciated by the business men goes without saying. This issue also proves that it is appreciated by the various candidates, for office who take this means to inform the public of their policies, etc.

The Charlevoix Courier does not assume any personal responsibility for statements made in the following columns, as they are as given for publication by the candidates or interested parties, a number of them being contributed by friends of the candidates. They are all political advertising as coming under the primary act.

Mr. Dickenson from the race, it becomes more and more evident that Sleeper is gaining strength and his prospects for securing the nomination the coming primary look very bright at this writing. Over in the Thumb where Mr. Sleeper is known personally to thousands of voters, he enjoys a remarkable popularity and it is said that his vote there will be very heavy. He also has connections in Detroit which insure a very satisfactory vote from Wayne county if in fact he does not actually carry that stronghold. He is also strong in Kent county and other populous sections of the state where the vote is usually heavy.

During his short stay in Mason county it is apparent that Mr. Sleeper made a large number of friends. He met personally practically all of the county officers and leading Republicans and in many instances was assured of cordial support. It would be surprising if Mason county does the handsome thing by candidate Sleeper at the primary election August 29th.

Mr. Sleeper believes in fewer laws and is bitterly opposed to the present reckless extravagance in state expenditures.

GERRIT J. DIEKEMA LEADING CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNORSHIP

Events of the past few weeks have practically placed Mr. Diekema in the lead in the race for the nomination for governor at the primaries which will be held August 29th and the Republican ticket is sure to be greatly strengthened by this fact. Mr. Diekema is one of the best informed men in the state today and his years of governmental experience will insure an intelligent administration of the affairs of the office of governor.

No man is better fitted than Mr. Diekema to head the ticket. More than any other candidate, will help every office on National, State and County ticket. He is one of the ablest orators in the party and can carry the message of Republicanism throughout the state. He is an able lawyer, trained in the making and the enforcement of laws and a successful business man.

The office of governor of the State of Michigan is a big job and a big one is demanded to fill the position. It is not wise to experiment. In our private life we demand that an applicant for a big job have experience. The same course should be followed in making our selection of public officials. Gerrit J. Diekema is a big, capable, experienced, honest, kind hearted, manly man. He has been tested by the people in positions of trust and responsibility and he has never failed to make good.

Michigan with Diekema as governor will prosper; Michigan with an untried experiment as governor will be an unknown quantity. We should not take the chance.

As was said in a recent editorial in the "Diamond Drill" Crystal Falls, in part:

"While we have nothing but kind words for the other candidates we are of the opinion that Mr. Diekema will make one of the best governors that Michigan has ever had. He is a great, big, broad-minded, intellectual man, and Michigan will be proud of him. He has been in public life since he arrived at the age of twenty-one years and no one can say that he did not perform the duties of every trust reposed in him, honestly, efficiently and well. He is big enough to be president and the voters of Michigan will make no mistake if they elect him Governor of this state."

We have known him intimately for thirty years, and never knew him to break a promise or betray a trust. The humblest citizen of Michigan can approach him as easily as the millionaire, the miner, the farmer, the merchant and the laborer stand on equal footing and from him will receive justice."

DIEKEMA DESERVES YOUR SUPPORT AT THE PRIMARIES AUGUST 29TH.

YOUR DUTY AS A CITIZEN IS TO GET OUT AND VOTE ON PRI-MARY DAY, AUGUST 29.

Fred H. White for Representative.

In an interview with Fred H. White, candidate for the nomination of representative in the Charlevoix District, he has the following to say regarding the big issues that must be faced by the new house and senate the coming term:

"The question of laxation has disturbed the minds of our greatest men after office during all time have been promising less taxes but every year the figures on the tax receipt have shown larger denominations. State taxes in Michigan have shown an enormous increase in the last few years. The causes seem to be many but in my mind the principal cause is the system of handling the appropriations. The semi-annual appropriation bill passed by the legislature is the pork barrel of the state. Every senator and member of the house of representatives who happens to have a public institution in his district considers it a great achievement to get a large slice of this appropriation for his home institution. All the fellows who want something put together, then the log rolling begins and they put it over. The taxpayer holds the bag and pays the bills. The finance committee is helpless, the governor is helpless for the reason that the 'porkers' have the votes."

"In my opinion the only way to break up the pork barrel legislation is to change the system of appropriations. In my opinion a central board of control will simply add another lot of salaried officers to the now over-burdened state pay roll and pay small savings that they might bring about would be spent many times over in additional expenses. I am in favor of the state budget system. The great newspapers favor it, the business men and farmer organizations platform favors it and I am sure that thousands of dollars in useless expense may be saved to the taxpayer and the sessions of the legislature materially shortened if this system were adopted."

"The state of Michigan has a constantly growing family. Each year finds us the guardians of more unfortunate and I would be the last man in the state to deny these less fortunate brothers, sisters and children of ours the slightest comfort, but on the other hand there are thousands of our citizens who are struggling to support and educate their families and who are finding the burden heavier than they can bear and unless some change is made in our present system of taxation ruin will stare these members and their families in the face."

"I stand for the square deal for everybody, the farmer, the merchant, the hawker, the small business man, the laborer and the humblest citizen wherever he may be, and upon this platform I want not only to be elected, but to also stand after election, and I promise to the voters of Charlevoix District the very best service I am capable of giving during my term of office and my only ambition is to serve them faithfully and well."

Mr. White has resided on a farm near Ironton for the past ten years. Prior to coming to Charlevoix he lived in Monroe county, where he served three years in the United States mail service. While a resident there he was a member of Co. G, 1th regiment and upon his departure received an honorable discharge. He is well acquainted in the county, has always been a republican, and if elected will serve the district to the best of his ability."

J. LEE MORFORD, OF GAYLORD, FOR SENATOR

I AM A CANDIDATE FOR RE-ELECTION, for the reason that I think I am entitled to a second term and refer you to my legislative records as a basis for statement made above. My past record has proven conclusively that my legislative work has saved the tax payers money. If returned for a second term, feel confident that I can do better work along lines that will interest every tax payer.

I wish to call your attention to a few endorsements by the people and press within my senatorial district. The Republican County Convention of Otsego county, held in April, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, whereas, our fellow townsman, Senator J. Lee Morford, having filled the office of State Senator of the 29th district, acceptably, therefore, be it resolved that this convention endorse Senator Morford for a second term, believing him justly entitled to be returned.

Not only Otsego County Convention gives this strong endorsement, but our neighboring county, Mont-

Senator J. Lee Morford.

morency also adopted resolution as follows:

That we endorse Hon. J. Lee Morford, senator from the 29th district, and pledge our support to him as a candidate for re-election.

Press comments from papers within our senatorial district. Mr. Morford will conduct his campaign on his record as a member of the State House of Representatives for two terms, and one term in the State Senate. Mr. Morford is well known in Cheboygan, and stands well with all parties. (Cheboygan Tribune.)

The Charlevoix Sentinel has the following to say regarding Mr. Morford's candidacy:

Now as a matter of political justice, and in accordance with precedent established, we shall advocate the renomination of Senator Morford and we know of no reason why he is not entitled to a return. His record in the Senate is straight and his personal record above reproach.

In copying the above, the Lewiston Journal adds the following: We believe that the voters of Montmorency county will agree with the Sentinel, and will vote to give Senator Morford a second term.

Bozette City Bee says: He has accomplished some things for this section of the state that will be remembered when our boys are old men. It was largely through his influence that the state encampment for the Militia was located at Grayling.

Senator Morford was unanimously endorsed by Otsego County Republicans for a second term for State Senator from our district. (Lewiston Local.)

SERVETUS A. CORRELL.
Adv. 28-25—pd

out Truth and Love being expressed to him or by him, without Truth and Love governing him.

With this Christian and scientific idea of God, the universe is seen to be a state in which the infinite and beneficent Mind, Life, Truth, and Love,—"Spirit"—as designated by Jesus,—"Principle of Being"—as taught by Mrs. Eddy (Science and Health, p. 25),—reigns supreme. In such a state, recognized, admitted, realized, entirely a state of Mind in which all are the ideas of Mind, it must be self-evident that no sin could be, no misery, strife, want, woe, degradation, sickness, death. In such a state, that only could be with such a God would cause; that only could be which would express His bounty and beneficence, that only which is like Himself, good, "very good."

Let any one here take this single proposition, which Christian Science teaches, of God's allness and of God's invariable goodness; let him recall it in times of quiet or of stress, and see if it does not overcome misgiving, fear, foreboding, and doing this, if it does not overcome the torments of fear. As surely as this is remembered it will be found helpful, a preventive and a curative of ill.

Religion, rightly viewed, has a twofold purpose, teaching men to know God and saving them from ill of all kinds. Probably nothing could show this more clearly than the fact that those who were commissioned by Jesus to preach were also commanded by him to heal. Not only did Jesus command the disciples to preach and to heal, but he told them what to preach; and in the light of the Christian Science which he taught, it was plain to them, as it is quite plain to Christian Scientists today, that what he commanded them to preach was intended to and did heal the sick and redeem the sinful.

It is recorded that when the disciples returned from their mission they reported that the very devil was subject unto them. What was it that Jesus told them to preach? Nothing worldlywise, erudite; on the contrary, something very simple,—"And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Did this simple statement have the potency to reform and regenerate men to purify and heal them? What is the kingdom of heaven? All thinking people would probably agree that by the kingdom of heaven is meant a happy and harmonious state in which God reigns.

If we remind ourselves of the idea of God which Christian Science teaches, and which has just been indicated, and of the universe governed by this the only true God, we shall very plainly see that the kingdom of heaven which Jesus commanded his disciples to preach, is indeed at hand, and that we are entitled to the full enjoyment of this kingdom as the Bible teaches, for "in him we live, and move, and have our being." Recognizing this, that the place wherein we are, is "holy ground," as holy as God, how many of us would behave unseemly, debase ourselves or others in any way, lie, cheat, rob, believe that there is something in our environment to injure, infect, or impair us? Would not disease or lack of ease, which is disease of every kind in the making, be banished, and the ease and peace of being in the presence of our Father, God, have possession of us?

Where Truth is, there Christ is, for Christ is Truth even as Jesus said, "Where Christ is, there heaven is; and where Christ Jesus said, 'I am with you always,' does not this mean everywhere? Christian Science teaches that it does. Teaching this, it teaches that it is not strange that the sermon which Jesus bade his disciples to preach, should be, and there will be nothing strange about it if many of you here are healed by learning and remembering that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand,"—indeed, not only at hand but, as Jesus also said, "within you."

Within what "you"? How many of each one of us are there? No one would think of claiming aloud, so that he could hear himself do so, more than one of himself. Who or what is this one? In other words, What is man?

Man. If this question were asked at random, the answer would probably be that man is a fleshly mechanism or machine that walks on two feet, has two arms and hands, a trunk supported by what is called a head, supposed to have a little or a big mind inside of it, and the whole thing, mind and body, operated by chemical action and reaction. This is not a definition of the schools, but it amounts to about the same thing. It is no wonder that one of the ancients, to be witty and concise, defined man as a featherless biped. Now, how much of a man is a more featherless biped? Not very much, all will admit.

How then do we, can we, tell what man is? By much of God one might say. Jesus illustrated this. In response to Philip's request, "Show us the Father," Jesus said: "Have I been so long time with you, and yet have not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Had Philip seen the intelligence, power, Spirit, Life, Truth, and Love manifested by Jesus, and had he not seen a great deal of God and a great deal of man?

Jesus showed forth, illustrated the perfect man, but not because of his physique. He said, "The flesh profiteth nothing." Can that which is truly man or woman be shown forth by mere flesh and blood? "And God the all-intelligent, all-powerful, eternal, immortal, pure, and perfect Mind, Spirit, Principle, Life, Truth, and Love, let us make man in our image, after our likeness. So God created man in his own image, male and female created he them."

This godlike man, the man that God created, is the only kind of man there is. Whenever we see a man, woman, or child, we are seeing God in this man, the image, the symbol of this man, just as wherever we see a figure, a man, a woman, a child, we see that which stands for, indicates, or represents the perfect and only man there is in the universe.

I am not a man, as you know, do not see him; indeed, not to himself better, knows that he is a godlike man, and that his first and chief business is to be this man, he will think better, feel better, do better, and live longer. Knowing also who or what his neighbor really is, he will see through the strutting, fretting, or cringing mask of the "featherless biped" by which all have been deceived too long, and think better of him, treat him better, and love him more.

Matter. If what has been said about man is plain, it must be evident that man is primarily spiritual, as Mrs. Eddy teaches. If this conclusion be correct, then any evidence which would indicate a material man must be changed by the fact presented in order that the spiritual, which is the real, may become more and more apparent.

This does not mean that Christian Scientists claim to have no bodies, as is often asserted, or that by accepting the logical teaching that there is no matter, they climb from time to time such things as sun, moon, stars, earth, trees, flowers, or other phenomena which are called material. They see these things and enjoy them as much as others do, and indeed their vision and legitimate enjoyment of them have been enhanced by Christian Science. Still they maintain that there is no matter, and not only is this position impregnable, but so-called material science is fast conceding it to be true. Indeed, philosophers and scientists, although they have essayed to do so from time immemorial, have never been able to explain what matter is, and consequently have never been sure that it is matter. The individuals who are entirely certain that everything they cognize is matter are those alone to whom matter is matter because it is matter.

It has long been recognized that matter is merely the term used to designate all that is appreciable to the physical senses; but the nature of what is called matter remains absolutely unknown. Various theories have been advanced to explain matter, but these have always ended by explaining it away. The atomic theory, which was for a long time believed to explain it, was finally found to be absurd, because the absolute (not the chemical) atom would have to be an indivisible particle, having "an under and an upper surface, a right and a left side," and yet without extension in order to be incapable of being thought smaller. Such minuteness could never be reached by any thought-process. The theory of Descartes, that matter is composed of points of force, proved just as absurd, as a point of force could not have length, breadth, or thickness, neither could it be matter, and no number of points of force could form the minutest dimensional object. The theory that matter contains most widely, I believe, is that matter is formed of electrons, but no one knows what an electron is.

Thus, is it not plain that the nature of the constituent being unknown the nature of that which is constituted is unknown? In other words, until some one can tell us what matter is, no one will know that matter is. That you may be enlightened on this subject by those who have made a special study of it, I shall read a few extracts from the writings of some of the world's recognized scientific scholars.

Sir Oliver Lodge: "Sand is a debris of rocks, and fresh rocks can be compacted of sand." Very enlightening.

Edison: "We are still ignorant of the true character of electricity; indeed all the years all the years I have spent in studying electricity, it is more a mystery now than ever."

Sir Oliver Lodge, again: "The electrons themselves must be explained, and the only explanation which at present holds the field is that they are knots or twists, or vortices or some sort of etheric static or kinetic modifications of the ether of space, a small bit partitioned off from the rest and individualized by reason of the identifying peculiarity."

So much for the electron; I am sure that now you all know what matter is, because that is what it is said to be made of.

Prof. Karl Pearson of the University of London says: "Not matter that is even, but sense-impressions and change of sense-impressions."

Herbert Spencer wrote, as far back as 1880: "Matter, then, in its ultimate nature, is as absolutely incomprehensible as space and time. Frame what suppositions we may, we find that in their implications they leave us nothing but a choice between opposite absurdities."

The natural scientists are fast concluding that there is no matter, but they are doing so upon an entirely different basis from that of Mrs. Eddy. They are concluding that there is no matter because there are no tenable constituents that could make it such. Mrs. Eddy, on the other hand, while recognizing that what is called matter is to be dealt with in human experience, and that it can be satisfied with satisfaction and successfully only by rising above it step by step so far as possible and having the dominion over it which God gave man, also recognizes and reveals that God being Spirit, and Spirit being infinite and all, there is, and can be no matter.

The Cause and Cure of Ills. "Yes," I hear some say, "it is plain that if man is the image and likeness of God, he is like God, perfect, well, able, and never otherwise; blessed or happy, peaceful, intelligent, loving, and immortal; but human experience contradicts this. There is sin, sorrow, sickness, pain, death, suffering, dying, dead. What causes all this?"

Those who have to deal with what is commonly called sin and with what in a vague way is seen and acknowledged to be its effects, sickness and distress in their various forms,—and who is there that does not have to do so?—cannot help asking the cause of it all. Christian Scientists recognize this seeming power of evil, and far from being taught to ignore sin and sickness, they are taught to face them squarely, to acknowledge them, to love them, and to attribute them to things that attribute them to any legitimate cause.

Until the success of Christian Science healing of all kinds of diseases forced the schools to recognize mental processes, as at least a factor in both the procurement and the cure of ill, medical theories attributed sickness almost altogether to material causes and tried to cure it entirely by material means. While there have been changes, many of them not for the better, especially those leading to hypnotism instead of to God, in the main material means are still employed in the more serious or organic troubles.

Not so did Jesus look upon human ills, or treat them. In speaking of sin, which has death for its wages,—and most frequently with sickness as the hard pay-master doing them out,—the Master attributed it altogether to thought-processes. "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts," and "These are the things which defile a man," said this great Teacher. Again, speaking of sickness, he said, "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but the sinful beliefs entertained, finding expression, do so." Another proof that was the Master's attitude may be found in his statement, "Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing shall by any means hurt you."

That Jesus understood what degraded and defiled men was amply demonstrated by the fact that he reformed the most depraved and healed all manner of diseases; and this Christian Science, as a whole, following his methods, has also done. If he was right, and he certainly gave ample proof that he was, and if sin and sickness remain the rule instead of the exception, do not mankind still think wrongly, and are physical punishments for wrong-doing, and material remedies for wrong-being, or being sick, likely to cure them?

Jesus indicated the sources and the effect of right and wrong thoughts; but this had gone unheeded until Christian Science again revealed his teaching in speaking to the people of his time Jesus said, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life;" and speaking of his words, "The word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me." This translated would mean,—the true and life-giving thoughts I express emanate from God, the source of all good. Again, speaking of the destructive element in human experience, he said: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him." This also, translated, would mean that his hearers were the expressions of the thoughts or beliefs were untrue and the cause of all that these people were doing; their words, feelings, actions, circumstances, pleasures, and sufferings; that all that these people manifested in the way of sin, sickness, and death, was due to their untrue, wrong beliefs, their ignorance, or false education, the ultimate destructive agencies; the devil in whom there is no truth, the "murderer from beginning." Is not this the case today, notwithstanding two thousand years of Christian civilization, culture, education, and progress; and if Jesus were propounded to the Christian Science now, would not he still have occasion for the same summary?

"Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Who or what shall cure mankind of this mass of solid, mistaken beliefs or convictions which, according to Jesus, cause their ill? The Christ, the truth which Jesus taught and illustrated; the truth which he commanded his disciples to preach; the truth which Mrs. Eddy has again discovered and proclaimed, the truth of God and of man's godlike nature, the truth of the kingdom of God, the reign of immortal, unvarying Life and Love is at hand, available here and now; the truth that all are under the protection of this kingdom and must be obedient to its rule.

There are, no doubt, many here upon whom the burdens of the world, of the flesh, and of that in which there is no truth, the devil, weigh very heavily. Amazed at the simplicity of all that has been said, they feel that the burden is really being taken off their backs. Let them remind themselves that to be free is imperative to know the truth, for that alone is able to emancipate. Let them remember that this truth is, that now there is a God; an infinite and ever-present God, who is the Father, God, Spirit, not matter, the Spirit that is Love. Let them remember that each and every one is the reflection of this God, having nothing undervalued from him and subject to nothing but him. Let them "judge not according to the appearance," but this righteous judgment about themselves and others, and conform to this judgment in thought and action as far as possible. When they have done this steadfastly, loyally, unceasingly for a week, a month, a year, let them compare their thoughts, feelings, actions, abilities, health, capacities, with those they formerly manifested, and see if they have not improved. Doing this, they will begin to practice Christian Science, the Christianity of Jesus Christ.

It was this life-purpose, this life-mission, so clearly seen by Jesus when only twelve years old, which prompted him to say, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" In other words, know ye not that as man, the image and likeness of God, I must show forth our Father, omnipotent Life, Truth, and Love? It was this reflection of the Father, the divine Spirit, without measure, that enabled Jesus to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, to be Immanuel, "God with us."

The Discovery and Discoverer. "I am the way, the truth, and the life," said Jesus. It was the recognition of this, the recognition that no man has any other way or truth or life, that no man has any other mission more precious than that which Jesus had, which led Mrs.

Eddy to her discovery of this Science. It healed her when at the point of death as the result of an accident, but she did not stop with that. Nothing short of the prospective healing of the world could satisfy her burning heart. She practiced what she had discovered, healing others and teaching them in turn to do the same. She made clear her doctrine in a text-book of this Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," a book which has done more for the alleviation of human ills and the reclamation of mankind than any book ever written except the Bible. She wrote other books making clear her meaning; organized the church which now spreads its branches over the whole known world, with members numbering hundreds of thousands who like her and her immediate followers have been healed, many of them of what are called incurable diseases. Thousands of these, out of gratitude for what has been done for them, have taken up their pens to tell the sacred ministry of making God better known through healing the sick, proving that He is a very present help in trouble.

Mrs. Eddy gave to the movement all its publications: The Christian Science Journal, a monthly magazine; The Christian Science Sentinel, a weekly; and a daily paper, The Christian Science Monitor, that has taken its place in the front rank of daily newspapers and is the pioneer of absolutely clean journalism. In addition to this, she has given to the German-reading public a monthly magazine, Der Herold der Christian Science. She has also instituted the form of service for all Christian Science churches, issuing the Bible Lessons for this purpose in a Quarterly, These Lesson-Sermons are studied daily by Christian Scientists all over the world, and are read to all churches every Sunday, making the service uniform throughout.

The vast work is due to the fact that Mrs. Eddy was healed through the Christ, Truth, and that she had the wisdom, courage, and unswerving faith in God enabling her to show others the way to be healed and saved according to His teachings, which constitute Christian Science. Looking back fifty years, when the idea of spiritual healing through Christian Science was new to the world, and tracing its progress, one can see, though dimly, the difficulties which this noble woman must have encountered. Through unimagined able hardship, trial, and persecution she bore herself not with mere fortitude, but with a Christlike confidence which will continue to be an ever increasing inspiration to mankind. Christian Science Not Hypnotism. In the text-book of Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy has devoted a whole chapter to the subject "Prayer," and a whole chapter to the subject "Christian Science Practice." If she had written nothing else, done nothing else, her elucidation of these subjects would have placed her in the front rank of thinkers and immortalized her. The careful study of these chapters and of the whole book is recommended to all, and only a word will be said in explanation of these chapters. All will probably agree that prayer, in its highest sense, is loving and sincere communion with God. Some of the definitions of the word "communion" are: "Sympathetic intercourse; intimate and helpful association; fellowship." Most obviously, nothing could have more sympathetic intercourse, more intimate association, or closer fellowship with God, than man reflecting God. This reflection becomes possible only by learning to know clearly what God is, what man is, and what constitutes the reign of God "in earth, as it is in heaven." It becomes possible only by learning to bring every thought into obedience to Christ, Truth, through unceasing silent communion, or prayer; through rising step by step and in as great degree as possible, into the stature of the fulness of Christ, until the truth and perfection of God and of man's godlikeness are radiated and expressed by "signs following."

The signs of healing accompanied by spiritual regeneration, the healing being incidental to this regeneration in true Christian Science practice. That this devout method has nothing in common with any other method is self-evident. To charge it with being in any way tainted with hypnotism or so-called mental therapeutics, or any new or old unchristian thought, is to charge it as Jesus was charged when he answered, "If I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you."

Conclusion. The process leading to this Christian practice is educational. It is not only a higher education, but the very highest; an educational transcending the human beliefs called knowledge, as God's thoughts transcend them. This education is Christian and it is scientific, so it must be Christian Science. Who, looking out upon a war and woe rent world, will say that this education is not needed, or that it is not of supreme importance? Who will not acknowledge that not only the supplication "The kingdom come" is needed, but the understanding also that the kingdom is come, and that every man, woman, and child is a sacred idea or state of the divine consciousness, and for this reason to be held inviolate and inviolable?

Mrs. Eddy says, "When the omnipotence of God is preached and His absoluteness is set forth, Christian Science will heal the sick" (Science and Health, p. 345). It is this higher education, which Christian Science is again bringing to the world, that is dispelling the darkness of both religious and irreligious agnosticism, and thus removing the fears and torments of this not knowing. It rejudges all with the unerring, righteous judgment of Truth and Love, and redeems, restores, and regenerates suffering multitudes from all kinds of sin and sickness; and it is doing this by again preaching, as Jesus commanded, the kingdom of God not at hand and within; by preaching, teaching, that all are the children of God, subject only to God, good, who alone legitimately rules, and that "of such is the kingdom of God."

The Messiah or deliverer who was looked for, hoped for, prayed for by seers and prophets of old, who was not recognized and therefore was rejected when he came in fleshly form unto his own, is again, as "the Comforter," "the Spirit of truth," Christian Science, knocking for admission. There is again some commotion, but many are admitting this incorporeal savior. Those that are doing so are being led "beside the still waters" and "in the paths of righteousness." They are being led into more abundant life, health, peace, freedom, prosperity, and happiness. They are being led into all truth,—the understanding of the first and great commandment, "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord." Hear, O all mankind! the power that is over us and over all is one power, and that power is God, good.

SLEEPER AND LELAND CLOSE

LEAD CANDIDATES FOR GOVER-NOR IN COUNTY

Incomplete Returns From All Parts of County—Hinkley Loses to Morford.

Many surprises were sprung as the result of the battle of ballots in Tuesday's primary. Candidates who figured on a sure thing are now wondering what happened to them, and well planned campaigns were shot to smithereens by the votes cast by the residents of the county. This is one feature of the primary—no one has a sure thing and all are forced to submit to the will of the voters.

In the five-corner fight for state representative, Jacob E. Chew, of South Arm township won out by 93 votes, with R. W. Paddock, of Charlevoix, in second place.

Of the three candidates for prosecutor, Rollie L. Lewis showed his ability to hold his own and won by a majority of 131.

Richard Lewis will still hold down the job as county clerk for the next two years. "Dick's" ability as a vote getter is shown by the result published in tabulated form on this page.

When the new county officers take the oath of office January 1, but one stranger will appear with the court house bunch. This change will take place in the office of register of deeds, M. A. McDonald winning over R. A. Emrey, who has filled this office for several years.

One of the surprises of the primary was the excellent run made by Frank M. House, of Boyne Falls, for the office of county road commissioner. Mr. House is a new comer in the political arena, and will undoubtedly make good in the office to which he was elected.

Available reports are quite evident that J. Lee Morford, of Gaylord, will succeed himself for the office of state senator. D. H. Hinkley, of Petoskey, made a splendid run, but will fall short several hundred votes to make the goal he sought. Six out of seven counties give Morford from 50 to 100 majority, with Montmorency to hear from, and indications are that this county will go two to one for Morford.

A. E. Sleeper received the largest number of votes in Charlevoix county for governor, with Frank B. Leland a close second. In the state the result is unknown as yet. In 36 counties the vote for governor is as follows:

Sleeper 15,696
Leland 10,688
Diekmann 8,987

In Emmet county, Miller won out for sheriff, Duell for representative, White for judge of probate, Markham for treasurer and Sweeney for prosecutor.

Below is the incomplete vote of Charlevoix county by precincts.

DUCK SEASON OPENS SEPT. 15

NEW FEDERAL LAW CHANGES
OPENING DATE

Will Not Be Legal to Hunt the Water Fowl Sept. 1 Despite Michigan Statute.

The state game commissioner was officially notified August 23 of an important change in the duck shooting laws of the United States.

The notification is of an act of congress which became operative August 15.

Duck will not be huntable in Michigan September 1, as the state laws permit and as nearly all duck hunters expect. Instead, it will not be lawful to hunt duck until September 15. The season's end will remain the same so far as Michigan is concerned, December 15.

The new federal law makes the open season September 15 to December 31, but at the same time provides that where a state law closes the season earlier than December 31, the state law shall govern.

The change of the federal law comes after a series of changes by congress as to migratory birds, all of which, with the exception of this last one, Michigan has followed with statutes of her own. The 1915 legislature changed the date of the open season from September 15 to September 1, because congress changed the federal law. Now congress has changed back to the old Michigan date once more.

The new federal law include duck, coots, gallinules and all shore birds and water fowl with the exception of plover and woodcock. The latter cannot be hunted legally until 1918.

The game commissioner's office is trying its best to notify everybody who hunt duck not to sally forth on Friday this week to hunt the fowl. If they do they are liable to arrest.

Found Dead in Bed.

W. H. Sheldon, representative of the Lansing Building & Loan association, and well known in this city, died very suddenly at the home of his daughter, on Wednesday night, August 23. He had been in poor health for some time, but apparently was feeling as well as usual upon retiring for the night. Failing to respond upon being called in the morning, it was found that he had died during the night.

POWERS TO FACE OTHER CHARGES

NOTED PRISONER TAKEN BACK TO ILLINOIS

Crime for Which He Is Wanted Was Committed in Small Town Near Rock Island.

Harry Powers, star witness for the people in the Germaine arson case, was taken to Rock Island, Illinois, Monday to answer to the charge of murder and robbery, the crime being the robbing of a bank and the murder of the cashier in 1912 in a small town near Rock Island.

Sheriff Jesse Hanna and State's Attorney Floyd E. Thompson, of Rock Island county, came to Traverse City on the 11:20 p. m. train on the Pere Marquette, Saturday night and they left this morning on the 5:40. They had secured the necessary requisition papers from Gov.
Ferris and in the document the accused was referred to as Harry Hampton, alias Harry Smith, alias Michigan Smith, alias Harry Powers, alias George Blair.

Powers was arrested in Detroit,
February 22, by Under Sheriff La-hym, and brought here on the 25th.
From Detroit to Grand Rapids a Detroit detective accompanied Lahym as Powers' desperate character was known. At Grand Rapids they were met by Sheriff Campbell and the latter and Lahym escorted the prisoner to Traverse City. He was nominally taken on a charge of breaking and entering a number of summer cottages but the real reason for his arrest was that he was suspected of knowing something about the fire at the Mrs. O. D. Germaine home on January 24. He was never arraigned on the charge for which he was apprehended and he never asked for arraignment or trial. About the middle of April he broke out of jail with two other prisoners but was recaptured at Charlevoix a week latter. Since that time he made several attempts to regain his liberty but was so closely watched that he never got much farther than to make a few scratches on the steel plating. In Illinois he is said to have been a pal of Clyde Stratton, a noted and desperate crook. Stratton was confined in the state penitentiary at Joliet, Illinois, but managed to break out about five weeks ago.

Word of his escape came to the sheriff's office here and since that time whenever Sheriff Campbell went to the door to admit a stranger, he took an automatic with him, not caring to take any chances on any attempt at rescuing Powers.

Powers probably is one of the smoothest and most hardened crooks that ever entered northern Michigan.
He is a strong personality, of remarkable keen brain and with a personal charm about him that gained him admission to the homes of prominent citizens and business men in Charlevoix last year when he spent the summer there. At that time he had plenty of money, wore the finest of clothes and claimed to be a real estate salesman out on vacation. At the time of his escape from the Grand Traverse jail many of the best people in Charlevoix sympathized with him. They believed that he was being illegally detained in jail in order to be available as a witness in the arson case and could not credit the report of his real character and record.—Record-Eagle, August 28.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

New furnace in Ironton school being installed with state approved plans. This will make a big improvement in the room in cleanliness, even distribution of heat, economy in fuel, ventilation and sanitation.

The county examination for teachers was truly hard. The state superintendent has raised the standard for third and second grade certificates so that considerable advanced study is necessary in order to pass the new sets of questions which he prepares. Taking county normal or state normal training is the only way in which to escape the inevitable results of the examination laws.

The school credit for home work system will be introduced into the Charlevoix county schools this fall. Material now in the printer's hands.

Walloon's carpenter is busy on the bank of windows at the left in the high room. The foul air flues of the furnace system have already been removed from the partition and placed where they are guaranteed to ventilate.

The commissioner has joined the Commissioners' Round Table of Central Michigan to learn what other commissioners are doing.

Phelps is busy working on some of the finishing touches now.

The Walker school has been fairly booming. You know a part of what they are doing and you may soon have the privilege of learning their plans entire and complete.

The German or Knop school is redecorating the walls and ceiling in the correct shades of cream, buff, and light brown as recommended by eye specialists for interior decoration of working rooms. They are also ordering new globe, new dictionary, drinking fountain and repairs for the teacher's desk.

The Curfew school in Melrose has received bids on the remodeling of the school house for one side lighting and warm cloak rooms.

New maps and recommended text in arithmetic at Marion Center.

A new book case at the Curfew school.

FROM COAST TO COAST

A Remarkable Chain of Home Testimony. And Charlevoix Adds Its Voice to the Grand Chorus of Local Praise.

From north to south, from east to west:

In every city, every community; In every state in the Union Rings out the grateful praise for Doan's Kidney Pills.

30,000 representative people in every walk of life. Publicly testify to quick relief and lasting results.

And it's all for the benefit of fellow sufferers.

In this grand chorus of local praise Charlevoix is well represented.

Well-known Charlevoix people Tell of personal experiences. Who can ask for better proof of merit?

Mrs. John Cook, 307 Mason St., Charlevoix, says: "I know that Doan's Kidney Pills are a fine remedy. I have used them at different times for kidney complaint and they have always given me relief. I have procured Doan's Kidney Pills at the Fry Drug Store and I don't hesitate to recommend them."

Prize, etc., at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Cook had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Teacher's new desk and chair and single post adjustable seats ordered at Marion Center, new adjustable seats ordered at Horton Bay, at Camp 23, and new seats already received at Walloon Lake.

We have some hustling school officers in some of our district schools and they are on the job every minute.

Repaired roof, new seats, and a new hard wood floor at the Easton school in Melrose. You will scarcely know this little room when the work is finished.

Camp 23 or Forest Hill school is building new cloak rooms for installing the chemical toilets which have already arrived. It looks mighty fine.

Seating schedules now in the printer's hands giving correct number of inches apart and method of placing school desks.

Get your fair work mounted and ready for display. Something doing from your school?

A second new standard plate has arrived by express and will soon be presented to one of your neighboring schools.

If the commissioner has not heard the news from your school this week, she will be glad to hear from you. At any rate she will soon be around to see you.

Can of Fruit Explodes.

Mary Cole, nine year old daughter of Frank Cole, of Boyne City, was seriously scalded late last week, when a can of cherries exploded in her hands.

Several cans of fruit were over the fire in boiling water. The little girl reached up and secured one of the cans, attempting to open it. The can burst throwing the scalding fluid and cherries over her face and upper body.

Dr. Fischer was summoned at once and found the little girl's face badly scalded. A cherry pit was forced up her nostril and was not extracted until the following day. For a time it was feared she would lose the sight of one eye.

Aged Farmer Killed by Train.

Marshall Sweanor, aged farmer living north of Conway, was seriously injured about his head and shoulders when his wagon was struck by train No. 6 on the G. R. & I., due into Petoskey at 8:35 a. m. Tuesday morning of last week, at the road crossing north of Conway.

Mr. Sweanor was driving, across the track with a load of cucumbers and evidently either tried to get across ahead of the train or did not hear or see the train at all.

The engine caught the rear end of his wagon, demolishing it and throwing him for three or four rods. The horses were uninjured. Mr. Sweanor struck on his head and shoulders, causing his injuries. The front end of the engine was completely plastered with cucumbers.

The train crew brought the injured man to Petoskey and he was taken to Petoskey hospital where he died the following day.

Mr. Sweanor is the father of Benjamin Sweanor, who operates the farm, and Oscar Sweanor, who has been located in Petoskey. He was coming to Petoskey with his load of cucumbers for the local market.

Mrs. Will Lynn is at Rapid City with her sister, who is ill.

The families of John and Peter Nasson motored to East Jordan, Sunday, visiting with friends and relatives.

One week of work will complete the crushed hard head stone road commencing at the limits of East Jordan and as far north as the Eveline Orchard fruit farm.

Mrs. Hunter and son, Harry, of Grand Rapids, are visiting at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Knudsen.

The picnic given by Ironton was a decided success. A fine program was rendered. All political speeches censored, thanks to our committee.

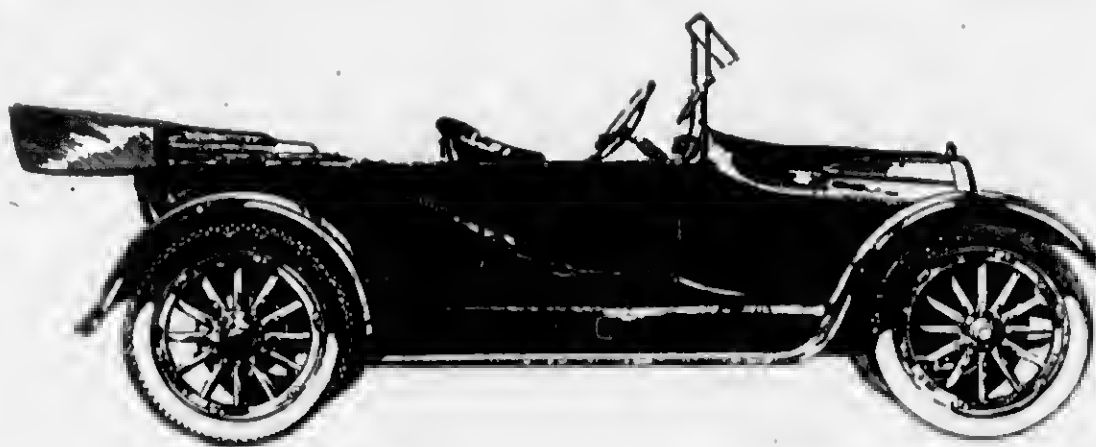

is possible? It would be better for him to either haul a load over his poor road to the good road, there unload it and go back and get another load and when he reaches the good road, reload the one he had hauled there and so go on to town.

This, of itself, is proof that good roads are profitable and a great economizer of both time and wear and tear. There are lots of ways to make money, but none easier nor more positive than this way. Concrete roads can now be built nine feet wide, with shoulders on either side of crushed hard heads, making a 17 foot road, for approximately $2,000 a mile more than the nine foot gravel road that we are now building.

Have you any idea what it would mean if we had such a road on the entire west end of our county to accommodate the tourists who come up the Dixie Highway and West Michigan Pike and then to have a concrete road that would run from Charlevoix to Boyne City, from Boyne City to Boyne Falls, from Boyne City to East Jordan and from East Jordan to the west end of the county to accommodate that business? (Continued on page nine.)

What Is Good for One Should Be Good for All.

Anybody can work for himself, be selfish, friendless, accumulate money and property, die, be buried and not be missed. Not the selfish interests of one or a few, but the welfare of all must be the standard rule for every transaction. In the building of roads, all must work together for the common good. If a man cannot have a good road come to his own farm, but can get it a short distance away, is it not his duty and to his advantage to have it come to as near his own farm as

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank all those who ordered furnaces last week, also those who read my ad. It is some job to write an ad, and I always feel good when I am sure that it has been read. I also wish to state that I may have to discontinue the sale of PENINSULAR FURNACES as the coal dealers are making such a fuss. They all claim the sale of a Peninsular Furnace cuts down their output. However, I am determined to sell a few more, so get your order in quick if you need a furnace. Hoping you haven't got a furnace I beg to remain.

Yours truly,

THEATRICAL

"Beyond the Law."

An exciting new American play in four acts by America's foremost playwright, Mr. J. Gibson Irving, which will be offered by the Kirk Stock company at Charlevoix, week of September 4, gives you a look into the workings of high finance, and the methods used by the crooked money kings in ridding their ranks of those who block their thefts, and how they freeze out the smaller stockholders. The play pictures the suffering of a wronged man and his family, and shows how the mills of the god's grind out the problem until the sorrow and suffering reverts to the family whose head caused all pain. The play comes heralded as a sensation and the edities of the larger cities declared it one of the most absorbing, thrilling and altogether delightful plays which has reached the stage in many a day. That the public endorsed this opinion is evident by the continued popularity of this drama where it has been presented by The Kirk Stock Co. for without the endorsement of the public no play could ever so thoroughly smash records as "Beyond the Law" has done. It may be termed the acme of melodrama, and in addition to its surprises and thrills it contains an abundance of riproaring hilarious comedy, the above coupled with an excellent company of players portraying it, gives promise of a pleasant evening entertainment. High class vaudeville between acts. Prices 10c, 20c and 30c. Ladies admitted free Monday night on usual conditions.

"Destruction."

Ferdinand, wickedness incarnate, whose glance breeds madness, her touch destruction, is the latest role to be created by Bara the incomparable. Snared by her fascinations, Mr. Froment, a wealthy mill owner, marries the bewitching Ferdinand. By her machinations Ferdinand and his son, Jack, become estranged. She intrigues with Deleveau, his partner, recklessly squanders his wealth and when she needs more contrives to have the scanty wages of the mill laborers still further reduced. A strike is the result. On top of this Froment discovers his wife's infidelity. The shock is too much for a weakened heart and he succumbs, leaving his property to his son. Not content with the evil she has wrought, Ferdinand arouses against Jack the hatred of Dave, an uncouth monster of the mill furnace room. She hints to Dave that his wife is too friendly with Jack and goads him into an attack upon his employer. From this point, the action is hair-raising in its breathless intensity. Climax on climax, it speeds to a terrific and spectacular finish. At the Majestic, Monday, September 4.

"The Scarlet Woman."

The story of "The Scarlet Woman" portrays with artistic fidelity the life of a noble-hearted woman, who after making a supreme sacrifice for her winking husband, when he is in the shadow of the gallows, is east off by him on the expiration of the short term of imprisonment which her sacrifice had won for him. Now, spurned by the world she had known, she becomes a woman without heart or conscience, preying on all who come under the spell of her beauty. How the unscrupulous district attorney, who has wrought her ruin, in his turn is disgraced, largely through information that she is able to furnish the reform party who seek his downfall. How he, eager for revenge upon her and the man responsible for the reform wave that has engulfed him, arranges for their meeting; how a deep and sin-

PEARSON HAS A CHANCE FOR RECOVERY

Well Known Resident of Boyne Falls Stricken With Appendicitis.

W. J. Pearson, head of the state forestry and fire department work, who was stricken with appendicitis last week and taken to the Petoskey hospital, is reported to be in a critical condition, but hopes are held out for his recovery.

When being operated on it was found that the appendix had burst and that he was in very bad shape.
Reports received today state that he rested well last night and if he continues to withstand the ravages of the poison which spread through the lower part of his body, when the appendix burst, he should recover within a few weeks.

Mr. Pearson is widely known all over Michigan, having been representative in the legislature from this county, besides holding county offices, deputy game and fish warden. It is the hope of his many friends here that his recovery will be a speedy one.

GARDEN PARTY DANCE

A GREAT SUCCESS

Inn Casino Scene of a Very Enjoyable Joyable Evening.

The garden party dance given at The Inn last Thursday evening was the best entertainment ever furnished in The Inn Casino.

Miss Helen Armstrong, who has had charge of the dancing and entertainment at The Inn during the present season displayed splendid taste in the decorations and choosing of favors.

As a compliment to her the ball room was filled, and the guests were all beautifully and appropriately dressed. To carry out the garden scheme the ball room was decorated to represent a summer garden. There were hundreds of artificial butterflies fluttering from the ceiling, and the sides of the room were banked in green and sun flowers. Colored lights were strung about the lawn, which gave the effect of a Venetian night.

The favors were many and varied, consisting of gayly colored parasols and canes, flowers and flower baskets, balloons, horns and blowers. The dance closed with the throwing of colored serpentine over all the dancers, which made a very effective ending.

CHARLEVOIX BAKERS

BOOST PRICE OF BREAD

High Cost of Flour and Other Materials
Make This Necessary.

Charlevoix bakers Monday morning advanced the price of bread 20 per cent per loaf, making a five-cent loaf cost six cents and a ten-cent loaf cost twelve cents.

Fried cakes and doughnuts, formerly sold for 12 cents per dozen, have been raised to 15 cents, and cookies a like proportion. Grocers that were selling bread for five cents have made the same boost per loaf. The raise in price did not come without warning for customers had been told of the raise in advance, and knew that the raise was one that could not be helped, with the price of flour at the high notch it now occupies.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages. That is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

SEARCHED FROM HEAD TO FOOT

TRAVELERS LEAVING GER- MANY STRIPPED TO SKIN

Official Very Careful That Their War Plans Are Not Carried Out of Country.

Everyone who leaves Germany via Warnemunde for Denmark is stripped to the skin. Ears, nose, teeth and toes are examined to see that no information or plans for the enemy are being carried out.

Reichstag members, wives of officials, correspondents and laborers are treated the same.

An American crossing the border recently remarked that before long it would be necessary for the inspection station to be built into the Baltic sea so that the travelers could undress on the German border, walk into the water and swim to a waiting station near the ferry and wait for the clothes and baggage to be examined and forwarded by canoe.

When travelers leave the train they enter a small wooden shed, resembling in many respects a temporary bath house, at an American bench. Here the passports are taken away and shoved into an enclosed room where they are examined. The holders are given numbers.

When the passport of a traveler is finished he is called to another room where he is questioned about the object of his journey. From here the wayfarer goes to a large room when the baggage is examined while detectives stand in front and in back to see that nothing is slipped by.

Every scrap of paper or card board is taken away, even wrappings and paper lining to boxes. Cotton is removed from medicine bottles. Cigars are examined, some are cut open, chocolate in sealed packages is opened, the wrapping destroyed and half the chocolate broken up into bits to see that nothing is hidden.

Shoes with a new half sole are opened. The searcher feels everything, examines canes to see whether they are hollow, opens umbrellas, holds every collar up to the light to see that nothing is written on the lining.

"After the baggage is examined," said an American woman who crossed the border recently, "the men and women are taken into separate compartments, about the size of a large individual bath house and there every bit of clothing is removed. Women are examined by women, men by men."

"The searcher went through every piece of my clothes, examined the border of my underwear and held almost every inch of my clothes up to the light. Even the roses I wore were examined petal by petal, my wrist watch was opened back and front, so also my shoes, umbrella and hat."

"I had to take down my hair and my scalp was examined thoroughly—I suppose to see that I didn't have a map of Metz concealed thereon. Then my ears, teeth, hands, toes and back were examined, but fortunately I was not a suspicious woman because I was not washed in alcohol to see if there were any concealed maps drawn on my skin. The alcohol and a basin of water with towels were there and on a shelf I noticed a bottle of aromatic spirits of ammonia and drinking water for those who might faint under examination, but in every way the women were courteous and gentle."

After that was over the passengers were permitted to board the ship but there they soon encountered a score of spies who watched for every move and who listened to every remark. The Germans take no chances with anyone.

Articles which were taken away during the examination are wrapped up before the eyes of the traveler and posted back to an address he gives of any friends in Berlin. Only suspicious articles are confiscated.

The City Manager

(A series of articles on a new type of municipal government, which is spreading rapidly.)

Local System Found to Be Great Money-Saver for Manistee

(From Grand Rapids News.)

In order to find out how successful the city manager plan of government has proved to be in Manistee, The Grand Rapids News asked Harry W. Musselwhite, formerly of Grand Rapids, but now the publisher of the Manistee News-Advocate, to tell the story. He has done so very well, as the following will show:

By HARRY W. MUSSELWHITE.

Since May 1, 1914, Manistee has enjoyed a modern and efficient system of city administration—the city manager form of commission government. In the first two years of its operation this has resulted in a saving of over $30,000 to the taxpayers in city maintenance charges, without any retrenchment or curtailment of improvements.

Under the plan in vogue here the city is governed by a commission of five men, each elected for a five-year term, each a representative of the entire community and not of any defined section of the city. The position of mayor is assumed by the senior commissioner each year, and this order of rotation as the head of the responsible cabinet gives a four-years' qualifying course on the administrative council to each prospective head of the city government.

Commissioners are elected by the voters at large and party lines are eliminated. The commissioners choose the city manager, a salaried official, and in this instance have been particularly fortunate in their choice. Charles E. Ruger, Manistee's city manager, ranks among the foremost directors of destinies of cities under the form of government, and during his better than two years in the position has justified his selection by saving the city many times the salary paid him.

Greater efficiency has been brought about in all departments of the city's upkeep problem; the responsibility, too, has been more definitely fixed, enabling the citizen with a grievance to get action in the shortest possible time.

Manistee now has 14 miles of paved streets, or better than a mile per thousand of population, as well as over 75 miles of cement sidewalks. The entire 14 miles of paved streets are cleared each night during the spring summer and fall by the city. The water works department, owned and operated by the city, is free from indebtedness and has a substantial balance in the bank to its credit.

Concrete examples of what the city manager plan has saved the city are:

Revocation of an old ordinance which permitted a surplus fund in addition and not included in the regular budget of appropriations of approximately $14,000 yearly. This was an assessed valuation on real and personal property equal to one-fourth of 1 per cent, for "slush-fund" or "pork barrel" purposes.

At present no rubber goods of any kind can be taken out no matter if it is the most necessary article. Not an ounce of rubber leaves Germany today.

Fat Folks May Now Become Slim Quickly

Be Moderate in Your Diet, Breathe Deeply, and Take Tassco

Fat persons, particularly those from 10 to 30 pounds above normal weight will be interested to learn that they may easily reduce their weight without starvation diet or tiresome exercise.

This can best be done by being moderate in your diet, so that you will not over-tax your assimilative organs, by getting plenty of fresh air, by breathing deeply and taking tassco four times a day.

Tassco may be obtained from any druggist in 5-grain tablets, take one after each meal and one before retiring at night. They cost little, are absolutely harmless, are pleasant to take and are designed to reduce fatty accumulations in the system wherever located.

A few days' treatment should show a noticeable reduction in weight, the flesh should become firm, the skin smooth and the general health improved, in fact your footsteps should even become lighter, your work seem easier and a lighter and more buoyant feeling take possession of your whole being.

Every person who is 10 or 20 pounds over normal weight should surely give this treatment a trial. You will probably find that it is just what you need.

Reduction in operating expenses in police, fire and water departments of $5,000 yearly.

Restoring condemned trunk sewer at an expense of $1,200, relieving the city of the expense proposed by the former council in bonding the city for $35,000 to replace it. The trunk sewer is now in satisfactory operation.

Repairing and recovering all paved streets in the city and building more than one mile of new pavement.

Adoption of many new forms for the purpose of securing accurate information pertaining to operating conditions, as well as costs in maintenance and permanent improvements, establishing the following:

Purchase order system.

Daily and semi-monthly labor time slips.

Superintendents' daily reports of all work done.

Schools, buildings, and theatres monthly inspection reports.

Vault card index for all records for handy and quick-reference.

Fire hydrant and fire alarm box records.

Improved street cleaning methods, with entire elimination of water street sprinkling.

The tax rate per thousand prior to the commission form of government was $38.15. At present it is $30.76, which includes the state, county, roads, school, city and library apportionments.

The reduction in the clerical force in the city offices alone more than offsets the manager's salary.

Thus far over 630 water meters have been installed for previous flat rate consumers, thereby decreasing the water pumpage and operating expense, with a substantial decrease in the rate to consumers.

An important accomplishment of the present administration has been the establishment of a direct roadway to Lake Michigan and a municipal bathing beach, which has been enjoyed by many thousands of residents and visitors this year.

Ask any citizen of Manistee how he'd like to return to the old form of government, and unless he is one of the "professional politician" class of chronic office seekers, the answer will be an emphatic "NEVER."

The results in this city have been highly satisfactory under the city manager-commission form of government.

INSTALLING SCIENCE DEPT.

Milling Company Feels They Can Help Housewives of the State.

The Valley City Milling company, manufacturers of the well known brand of Lily White Flour, has entered an entirely new field of work for a commercial firm, having recently organized a Domestic Science and Home Economics department for the benefit of their patrons and friends throughout the state.

Women as a whole are interested in the questions pertaining to the household, and the problem of feeding the family well and economically is one of the utmost importance.

It is the intention of the company to equip a Model Kitchen in Grand Rapids where various kitchen utensils will be tried out, and the most efficient recommended to the housewives.

There will be talks, discussions and frequent demonstrations on various phases of the food problem. All work done will be thoroughly practical, and carried on under conditions similar to those in the home.

Food qualities, household utensils, prices, house furnishings, food for children, the planning of meals, the making and altering of recipes, comparison of home-made and factory-made products, the preservation of food and all other subjects pertaining to the new and more efficient house-keeping will be dealt with by the department.

That the housewives of the state may come in touch with the movement, a correspondence department has been organized and everyone may feel free to consult the head of the department on any questions pertaining to home economics and domestic science, and be assured of receiving accurate information and prompt service.

The IRON TRAIL

BY REX BEACH

Copyright, 1913, by Harper & Brothers.

CHAPTER XXI.

Gordon Loses His Mind.

ONE evening his Captain Johnny Brennan stood on the dock superintending the final loading of a cargo for the B. I. and N. he was accosted by a tall nervous man with shifting eyes and twitching lips. It was hard to recognize in this pitiable creature the once resplendent Gordon, who had bent the whole northland to his ends. Some tantalizing demons inside the man's frame were jerking at his sinews. Fear was in his roving glance. He stammered. He plucked at the little captain's sleeve like a frightened woman. The open hearted Irishman was touched.

"Yes," said Johnny after listening for a time. "I'll take you with me, and they won't catch you either."

Gordon clattered: "All pay you well, handsomely. I'm a rich man. I have interests that demand attention, so accept this money. Please! Keep it all, my good fellow."

Brennan stared at the bundle Gordon had thrust into his hand, then regarded the speaker curiously.

"Man, dear," he said, "this isn't money. These are stock certificates."

"Eh? Stock? Well, there's money in stocks, big money. If you know how to handle them." The promoter's wandering eye shifted to the line of stereos trailing their tracks into the hold, then up to the crane with its straining burden of bridge material. Every package was stenciled with his rival's name, but he exclaimed:

"Bravo, captain! We'll be up to the summit by Christmas. No graft! No incompetence! The utmost publicity in corporate affairs—that's our platform. We're destined for a glorious success. Glorious success!"

"Go aboard and lie down," Brennan said gently. "You need a good sleep. Then, calling a steward, he ordered, 'Show Mr. Gordon to my cabin and give him what he wants.'"

He watched the tall figure stumble up the gangplank and shook his head. "The utmost publicity," is it? Well, it's your that's getting it now. And to think that you're the man with the mines and the railroads and the widows! I'm afraid you'll be in Irons when she sees you. But that's no good a finish as you deserve, after all."

The building of the Salmon river bridge will not soon be forgotten by engineers and men of science.

Nowhere else in the history of bridge building had such conditions been encountered; nowhere on earth had work of this character been attended with greater hazards; never had circumstances created a situation of more dramatic interest. By many the whole venture was regarded as a reckless gamble; for more than a million dollars had been risked on the chance not alone that O'Neil could build supports which the ice could not demolish, but that he could build them under the most serious difficulties in record breaking time. For more than the mere cost of the structure hinged upon his success; failure would mean that his whole investment up to that point would be wiped out, to say nothing of the $200,000 project of a trunk line up the valley of the Salmon.

Had the government permitted the Kynk coal fields to be opened up the lower reaches of the B. I. and N. would have had a rival, but all activity in that region had been throttled, and the policy of delay and indecision at headquarters promised no relief.

The actual erection of steel work was impossible during the coldest months; Parker had planned only to rush the piers, abutments and false work to completion so that he could take advantage of the mild spring weather preceding the breakup. The execution of this plan was in itself an unparalleled undertaking, making it necessary to hire double crews of picked men. Yet, as the weeks wore into months the intricate details were wrought out one by one and preparations were completed for the great race.

Late in March Dan Appleton went to the front, taking with him his wife and his sister, for whom O'Neil had thoughtfully prepared suitable living quarters. The girls were as hungry as Dan to have a part in the deciding struggle, or at least to see it close at hand, for the spirit of those engaged in the work had entered them also. Life at Ouar of late had been rather uneventful, and they looked forward with pleasure to a renewal of those companionship relations which had made the summer months so full of interest and delight. But they were disappointed. Life at the end of the line they found to be a very grim, a very earnest, and in some respects an extremely disagreeable affair; the feverish, unceasing activity of their friends left no time for companionship or recreation of any sort. More and more they, too, came to feel the sense of heat and strain pervading the whole army of workers, the weight of responsibility that bore upon the commander. Dan became almost a stranger to them, and when they saw him he was greeted by vital issues. Mellen was gruff and irritable; Parker in his preoccupation ignored everything but his duties. Of all their former comrades O'Neil alone seemed aware of their presence. But behind his smile they saw the lurking worries; in his eyes was an abstraction they could not penetrate, in his bearing the futility of a man tried to the breaking point.

To Eliza there was a certain joy merely in being near the man she loved, even though she could not help being hurt by his apparent indifference. The long weeks without sight of him had deepened her feeling and she had turned for relief to the writing of her book—the natural outlet for her repressed emotions. Into its pages she had poured all her passion, all her yearning; and she had written with an intimate understanding of O'Neil's ambitions and aims which later gave the story its unique success as an epic of financial romance.

There was a nature which could not be content with idleness. She took up the work that she and Natalie had begun, devoting herself most trustfully yet effectively to making O'Neil comfortable.

It was a labor of love, done with no expectation of reward; it thrilled her, filling her with mingled sadness and satisfaction. But if Murray noticed the improvement in his surroundings, which she sometimes doubted, he evidently attributed it to a sudden access of zeal on the part of Ben, for he made no comment. Whether or not she wished him to see and understand she could hardly tell. Somehow his unobtrusive, masculine acceptance of things better and worse appealed to the woman in her. She slipped into O'Neil's quarters during his absence and slipped out again quietly. She learned to know his ways, his peculiarities. She found herself caressing and talking to his personal belongings as if they could hear and understand. She conducted long conversations with the objects on his bureau. One morning Ben entered unexpectedly to surprise her in the act of kissing Murray's shaving mirror as if it still preserved the image of his owner's face, after which she banished the cook boy utterly and performed his duties with her own hands.

Of course discovery was inevitable. At last O'Neil stumbled in upon her in the midst of her task and, questioning her, read the truth from her blushes and her incoherent attempts at explanation.

"So you're the one who has been doing this!" he exclaimed in frank astonishment. "And I've been tipping Benny for his thoughtfulness all this time! The rascal has made enough to retire rich."

"He seemed not to understand his duties very well, so I took charge. But you had no business to catch me!" The flush died from Eliza's cheeks, and she faced him with thoroughly feminine indignation.

"I can't let you go on with this," said Murray. "I ought to be doing something for you."

But the girl stared up defiantly. "I love it. I'll do it no matter if you look O'Neil Stumbled In Upon Her In The Midst of Her Task.

A WORD FOR MOTHERS.

It is a grave mistake for mothers to neglect their aches and pains and suffer in silence—this only leads to chronic sickness and often shortens life.

If your work is tiring, if your nerves are excited, if you feel languid, weary or depressed, you should know that Scott's Emulsion overcomes just such conditions. It possesses in concentrated form the very elements to invigorate the blood, strengthen the tissues, nourish the nerves and build strength.

know, so you have no notion of over me—none at all!"

His eyes roved around the room, and for the first time he fully took in the changes her mind had wrought.

"My dear child, it's very nice to be spoiled this way and have everything neat and clean, but—it embarrasses me dreadfully to have you saddled with these 'sordid work'."

"It isn't sordid, and what brought you home at this hour, anyhow?" she demanded.

O'Neil's smile gave place to an anxious frown.

"The ice is rising, and—"

"Rising?"

"Yes. Our old enemy Jackson glacier is causing us trouble again. That jam of broken ice in front of it is backing up the water—there's more running now, and the ice is lifting. It's lifting the false work with it, pulling the piles out of the river bottom like apples out of a sore hand."

"That's pretty bad, isn't it?"

"It certainly is. It threatens to throw everything out of alignment and prevent us from laying the steel if we don't check it."

"Check it?" cried Eliza. "How can you check a thing like that?"

"Easily enough, if we can spare the hands, by cutting away the ice where it is frozen to the piles, so that it won't lift them with it. The trouble is to get men enough. You see, the ice is nine feet thick now. I've set every man to work with axes and chisels and steam points, and I came up to telephone Slater for more help. We'll have to work fast night and day."

"There's nobody left in Ouar," Eliza said quickly.

"I know. Tom's going to gather all he can at Cortez and Hope and rush them out here. Our task is to keep the ice out away until help arrives."

"I suppose it's too late in the season to repair any serious damage."

"Exactly. If you care to go back with me you can see what we're doing. As they set off for the bridge site Murray looked down at Eliza, striding unthinkingly beside him, with something of affectionate appreciation in his eyes, and said humbly: "It was careless of me not to see what you have been doing for me all this time. My only excuse is that I've been driven half mad with other things. I haven't time to think of myself."

"All housekeepers have a thankless task," laughed Eliza.

All that day Eliza watched the unequal struggle, and in the evening Dan brought her reports that were far from reassuring. The relentless movement showed no sign of ceasing. When she retired that night she sought ease from her anxiety in a prayer that was half a petition for O'Neil's success and half an exorcism of her love for him. Outside, beneath the glare of torches and hastily strung lanterns, a weary army toiled stubbornly, digging, going, chopping at the foot of the towering wall of timbers which stretched across the Salmon. In the north the aurora borealis played brilliantly as if to light a council of the gods.

(To be continued next week.)

constant moist with limewater or with a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda will afford relief. When this can not be used, a simple ointment, such as zinc oxide ointment, is recommended. A solution containing 1 ounce of fluid extract of grindelia to 1 pint of water applied on cloths and allowed to evaporate may afford relief. Black wash, prepared by adding 1 dram of calomel to 1 pint of limewater, may be applied two or three times a day, allowed to dry, and followed by zinc-oxide ointment. This treatment must be used with caution in extensive cases because of the possibility of mercury poisoning. The acute inflammation of ivy poisoning is sometimes followed by eczema and secondary infections of the skin, which, in mild cases, will yield readily to treatment with bland antiseptic ointments. A formula highly recommended for ivy poisoning and often especially helpful at this stage is the following:

Carbolic acid 2 grams.
Resorcin 2 grams.
Bismuth subgallate 4 grams.
Equal parts water and limewater to make 250 c. c.

This solution may be dabbed on the affected parts several times a day.

REMEDIES FOR

IVY POISONING

WHAT TO DO WHEN COMING IN TO CONTACT WITH IT.

There Is No Remedy That Will Cure All Cases of Ivy Poisoning.

Direct contact with the poison ivy plant is not always necessary to produce poisoning, as the poison may be transferred from clothing, gloves, and implements, also from towels used by those who have been in contact with the plant. When there is reason to believe that there has been exposure to the poison, repeated washing with warm water and strongly alkaline soap as soon as possible is advisable.

There is no one remedy that will cure all cases of ivy poisoning, and in severe cases a physician should be consulted. Specialists of the department have found the following methods and formulas useful in many cases: At the outset, removal of the cause of irritation may be accomplished by cleansing the inflamed surface repeatedly with alcohol, or with a saturated solution of sugar of lead in alcohol, using a fresh bit of lint or absorbent cotton each time, to avoid spreading the irritant. The sugar of lead solution can not be used over extensive areas because of risk of lead poisoning. Covering the inflamed parts with lint or absorbent cotton kept

HOW NOT TO APPLY FOR THAT JOB

A good many college graduates who have been spending the summer recuperating from the campaign which ended in their securing a diploma, with the approach of Labor Day, are reflecting that it is time for them to begin their serious life-work.

It is up to them to prove their worth, and to do so they will first have to land a job. How many of them can write a letter of application that will win them a position? How not to write such a letter is illustrated in a sentence taken from a missive written by a college man to a railroad president asking for work. This sentence, as quoted by one of the technical journals, is as follows:

"A competent and qualified stenographer, experienced in charting statistics, possessed of the taciturnity and discretion necessary to association with the executives, broadly read on matters germane to railroad operation, a student of unity and clearness in composition, with an acquisition of that uncommon knowledge of English—including the study of word differentiations—essential to the highest grade stenographic work, an omnivorous though active reader with a vocabulary sufficiently large to meet the requirements of both your vocative and avocative correspondence, I am fitted to give such a service as would be demanded by one in your capacity."

Needless to say, the applicant did not get the position. In the business world where either a one syllable or a polysyllabic word will serve to express the meaning sought, the one syllable word wins every time, however different it may be in college.

As Colliers' Weekly points out, "however it is in college, if you want something in business, don't talk yourself out of it."

Carranza's reluctance to agree to the joint commission as Wilson would have it established is not to be wondered at. Carranza has a slender hold upon power in Mexico at best—and if a commission named by him should undertake to enter into arrangements with the United States which were not approved by the rebellious bandits who surround the first chief, it is probable that another government would result in Mexico almost instantly. So Carranza "stalls" Wilson—and Wilson is reasonably content, because it enables him to continue the farce that "he kept us out of war," even though the Guardsmen are all under arms and down on the border.

Wilson may keep the Northern Guardsmen in Texas until after the election and John Sharp Williams may prevent them from casting their votes down there in camp. But nothing can prevent them from writing letters home—and their relatives cannot be kept away from the polls.

Having delayed thus long about it, why not put the Wilson notification meeting over to November 8 and then tell him all at once that he has been renominated and defeated?

The Hughes campaign through the west succeeded in putting the administration on the defensive with the first two speeches. And now the administration is on the run.

The list of published "aotables" who attended the Indianapolis conference of Progressives totalled just thirteen—which is a most unlucky number.

One Indiana county agent was called to advise a farmer on sowing eighty acres of thin land to wheat. Since the land was very poor and undrained and the season late the agent advised the sowing of crimson clover (an entirely new crop to that section) instead of wheat. The farmer compromised, sowing 40 acres in clover and 40 acres in wheat. The wheat badly winter killed and was plowed up this spring and planted to corn. Due to wet weather the corn was not planted until after June 15th, which does not insure a maximum crop. On the other hand, the farmer has already harvested $1,000 worth of clover seed from the 40 acres sown to this crop. While this individual farmer benefited in a large financial way from the advice of the agent, the whole community will be benefited and the increased wealth to the county will be many times greater than the agent's salary.

Another agent organized the farmers of one township to eradicate hog cholera, a disease which has caused Indiana farmers a loss of many millions of dollars. In 1914, before the organization was formed, the farms of the township had 3,001 hogs. 526 were vaccinated and 357 died, meaning a direct loss of approximately $3,570. In 1915, after an organization of all the farmers had been effected and a study made of hog production and prevention of cholera, the farms of the township produced 4,075 hogs, of which number 486 were vaccinated and 150 died—a direct loss from cholera of approximately $1,500. In this township alone, with practically the same number of brood sows, the number of pigs produced was increased by more than 1,000, while the loss from cholera was reduced to the extent of $2,070. Surely the work of the agent would be counted a large financial gain to the farmers and to the county.

We are convinced that there is enough information in our department of agriculture and experiment stations if taken out and applied on the farms to double the production of this country, to make the land bloom like a rose, to give us the foodstuffs that will feed our increased millions of people in an adequate way. The county agent offers a medium through which can be accomplished this work.

It is readily seen that the educational field is large and that there is plenty for the county agents to do. Again this work is directly helpful and profitable to all classes. Since county agents in most cases are supported, in part at least, by public taxation, they should exercise every care in the lines of work chosen, not to assist one class at the expense of another, providing they are engaged in legitimate business.

The County Agent and Co-operative Trading.

In many counties there are people who would organize and use county agricultural advisors as financial agents for co-operative buying and selling. This is a questionable line for county agents to take up. Some of these people believe that the county agent is for the farmer alone. They forget that in most cases the county agent is financed by public taxation. It was the hope of the leaders of this movement that the county agent would work in communities with the farmers so that they might grow more corn, more wheat and more meat in order that the people in the cities should get more foodstuffs at reasonable prices. They hope to help the farmer to make some money and to make life more livable.

Square Dealing.

But it was not the idea that the farmer should be aided and advanced at the expense of other classes. In one of our communities a body of people determined that if they could organize and have the county agent act as their agent, they would be able to send to a distant city and buy sugar, machinery, fertilizer and other materials for much less money than they paid in a neighboring town. We believe that the farmers may organize and carry on such projects if they so wish, yet we do not believe that the county agent who is paid from taxation and supported by all the people should serve as their financial agent. The people in the towns of your county are paying more taxes than the farmers for the support of the county agent. In one county the assessed valuation of all property is about $10,000,000; the valuation of property in town is $6,000,000, while that of the farm is $4,000,000. It would seem that the towns pay the larger share of the taxes for the support of the county agent.

Boston Woman Recommending It To Her Friends

Popular Boston Lady Says Toneline Has Proven a Godsend to Her

It is always interesting to listen to the statements of our friends, and especially when you know they are sincere and honest in what they say. Added interest is created in a statement coming from one who has spent a lifetime in Boston, where she is well known socially.

Such a person is Annie Stewart, who resides in Boston, and is possessed of the respect and confidence of her associates, and is willing for anyone to call on her to verify the following signed testimonial.

"I have suffered with stomach trouble for the past seven years. It took the form of indigestion and dyspepsia. I had dizzy spells and headaches, and after I ate a little food it would ferment and cause gas to form in my stomach. I had pains all over my body, and was chronically constipated. My liver was torpid, and I felt generally miserable. I had doctored and had been in the hospital, but received no permanent relief. I was so nervous and restless that at night I could scarcely sleep. The gas pressing under my heart caused palpitation, and when I arose in the morning I was just as tired as when I retired. About two weeks ago I began to take toneline, and I can truthfully state that it has done wonders in my case. I am feeling like a new woman and can eat any kind of food. I sleep the night through and have no more aches or pains; in fact, it has cured me, and I am recommending it to all of my friends, as it has been a Godsend to me."

All druggists sell and guarantee toneline.

There are numerous symptoms of this trouble that toneline can relieve. In fact, any of the following may denote affections of the stomach: Indigestion, dyspepsia, belching of wind, bad breath, sick throbbing headache, poor circulation, night sweats, that tired feeling, costiveness, coated tongue or a poor complexion.

Caution:—As toneline is recommended as a flesh builder those not wishing to increase their weight 15 pounds or more should not take it continuously. Adv. 33tf ness, and then from East Jordan into Charlevoix. Well, I can tell you something about it. Clubs and associations would be formed, new golf links laid out and just think for a moment that the caddy boys in this town received last year more than $5,000 for their work and this year will receive even more. In a few years, there wouldn't be a fine prominent building spot but would be occupied by a summer cottage and prices for land throughout the whole county and in fact, some of the adjoining counties, also, would soar aloft just as the resort property has in the city of Charlevoix. It is estimated by those who ought to know that more than half a million dollars will be paid out in Charlevoix by the tourists alone this year and we would think we were a wonderful city if we had manufacturing interests here that would pay out the same amount. We would have motor boats—not by the dozen but by the hundred on Pine lake and Charlevoix county (I want the young people to take particular pains to remember what I am saying) would be the mecca and would be known virtually the world over as the greatest resort county in the United States.

We now have the opportunity, if we will embrace it, to use the state money and get a double free reward for it on the West Michigan Pike and Dixie Highway and some day the state may conclude that they cannot continue to keep this up and withdraw their offer. So it seems to me that it would be a good business proposition to go to work and build these roads right away, particularly, the one just mentioned, and so get our double reward.

Get together, friends, think it over, because what is good for you is good for me and what is good for me is also good for you.

VAN PELT.

Route of said road to run as follows: Commencing at the east eighth (1-8) corner of township line, Torch Lake and Banks township, proceeding north three (3) miles, on what is known as the Flat Road. Bids must be in before the 11th day of September, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon. Certified check must accompany the bid to the amount of $100.00, one hundred dollars. The first mile of road to be finished before the other two are started. The town board reserves the right to reject any and all bids. By order of Township Board of Banks Township, 3312 H. J. FORDS AND OTHER AUTOS ON RAMPAGE Series of Smash-ups Cause Repair Men to Wear Smile.

Saturday and Monday were hoodoo days for the drivers of jitney buses and delivery cars in this city, and three smash-ups were the result.

Friday night D. H. Newman, Ford jitney bus driver, failed to make the turn from Belvedere avenue on Bridge street, and struck a straight course for the east entrance of the Hotel Michigan. The Ford stopped when it struck the east walls of the hotel, but managed to break off a porch post and do other minor damage, both to the car and the hotel.

On the same night, during the rain storm, I. S. Dice ran into the rear of E. McRoberts dray on the north Bridge street hill, resulting in a smashed fender, light, and badly scared people who were riding on the dray.

Klooster's delivery wagon, driven by Luther McCann, put the new street light at the corner of Hulbert avenue and Bridge street out of commission Monday forenoon. Turning too short a corner was the cause.

JURY RENDERS VERDICT OF NOT GUILTY

W. D. C. Germaine Freed From Charge of Attempted Arson.

The jury at Traverse City which has been trying the case of William D. C. Germaine, charged with attempted arson, at 10:15 Wednesday night brought in a verdict of not guilty. The verdict was rendered after deliberation of five and three-quarters hours.

The verdict closes the most sensational case ever tried in northern Michigan. William D. C. Germaine, former mayor of Traverse City, was arrested last spring on a charge of attempting to burn the residence of Mrs. Germaine, who had started proceedings for divorce some time before the time it was alleged the attempt at arson was made, last January.

It was charged that Germaine had sought to set fire to the house for the purpose of securing insurance upon the furniture, which, it was declared, was insured in his name.

The chief witnesses against Germaine were Harry Powers, who was facing a charge of larceny, and Viola Summit, a woman who testified that Germaine had offered her $1,000 for an affidavit in which she had declared she saw the accused in an alley near the Germaine residence shortly before the fire was discovered.

FARMS BRING GOOD PRICE IN THE WEST

Regardless of Fact That Corn and Wheat Yield is Below Average.

An interesting letter from our former townsman, E. S. Stack, now in the west representing Armour & Company, of Chicago, tells of crop conditions and land values in that section of the country.

Mr. Stack is now at Kansas City, Kansas, where he will be for the next two months. He states that business is good, farmers realizing the great necessity of the use of proper fertilizers. "Land values," he says, "are high. Farms sell from $75.00 to $225.00 per acre. I saw one farm of 240 acres, located in Brown county, which had just been sold for $50,000, and the wheat grown on it this year would not exceed 20 bushels to the acre, and the corn not over 60 bushels."

RESORTERS ADVISED TO STAY IN THE NORTH

Infantile Paralysis Reported Quite Prevalent in Southern States.

A prominent physician of St. Louis, Missouri, who is summering in this city, is reported to have recommended to his large circle of friends that it will be a good policy for those having children to remain in northern Michigan until cold weather, because of infantile paralysis reported quite prevalent in southern cities.

That Charlevoix is a safe and healthful place to stay is proven by the fact that not a case of infantile paralysis has been reported here, nor in this vicinity, nor of any of the contagious diseases reported prevalent in many cities, both south, east and west.

There is not a place in the country where the climate is as delightful as in northern Michigan during September and October. Beautiful sunshine during the day and cool evenings make it, according to opinion of year round residents, the best time of the year.

JUST A WORD!

We want you to give us a trial. We know you will speak well of us—that's the kind of advertising we want. Satisfied customers, and we have any number of them, why not you? The prices in our Meat Department are within the reach of all

SCHOOL OPENS SEPTEMBER 11TH

MANY CHANGES IN TEACHING FORCE

Charlevoix Extends Welcome to New Teachers and Is Quite Proud of School System.

The public school exists for but one purpose, the education of the school children of school age. For education in its highest and best conception. An education that will make the adult laborer, of this present student body, a mighty force. In its broadest sense it should fit the pupil for an efficient performance of his civic, social, economic, and moral, adult duties. Any other aim, as the desire for personal gain, or personal ambition, or the desire to force on a community a hobby, is unwise, unsafe, and endangers the cause of public education.

Charlevoix has always put the interest of the child first. It has attempted to make everything in the way of equipment made for the advancement of the main aim.

Since the demands of the school are that the adult laborer of the children shall be efficiently performed. It demands that the program of the school be an ever-changing one. The education that served in the past does not meet the present situation. A generation ago the three R's constituted the entire program. People point back to those days, and praise the school for its efficiency. In comparison with the past school, the present school in the estimation of many people is wasteful, expensive and glaringly inefficient.

The three R's were not the cause of this school's inefficiency. Credit must be given to the day and generation that they served. The school of that period did the work that the home could not well accomplish. The school provided an economic method of supplementing the work of the home. It rounded out the education of the children of that period. The elderly people will recall the many activities that the young people were called upon to perform, in the home at that period. If this is taken into consideration, it becomes apparent that the home was a large factor in the education of the youth. The home labor made him a part of the home factory system. Home spun cloth was a home factory product in which each member of the family had a duty. A duty with a definite outcome. The educational value of such work cannot be underestimated. The school and the home of a generation ago made a complete cycle. It made for a complete education.

But this generation had brought sweeping changes. Men and women have been huddled together in great centers, with great rapidity. The factory system with its tremendous growth, has utterly destroyed the home factory system. Thus the school has had to assume much that was formerly done by the home. The curriculum has been extended until at present the course of study covers a wide range of subjects. Thus we see that the school is a progressive institution. The principles that held good in the past must be supplanted by new and improved methods.

Charlevoix people have been both generous in supplying funds, and wise in their selection of a school board. The board's aim is to give to each student in the public school the best possible education. The board has made some valuable additions to the school program for the coming year. The introduction of the home training department should do much to make the work of the school of greater importance to the girls of this community. It is the hope that it will prepare the girls for more efficient adult activities.

The opening of the school will witness many changes in the faculty. The school has appreciated the services of many faithful and earnest teachers, but who have gone to other fields of labor. But we have great hope that the new instructors will fill the large places left vacant in a most acceptable manner. "Charlevoix The Beautiful" welcomes them and hopes that for many years it will find their services indispensable to the community.

The following is the list of teachers for the coming year:

H. A. Craig, superintendent.

L. B. Aseltine, principal.

A NIGHT IN CAMP WITH THE 33RD MICHIGAN AT CAMP FERRIS

Daily Life of the Soldier Boys Not So Strenuous as Has Been Described—Outdoor Life and Vigorous Training Will Be An Asset in Later Life.

Last Thursday morning the editor made a date with Lizzie, and with a distinguished local attorney as chaperon, started out on his long delayed visit to Camp Ferris. We are not a military man in any sense, being a gentle, peace-loving American, yet we must admit the luring power of the khaki and rifle, the camp, the great outdoor life, and possibly above all, that bugle with its weird call to action or rest as it may be.

We arrived in camp about three o'clock after visiting every town we could find along the way, and left Lizzie at the foot of the street of Company I. We passed the guard on the bridge a short way out of Grayling without much trouble, but it made us mad the way that cavalry provost guard peeked at Lizzie. We didn't have any contraband on board and we thought they ought to have known that we were from Charlevoix and had a right to go anywhere we pleased. Strangely enough the first soldier we saw on the company street was our son, Harold, a private in Co. I. Family modesty prevents us from commenting upon his appearance as we looked him over. Ruddy faced, clear-eyed, alert and strong as a result of training, it did us good right at the start.

It was nearly time for guard mount and Lieut. Cummings placed us in a good position to witness this interesting performance. We then went back to look up Captain Henry Winters, as we didn't propose to spend all of our time with privates. The captain was induced to invite us to mess in his tent and we consented, although we must confess that, with the exception of butter and some condensed milk, the grub the boys in the ranks were having looked just as good to us.

Later on we saw a battalion drill in front of brigade headquarters. The troops show up well and we enjoyed every minute of the drill. We were then invited to share a bunk in a squad tent and passed a lively evening listening to camp tales and stories of escapades and adventures.

There were nine men in this tent besides ourselves, and the conversation never lagged you may be sure. We laughed our heads off until "taps" sounded and then rolled over on the bunk made of spruce boughs and cedar poles. While the soldier boys were having a contest to see which one could repeat the most of "general orders" we commenced to "pound our ear."

At 5:30 the fool bugler at brigade headquarters got out in front of his tent and began to practice on a horn. The boys said it was "revellie," but it sounded more to us like an unseemly disturbance of peaceful slumber. We wondered how our "resorters" would enjoy having some kid blow a horn under their slumber porch that early in the morning every day in the season.

However, we tumbled out and borrowed a washdish from Dr. Becker, of Ellsworth, who is in camp with his two boys, and wished our faces at the hydrant at the foot of the company street. We then hung around until mess call and swiped a basin, cup, knife and fork and fell into line with the bunch in front of the mess tent. As our summer friends say, "listen," but those fried potatoes, beefsteak, gravy and coffee and bread were good and we never said a word about the breakfasts our mother used to cook. True, we didn't have any butter or milk or cream but we never missed them. That blamed lawyer lined up for a second batch, and there was enough for two men in the first.

After breakfast Captain Winters took his company to the Three Sisters country for a skirmish, a six-mile hike. We agreed to go if they would let us take Lizzie along, but they said it was no place for girls, so we took possession of Sergeant Earl Holliday, and with Harold and the lawyer, viewed the grounds. Those who have not been to the camp have missed something. It is truly a beautiful location. We expected to see a mess of sand. It is sandy, but the soil seems to grow grass very readily. In another year or two it will resemble our own golf grounds with the addition of large pines and other timber. Lake Portage on the north is a beautiful water over three miles long and one to two miles wide.

We took in the cavalry camp, signal, ambulance and engineer corps, the machine gun drill and then went over to the rifle range. From the sound we thought maybe the kaiser was over there, but he wasn't. Some forty men were lying on the ground shooting the 30 cal. U. S. Springfield rifle at targets set on the hillside 300 yards away. We went around back of the cement wall and sand bank where the targets were located and watched the effect of the shots. We were then "under fire" entrenched. Lieut. Spring was on duty here and after presenting him with our last bit of bootjack, he loosened up and explained the difference between a bulls-eye and a flag. Some excellent shooting was done and we itched a little to get into the game and wished those fellows would go away and let us take a shot when nobody was looking. We are "some shot" ourselves but we never liked to shoot with our nose on the ground.

SLEEPER AND MICHIGAN WIN

RECEIVES NOMINATION BY OV-ER 10,000 VOTES

J. Lee Morford Carries Senatorial District by About 800 Votes—
The Lioe Up.

Returns from Michigan's primary of Tuesday of last week show the Bad Axe business man and banker and former state treasurer swept into the Republican nomination for governor with a margin of in the neighborhood of 10,000 votes over his nearest opponent.

This means that Mr. Sleeper will be the next governor of the state of Michigan, for the Democratic party has no one in sight who will make the run for governor, and he would be an optimistic Democrat indeed who would predict that the Republican nominee will be beaten by the Democratic nominee, whoever he is, in the election of 1916, presidential year.

Charlevoix county, while strong for Leland, gave Sleeper a majority of all candidates, and assented to the belief, with other sections of the state, that he was the right man to succeed Woodbridge N. Ferris as governor.

The record of Mr. Sleeper as state treasurer and his recognized ability as a business man, speak for the kind of an administration Michigan may expect from her coming governor. The platform upon which he is running guarantees that the state business will be conducted in a business-like way under a budget system. Taxes will be lower and the taxpayers will get the full value of their money expended by the new administration. The overcrowded and disgraceful condition of state institutions will be remedied. Michigan will get a square deal. All this is promised in the platform of Mr. Sleeper, and his business and official record is sufficient guarantee that every promise made to the voters will be kept.

The Courier is naturally pleased at the nomination as are the other two hundred or more Michigan newspapers whose editors believed Mr. Sleeper the best man for governor. Michigan is to be congratulated as well as Mr. Sleeper on the result of the primary.

In the fight between J. Lee Morford, of Gaylord, and Dana H. Hinkley, of Petoskey, for state senator, late returns show that Morford leads by over 800 votes. The results of other candidates are substantially the same as published in our last issue.

FARMER TELLS MERCHANT

REASON FOR BUYING

Answer Hits Nail Squarely On Head

—Should Advertise Goods.

Recently a merchant in a city not many miles from Charlevoix happened to see a farmer receive a box at the depot and noticed that it was from a mail order house. He also noticed that the goods were right in his line and the same as he carried for years. He immediately approached the farmer and said:

"I could have sold you the goods you have here for less money than the Chicago house and saved you the freight."

"Then why don't you do so," said the farmer. "I have taken the local paper for a year and have not seen a line about you selling these or any other goods. This mail order house sends advertising matter to me asking for my trade, and they get it. If you have any bargains, why don't you put them in the paper so we can see what they are?"

How many local merchants could be confronted by the same answer? Look over the columns of the home papers and count them up. And the non-advertiser usually puts up the loudest yell against buying from outside. But when asked to get into the advertising game they seem to have the opinion they are donating to the support of the newspapers rather than getting value received.

Pomona Grange, September 14. The next regular meeting of Charlevoix Pomona Grange will be held with Marion Center Grange on Thursday, September 14. The usual program is under preparation and a good attendance is desired.

What Does Charlevoix Offer as Trading Center

What Inducement Does It Offer to Gain Good Will of Country
Trading Class.

What does Charlevoix give to get and hold the confidence, respect and good will of the country trading class?

Hearty co-operation between the town dealer and the country buyer is the watchword of the modern retail business world. It is a tried and true principle. It is not true Charlevoix has overlooked its importance?

Let's look at some of the things the city should do for her country neighbors, but has neglected.

Public comfort station. One on the ground floor, large, comfortable, sanitary, well furnished with rest room for the country people and properly maintained at city expense. A state law which went into effect January 1, 1916, makes this obligatory.

Public tie sheds—free ones—where the farmer can stand his horses, with competent shelter from rain and storm, off the main business streets.

A home-coming celebration, designed particularly for the social enjoyment of the country people at least once a year. Possibly an agricultural exhibit.

Retail places of business open say, two evenings a week, to take care of the wants of the country people during the farming season, when they are busy through the day in the fields.

The country trader goes to the town which extends the heartiest welcome. These things are but welcoming signboards along the highway of the farmer's daily routine that point him where to go to do his shopping.

The town dealer believes heartily in the gospel of "trade at home." So does the average rural resident. There is no sound argument to the contrary, but the town merchant must go still farther and give a sure and certain welcome to his country brother that leaves no room to doubt his sincerity of purpose and his spirit of true friendliness.

Mr. and Mrs. William Burns, Mrs. W. N. Lewis and Mrs. Joseph Clarke attended the quarterly meeting held at Norwood last Saturday.

Miss Helena Shapton, of Flint, who has been visiting among friends and relatives in Barnard and Charlevoix, returned to her home on Saturday.

Some of our Barnard people attended the Labor Day celebration at Boyne City, Monday. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. William Burns, Albert Beattie and Dennis Spayd.

Mrs. Albert Beattie was in Charlevoix, Thursday afternoon and evening and Saturday night and Sunday, assisting in taking care of her uncle, R. N. McKeel, who has been very seriously ill the past week as a result of having broken his hip last Monday.

Mrs. Joseph Clarke entertained her Sunday school class of little folks at her home Friday afternoon. There were ten of the little people present and they passed a very pleasant afternoon in playing games and particularly enjoyed the refreshments, which consisted of ice cream and cake and a Jack Horner pie.

Ralph Klooster, of Barnard, and Miss Frankie Jackson, of Phelps, were married by Rev. Quinton Walker at the M. E. parsonage in Charlevoix on Saturday evening. The young couple will reside for the present on what is known as the Webster Helms farm. Heartiest congratulations are extended.

Mr. and Mrs. Platt Webster and daughters returned home Saturday night from Flint, where they have been visiting their son, Floyd, and the new daughter.

We wonder if the merchants never think the farmers could do their shopping after supper much more convenient than to do it before six o'clock. The resorters are going away and the farmers are the ones who take the back seat. But what would the merchants do without the farmers?

EVELINE

Miss Bessie Allen is teaching at Springvale this fall.

A light frost Sunday morning but no apparent damage.

A fine new tile silo is being erected on Breezy Point farm.

Silo filling has commenced by a few farmers with the earlier varieties of corn.

Mr. Hemingway has a fine new barn under construction on his farm in East Eveline.

Will Webb has been removed to Petoskey to undergo an operation for appendicitis.

James Courier is at home for a couple of weeks before his term of school commences.

The cucumber crop didn't come up to the expectations this season on account of cold nights.

Miss Ola Nixon, of Marion Center, has visited for several days with her sister, Mrs. W. J. Meggison.

Miss Lillian Flanders has returned from her school at Ypsilanti, accompanied by her sister, Miss Winifred, of Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Grant Hammond have prepared an exhibit for the Iron-ton Grange to be exhibited at the East Jordan fair.

Miss Grace Mergison has been spending several days with friends before returning to her school duties at the Walker school.

Several farmers went to the black-berry plains in quest of that fruit. They report a small crop due perhaps to the exceedingly hot weather of July.

The average yield of oats per acre this year is about 25 bushels. Last year the yield would average 30 or 35 bushels. Wheat is fair, rye good and a good outlook for buck-wheat.

The returns from the election were favorable in most peoples minds. Especially the 123 that supported our next register of deeds, M. A. McDonald. "Mac" was opposed by only 19 votes in Eveline.

Glad the farmers will be represented by an active man of the farming business at our next legislature. Farmers realize that in order to have anything accomplished they must unite at the polls at least. Progress will take place later through united efforts.

Aunt Clara was pleasantly surprised by her many friends at the home of Robert Sherman last Friday afternoon, it being the occasion of her eightieth birthday. Many little gifts were tendered and all wished her many more happy returns of the day.

When getting ready for the vacation, remember we are headquarters for trunks, suit cases, leather goods, grips, etc. All goods at reasonable prices. Benj. Brown. Adv. 35tf

SCHOOL CREDIT FOR HOME WORK

SYSTEM HIGHLY COMMENDED WHERE TRIED

New System to Be Introduced in the Rural Schools of Charlevoix County.

For a long time we have preached that there is dignity in labor. We have said that hand work, the ability to do, is noble. We have said that man is educated so that he can do more work in less time than he could before, that if he does not know how to work, his education has proved a failure. In spite of these worthy beliefs and statements we have poured book knowledge into the head of every child, and have failed to connect this book knowledge with the daily work of the home. We have preached co-operation but except in emergency cases, we have depended largely on theory. There is a wide difference between theory and practice, but we are glad that there has been a constant effort to draw them closer together.

This effort is the purpose of the new system of school credit for home work. It is proposed this school year to give every school child in the rural and graded districts a card called "Parent's Monthly Report to the Teacher" of work done at home. On this card there is a list of ordinary home tasks with the number of credits to be given for each, such as: "Washing and Wiping Dishes," one credit; "Making an Entire Batch of Bread," five credits; "Currying a Horse," two credits. The parent keeps track in whatever way is convenient during the week, but writes on the card the total for each week, and at the end of the month returns (Continued on page three.)

HOW TO GUARD AGAINST DISEASE

CITIZENS ASKED TO USE EVERY PRECAUTION

Against Spread of Infantile Paralysis Should Case Be Discovered in This Section.

Infantile paralysis (Poliomyelitis) is a catching disease. How it is spread is not yet definitely known. In most cases the disease is probably taken directly from a sick person, but it may be spread indirectly through a third person who has been taking care of the patient, or through children who have been living in the same household.

The early symptoms are usually fever, weakness, fretfulness or irritability, and vomiting. There may or may not be acute pain at this time. Later, there is pain in the neck, back, arms or legs, with great weakness. If paralysis is to occur, it usually appears from the second to the fifth day after the sickness begins. Many cases do not go on to paralysis.

The germ of the disease is present in discharges from the nose, throat and bowels of those ill with infantile paralysis, even in the cases that do not go on to paralysis. It may also be present in the nose and throat of healthy children from the same family. Do not let your children play with children who have just been sick or who have or recently have had colds, summer complaint, etc. For this reason children from a family in which there is a case of infantile paralysis are forbidden to leave their home. If you hear of their doing so, report it at once to the department of health.

Persons over 16 years of age, from families where there are cases of poliomyelitis, may continue at work unless their business has to do with the preparation or handling of food or drink for sale.

If you hear of a case in your neighborhood and the house is not placarded, notify the department of health.

How to Guard Against the Disease.
In order to prevent the occurrence of this disease, parents should observe the following rules:

Keep your house or apartment absolutely clean.

Go over all woodwork daily with a damp cloth.

Sweep floors only after they have been sprinkled with sawdust, old tea leaves, or bits of newspaper which have been thoroughly dampened. Never allow dry sweeping.

Screen your windows against flies, and kill all flies in the house.

Do not allow garbage to accumulate, and keep pail closely covered.

Do not allow refuse of any kind to remain in your rooms.

Kill all forms of vermin, such as bedbugs, roaches and body-lice.

Pay special attention to bodily cleanliness. Give the children a bath every day and see that all clothing which comes into contact with the skin is clean.

Keep your children by themselves as much as possible. Do not allow them to visit moving picture shows or other places where children may gather.

Children should not be kept in the house; they should be out-of-doors as much as possible, but not in active contact with other children of the neighborhood. Do not take them on a street car, unless absolutely necessary, or shopping.

Do not allow your children to be kissed.

It is perfectly safe to let your children go to the parks and playgrounds if only two or three of them play together; they should not play in large groups, and you should not let them come into contact with children from other parts of the city.

Remember that children need fresh air in the summertime, and outdoor life is one of the best ways to avoid disease.

If there is a public shower bath in a school in your vicinity, send the older children there every day for a shower bath. This is perfectly safe and will help keep them in good health.

Give your children plain, wholesome food, including plenty of milk and vegetables.

MORE MEN THAN WOMEN HAVE APPENDICITIS

Surgeons state men are slightly more subject to appendicitis than women. Charlevoix people should know that a few doses of simple buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adlerika, often relieve or prevent appendicitis. This mixture removes such surprising foul matter that ONE SPOONFUL relieves almost ANY CASE. Constipation, sour stomach or gas. The INSTANT, easy action of Adlerika is surprising. B. A. Herman, druggist.

RHEUMATISM ARRESTED

Many people suffer the tortures of bone muscles and stiffened joints because of impurities in the blood, and each succeeding attack seems more acute until rheumatism has invaded the whole system. To arrest rheumatism it is quite as important to improve your general health as to purify your blood, and the cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion is nature's great blood-maker, while its medicinal nourishment strengthens the organs to expel the impurities and rebuild your strength. Scott's Emulsion is helping thousands every day who could not find other relief. Refuse the alcoholic substitutes.

Keep the milk clean, covered and cold.

Do not allow the milk or any other food to be exposed where flies may alight upon it.

Wash well all food that is to be eaten raw.

In Case of Sickness.

Remember that during the hot weather children are apt to have stomach and bowel troubles. If your child is taken sick with loose movements of the bowels, or with vomiting, do not at once fear that it must be infantile paralysis; it may be simply digestive disturbance. Give the child a tablespoonful of castor oil and plenty of cool water to drink, and send for the doctor at once.

If you cannot afford a doctor's services, telephone the department of health and one will be sent free of charge.

If a doctor or nurse from the department of health visits your home, give them all the information you can. They are sent to show you how to keep your children well.

the card to the teacher. When a child has earned 125 credits, he is given a home work certificate. For four home work certificates or 500 credits, a child in any of the first four grades may receive a diploma of honor for home work. Boys and girls in the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades may receive this diploma for eight certificates or 1,000 credits. Every boy or girl attending school must own one of these diplomas of honor for home work before he or she can receive a promotion card at the end of the school year. Any pupil seriously ill during the year may receive permission to catch up the home credit work during the vacation and be passed on condition until that work is made up.

This system is in operation and working successfully in many parts of North Dakota and Iowa. It has proved very effective in Todd county, Minnesota, and comes to us highly recommended by the parents of every community where it has been tried. Every plan has its good and bad points, and the commissioner will want to hear how the plan is working out in your district. A great deal will depend on the teacher as well as the parent, but we feel that this system will do away with the teacher's praise for the bright child who learns without effort and works neither at home nor at school, that it will also do away with discouraging the patient plodder, who knows more about work than any of his playmates and who is sometime going to get there. We feel that the teacher will understand to a fuller extent the outside interests of the child and will get a fuller broader view of his education, and that the parents will realize that the school stands for the home, thus working in every way with the home and the work of the home.

The success of the plan will depend largely on the enthusiasm with which the parents meet this system and the willingness and honesty with which they make their reports. No credit should be given for any work that is not done cheerfully and well. If there is any part of the card not clear, the teacher should be glad to explain. The teacher and the parent may together weld this new link between the home and the school—County School Commissioner.

THE SERVICE OF POLITICAL COMMITTEES

The man who criticizes the corruption of our times the most freely is rarely the same one who is ever willing to serve on a political committee. It is much easier to sit on your front porch and find fault with graft and inefficiency. If he served on a committee he might have to strain his patriotism by attending a few meetings.

Yet the work of political committees has to go on. Plans of campaign have to be mapped out. Rallies have to be held and advertising written and paid for. The voters have to be canvassed to get out a full poll. They have to be checked off as they vote, that the laggards may be rounded up.

There are many abuses in the work of political committees. Few men are willing to serve on them from pure zeal for community good. Usually they are looking for appointments or nominations. In return for work done, they expect favors from those who gain the offices. This frequently involves the appointment of unfit men.

Yet the political committee performs its indispensable service. It at least knows that it must make the party program attractive to voters. It must see that candidates of a certain standard of decency go on the lists to be balloted for. Otherwise the party will be beaten every time. If there were no political committees, nominations would be made haphazard. It would be as well to snap up a cent to see who should go on the ticket.

Better politics can not be secured without good work being done. Reform is never accomplished by sitting at one's fireside and finding fault. Where improvement is made, it is because some one has gone to work. People who want better government should be willing to serve on political and campaign committees. Only by giving of their own time and interest can they command any support for their ideas.

President Wilson remarked, regarding the threatened railway strike: "At this time the result would be disastrous." One effect of the strike would be to hold up the thousands of tons of war munitions being shipped to the seaboard en route to the European war zones. The Democrats would then have an ocular demonstration of the importance to the country of this sort of traffic.

Mr. Wilson hardly knows whether to pray for a railroad strike that would take Hughes off the circuit, or to insist upon a clear track for his own political special.

In some of the belligerent nations the government has commandeered all the wheat, but here we have not the excuse of war to promote justice for the consumer.

HAD NARROW ESCAPE FROM FALLING ROCK

Rock Product Company Employee Suffers Severe Injury.

Owen Gillispie had a narrow escape from instant death, Monday, while working in the quarry at the plant of the Charlevoix Rock Product company.

Gillispie was drilling preparatory to placing a charge of dynamite, when the jar of the drill loosened the rock above his head. A large piece struck him on the head, knocking him underneath the drill. Pieces of rock weighing over a hundred pounds struck the drill, completely demolishing it. The only thing that saved him was being under the drill, thus being shielded from the heavier pieces.

He was severely cut about the head and back, and has several broken fingers as the result of his experience.

HEAVY TOURING CAR HITS INN FLAG STAFF

Joy Riders Come to Grief in Making Sharp Turn.

The twisted, badly wrecked remnants of a fine 7 passenger Stearns touring car lies in Hooker's garage, the result of a midnight joy ride and reckless driving.

The car belongs to Mr. Hartman, a summer resort at the Beach hotel. The car was being driven by his chauffeur unknown to the owner. From what can be learned the bunch were on their return from Petoskey when the accident occurred. Evidently they had been hitting the high spots all the way home, and continued the speed on approaching the Inn, as they took the wrong turn and came down the road nearest the sidewalk, directly in front of the Inn. Witnesses of the accident state the driver made no effort to avoid the flag pole, and ran into it, head on, at a speed of from 30 to 40 miles per hour. The car is a wreck. Occupants of the car were thrown out, but no serious injuries have been reported.

ASKED TO RETURN FOR ANOTHER YEAR

Rev. Walker Extended Invitation to Continue Work in M. E. Church.

At the fourth quarterly conference held at the M. E. church, Monday night, the pastor was unanimously requested to return for another year. The quarterly conference was the best attended conference of the year, and many members took part in the discussion of the work of the year with numerous expressions of gratitude to the pastor and his excellent wife for his efficient leadership.

Every department of the church was reported in the best condition ever known in the history of the church. More money has been raised for missions and running expenses of the church than in any previous year since the church was organized.

The Epworth league and Sunday school are in especially good condition, attendance and interest of the highest order. It is getting to be well understood that the church is "doing things." The membership may well be proud of its record and standing in the community.

PRESENTS CHURCH WITH HISTORY OF ORGANIZATION

Methodist Church Recipient of Fine Gift From A. Butters.

At a meeting of the quarterly conference of the Methodist church last Monday night, Hon. A. Butters presented a complete history of the local church from its inception down to the present splendid condition of that body. Needless to say much interest is taken in the work, this church having been so closely identified with the growth and development of our city. Requests have been made to have this narrative published in our local papers.

A rising vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Butters for his interest and care in preparing this document. Mr. Butters is one of the few persons living who was identified with this church since its organization in 1858.

A NIGHT WITH SOLDIER BOYS

It was getting time for us to leave. There was no chance for us to get another meal in camp, as we were told that Uncle Sam couldn't afford to feed us indefinitely. We looked over the ball grounds on the way out and wanted to visit the Y. M. C. A. hut the lawyer wouldn't listen to it. We noticed a lot of work being done building roads and digging out stumps. This work is done by the gunn house gang. An infraction of the regulations means time on the roads digging stumps. One wag we met, a good-natured likable lad, said, "What's 10 days digging stumps. We've got to dig the stumps anyway?" Another lad commenting on the hospital grumblingly remarked, "Nice business, if you have a stomach ache and go to the doctor, he says, 'Give him a pill.' If you have a toothache, 'Give him a pill.' If you have a sore toe, 'Give him a pill.' Pills, pills, pills."

On the whole, the camp is fine. It is true that the boys are getting restless and fret over the monotony of the life. It is monotonous, but for many of the boys the discipline is a splendid thing, and the training will be an asset in later life. You hear talk of "Going over the hill," which means running the guard, but it is mostly talk. The boys are a true, loyal bunch at heart and they are Americans all the time. Company I has a splendid record. It has lost quite a number of men through discharge of those having dependents and disqualification, but it is still an active company. At last inspection there was not a single man under penalty, not a louse or a disease in the company. (That is, no louse was discovered.)

Well, we came home. It was a fine trip, one that more of the people who have automobiles should take. Every visitor is welcome in camp. If you go, take along a half bushel or so of cookies, pies, cakes, pears, peaches. The boys will take care of them for you. The roads are good this time of year and you will have no trouble getting there. Charlevoix county should be proud of Co. I.

We nearly forgot to mention that General Kirk heard that we were in town and sent for us to visit him at brigade headquarters, but we heard that he had been nominated as the Democratic candidate for lieutenant-governor so we turned his invitation down. He can run on the Democratic ticket if he wants to and get skinned, but we won't have anything to do with him until after election.

CAPTAIN GEORGE WEAVER BUYS TUG FRED DREWS

New Boat to Be Used to Tow Logs From Hat Island.

The following article clipped from a South Chicago paper and mailed to the Courier by Peter McCafferty, gives information about the purchase made by Captain George Weaver, of this city, who with his family made the trip to Chicago last week by automobile:

"Captain George Weaver, of Charlevoix, Michigan, and well known to tugmen of this port, was in South Chicago last week. While here Captain Weaver bought the hull of the tug Fred Drews, which he will take to Charlevoix and have her topsides rebuilt and new cabins. He will install the engine and boiler of the tug Walter Chrysler and will have L. Wheeler, of Charlevoix, for his engineer. Captain Weaver will tow logs from Hat Island, Lake Michigan, to Cross Village, and expects to have the boat ready by next spring. A name has not been selected as yet for the new boat. She will be used in carrying passengers on Pine Lake during passenger season."

DEATH OF R. S. HAMMOND

VAN PELT THANKS THE NEWSPAPERS OF COUNTY

For Publicity Given On Good Roads Proposition Confronting Public.

If I didn't have confidence in my fellowmen and especially in those of Charlevoix county I would not be so persistent in forcing my efforts for concrete roads on our county newspapers as I have been.

They have all been kind in publishing so many of my writings and doing it all without hope of fee or reward and without them I could not have hoped to have made this, the greatest effort of my life, successful. I wish right here to express my sincere thanks to each and every one of the editors and proprietors.

We all fail far more often by underrating than by overrating and I feel that we will not fail in making Charlevoix county not only one of the greatest in the state of Michigan, but of any other state, if we stick to our work of making it so.

Good roads and the setting out of apple trees along the sides of the roads will prove a profitable investment. Concrete roads are absolutely necessary, as all have seen this year that when a four of five thousand pound car drives along, as they do, at the rate of 30 or 40 miles per hour, they knock the macadam roads into a cocked hat.

We build as good macadam roads in this county as in any county, but no macadam roads can be built that will stand the wear and tear of these heavy cars, for any length of time, and it is the heavy cars we want up here, because they bring the big moneyed men who spend money and it is money we want.

Just think what it means. This year, Charlevoix has received over a half a million dollars from tourists and the caddie boys, alone, on the golf grounds, have received over $5,000, and with concrete roads, more golf links and more beautiful homes can be put around Pine Lake and property will advance in a very, very short time, representing an increase far in excess of the cost of the roads.

The IRON TRAIL

By REX BEACH

At midnight of the 10th the last rivet was driven, but the ice had gained to such an extent that the lower chord was hucked down stream about eight inches, and the distance was growing steadily. Quickly the traveler was shifted to the false work beyond the pier, and the men under Mellen's direction fell to splitting out the blocking. As the supports were chopped away the mass began to crush the last few wedges; there was a great snapping and rending of wood, and some one, strained to the breaking point, shouted: "Look out! There she goes!" A cry of terror arose. The men fled, trampling one another in their panic. But Mellen charged them like a wild man, firing curses and orders at them until they rallied. The remaining supports were removed; the 1,500 tons of metal settled into place and rested securely on its foundations. O'Neil was the last man ashore. As he walked the completed span from pier 3 the barricade of pillag beneath him was heaving and tearing, but he issued no orders to remove it, for the river was doing that. In the general haste pile drivers, bolsters, and various odds and ends of machinery and material had been left where they stood. They were being inundated now. Many of them were all submerged. There was no possibility of saving them at present, for the men were half dead from exhaustion. As he lurched up the muddy, uneven street to his quarters Murray felt his fatigue like a heavy burden, for he had been sixty hours without sleep.

"Look out! There she goes!"

He saw Slater and Appleton and the rest of his "boys," he saw Natalie and Eliza, but he was too tired to speak to them or to grasp what they said. He heard the workmen cheering Mellen and Parker and himself. It was very foolish, he thought, to cheer, since the river had so nearly triumphed and the final test was yet to come. He fell upon his bed clothed as he was. An hour later the false work beneath span 3 collapsed. Although the bridge was not yet finished, the critical point of its construction had been passed, for the fourth and final portion would be built over shallow water, and no great difficulties were to be expected, even though the ice went out before the work was finished. But Murray had made his promise and his boast to complete the structure within a stated time, and he was determined to live up to the very letter of his agreement with the trust. As to the result of the breakup he had no fear whatever. For once nature aided him. She seemed to anillo as if in approval of his steadfastness. The movement of the channel ice became irregular, spasmodic, but it remained firm until the last span had been put in place. (To be continued next week.)

Falls From Load of Hay.

William Dudek, whose farm home is east of Petoskey, is in Petoskey hospital suffering from a broken right leg, a dislocated right shoulder and arm as well as other injuries, sustained when he fell from the top of a load of hay last Monday at his farm home.

Mr. Dudek was assisting in hauling in his large crop of hay and while near the edge of the load, made a misstep and fell over the side. He struck the hard ground with his right side. He was taken to Petoskey hospital where his injuries were dressed.

Brakeman Killed at Pellston.

Charles Olson, formerly of Petoskey but for some years a resident of Cadillac and one of the best brakemen on this division of the G. R. & I., was instantly killed at Pellston at about 10 o'clock Wednesday forenoon of last week when he was knocked from the step of a box car and his head crushed when he hit the concrete platform.

Mr. Olson was brakeman on the Petoskey to Mackinaw local freight run and was assisting in the switching work at that point. He was riding on the step of the second car back from the engine. He had reached out to signal the engineer and failed to notice that the train was approaching the stand pipe.

He struck this with considerable force and was knocked to the cement platform, striking on his head. His jaw was broken and his head badly crushed. Death was almost instantaneous as he died within a minute or two after the accident. He was not run over by the train as was first reported.

Mr. Olson resided in Petoskey for many years and is a brother of Oscar Olson, well known drayman, and was a member of the Knights of Pythias lodge. He leaves a wife and two children.

BACKACHE IS A WARNING

Charlevoix People Should Not Neglect Their Kidneys.

Backache is often nature's most frequent signal of weakened kidneys. To cure the pains and aches, to remove the lameness when it arises from weakened kidneys, you must reach the cause—the kidneys. If you have pain through the small of your back, urinary disorders, headaches, dizzy spells, or are nervous and depressed, start treating the kidneys with a tested kidney remedy.

Doan's Kidney Pills have been proved good and are especially for weak kidneys. Doan's have been used in kidney trouble for over 50 years. Read Charlevoix testimony.

Mrs. W. L. Cowan, 210 Antrim St., Charlevoix, says: "I don't hesitate to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, for I have had good results from them. I had a severe backache and pains in my kidneys and was also annoyed by the kidney secretions. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store, and they brought me great relief."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Cowan had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

IT'S UP TO YOU

Do you want to help make Charlevoix county the most beautiful county in the state? God has done his part and it is up to us to do ours. People who have traveled a great deal admit that Charlevoix county is naturally one of the prettiest combinations of land and water that they have ever seen. Those who have always lived here and never have traveled naturally think that the whole world is the same, but if they are lazy and have not prospered, they probably think (in fact, I have heard it said by such people that it is the poorest place on earth, and those same people are still scratching their matches on parts which compare favorably with their condition.

"It takes all kinds of people to make a world." It also takes a good many kinds of people to make up the Charlevoix contingent. When I came here, 35 years ago, Charlevoix was surely an uninviting little burg, but it is not so now. Probably, there are few cities of its size that can boast of being as beautiful as this. The growth has been steady, but sure Bad Fire at Traverse City.

A spectacular fire of unknown origin at Traverse City, Thursday night, caused a loss of approximately $14,000 to the building on North Union street owned by the William Loudon estate and used as a wagon works by Robert Caldwell.

When the fire department answered an alarm they found the entire rear end of the building a mass of flames, and it was simply a question of keeping the fire from spreading rather than save any of the buildings already burning. The fire had evidently started in the lumber yards at the east end of the plant and spread to the building. There were rumors of the buildings being struck by lightning, but this was hardly possible, as the storm was not severe enough to cause any damage. It is also considered that the fire might have started from spontaneous combustion, as there were quantities of combustible materials about the works. Another theory is that a lighted match, cigar or cigarette stub had been thrown into the sawdust in the rear of the building. One theory is as good as another, for when it was discovered the fire had such a start that it was impossible to get any idea as to just where it started.

Robert Caldwell's loss is estimated at $8,000, which is partly covered by insurance. The loss to the Loudon estate is estimated at $6,000, with $3,000 insurance. It is probable that the buildings will be rebuilt.

Central Lake Visited by Fire.

Thursday night at midnight fire of unknown origin destroyed the store and two warehouses belonging to Thurston & Co., general merchants of Central Lake. The contents of the buildings were also a total loss. Bucket brigades and chemical apparatus were used, but could not check the flames. The loss on the buildings is $15,000, which is covered by insurance.

and today, as I look at it, we are just emerging from our baby clothes and we are beginning to put on airs—not Marthas, but just "lugs," as we used to call them when I was a boy, and we surely have a right to do so. It is now growing so steadily that we couldn't stop our growth nor our beautifying if we tried. Those of us who have already rebuilt, painted and slicked up generally, naturally compel those who have not done so to get busy and every day sees new improvements.

It has been said, and I guess truthfully so, that Charlevoix, has more homes with bathtubs than any other city of its size in the United States. This is not authentically said, but I believe it so.

A few days before election I went to a picnic at Ironton and saw, I guess, all the candidates for election. They all talked concrete roads and that was the best kind of a road that could possibly be built and would stand the big cars and I promised to vote for every one of them. They were not all elected, but I think they all ought to have been—Why? Because they all want concrete roads.

Yours,
VAN PELT.

HOW TO GUARD AGAINST DISEASES

Do not give your children patent medicines or buy charms of any kind to ward off the disease. The best preventive is cleanliness and strict observance of the rules that have been given.

Although there is no specific cure for the disease, much can be done to reduce the amount of crippling caused by the paralysis. It is important to remember that this requires the services of a trained physician and the care of a competent nurse. Unless you can give these to your child, send word at once to the department of health, so that the

Be Moderate in Your Diet, Breathe Deeply, and Take Tasseo

Fat persons, particularly those from 10 to 30 pounds above normal weight will be interested to learn that they may easily reduce their weight without starvation diet or tiresome exercise.

This can best be done by being moderate in your diet, so that you will not over-tax your assimilative organs, by getting plenty of fresh air, by breathing deeply and taking tasseo four times a day.

Tasseo may be obtained from any druggist in 5-grain tablets, take one after each meal and one before retiring at night. They cost little, are absolutely harmless, are pleasant to take and are designed to reduce fatty accumulations in the system wherever located.

A few days' treatment should show a noticeable reduction in weight, the flesh should become firm, the skin smooth and the general health improved, in fact your footsteps should even become lighter, your work seem easier and a lighter and more buoyant feeling take possession of your whole being.

Every person who is 10 or 20 pounds over normal weight should surely give this treatment a trial. You will probably find that it is just what you need.

patient may receive proper care in a well equipped hospital. Of the children cared for in hospitals, only one-quarter as many died as of those treated at home. Give your child a fair chance and let the hospital doctors care for it.

What the Health Department Will Do
If a case of infantile paralysis occurs in your home, your doctor must at once notify the department of health. An inspector will be sent to investigate. He will paste a sign on the door of your house and apartment warning all people not to enter. This sign must not be removed except by some one sent by the department of health. The inspector and nurse will tell you just what to do to protect yourself and the others in the family.

CHAPTER XXII.

Final Preparations.

ON the following day Happy Tom arrived with fifty men. "I got the last mother's son I could find," he explained as he warmed himself at O'Neill's stove.

"Did you go to Hope?"

"I did, and I saw the aplayvus him self."

"Gordon?"

"He's worse than we thought." Tom tapped his shining forehead significantly. "Left to let!"

"What—insane?"

"Nothing but echoes in his dome. The town's as empty as his bonnet, too, and the streets are full of snow. It's a sight!"

"Tell me about Mrs. Gordon."

"She's quite a person," said Slater slowly. "She surprised me. She's there, alone with him and a watchman. She does all the work, even to lugging in the wood and coal—he's too busy to help, but she won't leave him. She told me that Dan and Natalie wanted her to come over here, but she couldn't bring herself to do it or let them assist in any way. Gordon spends all his time at his desk, promoting, writing ads, and prospecting. He's got a grand scheme. He's found that 'Hope Consolidated' is full of rich ore, but the trouble is in getting it out, so he's working on a new process of extraction. It's a wonderful process—you'd never guess what it is. He smokes it out! He says all he needs is plenty of smoke. That bothered him until he hit on the idea of burning feathers. Now he's planning to raise ducks, because they've got so much down. Isn't that the limit? She'll have to fit him into a padded cell sooner or later."

"Poor devil!" said O'Neill. "I'm sorry. He had no natural mind."

Slater smiled. "I think it's pretty soft for him myself. He's made better than a stand-off—he lost his memory, but he saved his skin. It's funny how some men can't fall. If they slip on a banana peel somebody shoves a cushion under 'em before they light. I never got the best of anything. If I dropped asleep in church my wife would divorce me and I'd go to the electric chair. Gordon robs widows and orphans right and left, then ends up with a loving woman to take care of him in his old age. Why, if I even robbed a blind puppy of a hencent I'd leave a thumb print on his ear, or the dog's mother would turn out to be a bloodhound. Anyhow, I'll spend my declining years nestled up to a rock pile with a mallet in my mitt and a low browed gentleman scowling at me from the top of a wall. He'd lean on his shotgun and say: 'Hurry up, Fat-ty. It's getting late, and there's a ton of oakum to pick.' It just goes to show that some of us are born behind the game and never get even, while others, like Gordon, quit winners, no matter how much they lose." Having relieved himself of this fervid homily, Happy Tom unrolled a package of gum and thrust three sticks into his mouth. "Speaking of bad luck," he continued, "when are you going to get married, Murray?"

O'Neill started. "Why—never! It isn't the same kind of proposition as building a bridge, you know. There's a little matter of youth and good looks that counts considerably in the marriage business. No woman would have an old chap like me."

Slater took a mournful inventory of his chief's person, then said doubtfully: "You might put it over, Murray. I ain't strictly handsome myself, but I did."

An O'Neill slipped into his fur coat, after the fat man had slouched out, he caught sight of himself in the glass of his bureau and paused. He leaned forward and studied the careworn countenance that peered forth at him. Then shook his head. He saw that the hair was growing grayer, that the face was very plain, and—yes, unquestionably it was no longer youthful. Of course he didn't feel old, but the evidence that he was so admitted of no dispute, and it was evidence of a sort which no woman could disregard.

For a week the ice rose slowly, a foot a day, and in spite of the greatest watchfulness it took the false work with it here and there. But concentrated effort at the critical points saved the structure from serious injury. Then the jam in front of Jackson glacier went out, at least in part, and the ice began to fall. Down it settled, smoothly, swiftly, until it rested once more upon the shores. It was still as firm as in midwinter and showed no sign of breaking; nor had it moved downstream a hair's breadth. O'Neill gathered his forces for the final onslaught.

On April 5 the last of the steel for span No. 1 reached the front, and erection was begun. The men fell to with a vim and an enthusiasm impossible to describe. With incredible rapidity the heavy sections were laid in place. The riveters began their metallic song. The towering three beat traveler ran smoothly on its track, and under it grew a webwork of metal, braced and re-enforced to withstand, in addition to ordinary strains, the pressure of a hundred mile an hour wind. To those who looked on the structure appeared to build itself, like some dream edifice. It seemed a miracle that human hands could work that stubborn metal so swiftly and with so little effort. But every piece had been cut and fitted carefully, then checked and placed where it was accessible.

Now that winter had broken spring came with a rush. The snows began to shrink and the drifts to settle. The air grew balmy with every day; the drip from eaves was answered by the gurgling laughter of hidden waters. Here and there the boldest mountain slides began to show, and the tops of alder thickets thrust themselves into sight. Where wood or metal caught the sun rays the snow retreated. Pools of ice water began to form at noon.

The days were long, too, and no frozen winds charged out of the north. As the daylight lengthened so did the working hours of the toilers.

On April 18 the span was completed. In thirteen days Mellen's crew had laid 400 feet of the heaviest steel ever used in a bridge of this type. But there was no halt. The material for the second section had been assembled meanwhile, and the traveler began to swing it into place.

The din was unceasing. The clash of riveters, the creak and rattle of hoists, the shouts of men, mingled in a persistent, ear-splitting clamor, and foot by foot the girders reached out toward the second monolith which rose from the river bed. The well adjusted human machine was running smoothly. Every man knew his place and the duties that went with it; the hands of each worker were capable and skilled. But now the hillsides were growing bare, rills gasped the sloping snow fields, the upper gullies began to rumble to avalanches—forebodings of the process that would strip the earth of snow and ice and free the river in all its fury. In six days 300 feet more of steel had been hoisted fast to the complete section, and span No. 2 was in place. But the surface of the Salmon was no longer white and pure; it was dirty and discolored now, for the debris which had collected during the past winter was exposing itself. The icy covering was partially inundated also. Shallow ponds formed upon it and were rippled by the south breeze. Running waters on every side sang a menace to the workers.

Then progress ceased abruptly. It became known that a part of the material for the third span had gone astray in its long journey across the continent. There had been a delay at the Pittsburgh mills, then a blockade in the Sierras; O'Neill was in Omer at the end of the cable straining every nerve to have the shipment pushed through. Mellen brooded over his uncompleted work; Parker studied the dripping hills and measured the melting snows. He still smiled, but he showed his anxiety in a constant nervous unrest, and he could not sleep.

At length news came that Johnny Brennan had the steel aboard his ship and had sailed. A record run was predicted, but meanwhile the south wind brought havoc on its breath. The sun shone boldly into the valley of the Salmon, and instead of warmth it brought a chill to the hearts of those who watched and waited.

Twelve endless, idle days crawled by. Winter no longer gave battle; she was routed and in her mad retreat she threatened to overwhelm O'Neill's fortunes.

On May 6 the needed bridge members were assembled, and the erection of span 3 began. The original plan had been to build this section on the cantilever principle, so as to gain independence of the river ice, but to do so would have meant slow work and much delay—an expenditure of time which the terms of the option made impossible. Arrangements had been made, therefore, to lay it on false work, as the other spans had been laid, racking everything upon the weather.

As a matter of precaution the southern half of the span was connected to the completed portion, but before the connection could be fully made the remainder of the jam in front of Jackson glacier, which had caused so much trouble heretofore, went out suddenly, and the river ice moved downstream about a foot, carrying with it the whole intricate system of supporting timbers beneath the uncompleted span. Rusty measurements showed that the north end of the steel then on the false work was thirteen inches out of line.

It was Mr. Blaine who brought the tidings of this last calamity to Eliza Appleton. From his evident anxiety she gathered that the matter was of graver consequence than she could well understand.

"Thirteen inches in 1,500 feet can't amount to much," she said vaguely.

Blaine smiled in spite of himself. "You don't understand. It's as bad as thirteen feet, for the work can't go on until everything is in perfect alignment. That whole forest of piles must be straightened."

"Impossible!" she gasped. "Why, there are thousands of them."

He shook his head, still smiling doubtfully. "Nothing is impossible to Mellen and Parker. They've begun clearing away the ice on the upstream side and driving new anchor piles above. They're going to Ot tackle to them and yank the whole thing up stream. I never heard of such a thing, but there's no time to do anything else." He cast a worried look at the smiling sky. "I wonder what will happen next. This is getting on my nerves."

Out on the river swift work was going on. Steam from every available boiler was carried across the ice in feed pipes, the night shift had been roused from sleep, and every available man was busied in relieving the pressure. The drivers hummed long timbers into the river bed above the threatened point, hydraulic jacks were put in place, and steel cables were run to drum and pulley. The men worked sometimes knee deep in ice water, but they did not waver; they ran in an herodically short time the preparations were completed, a strain was put upon their tackle, and when night came the massive false work had been pulled back into line, and the traveler was once more swinging steel into place. It was a magnificent feat, yet not one of those concerned in it could feel confident that the work had not been done in vain, for the time was growing terribly short, and although the ice seemed to melt, it was rotting fast.

After the southern half of the span had been completed the warmth increased rapidly. Therefore the steel crew lengthened its hours. The men worked from 7 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock at night.

On the 13th, without warning of any sort, Gurdief glacier began moving forward. It had lain inactive even during the midwinter thaw which had started its sunnier brother, but that warm spell had evidently had its effect upon the giant, for now he shook off his lethargy and awoke. He stirred, gradually at first and without sound, as if bent upon surprising the interlopers; then his speed increased. As the glacier advanced it thrust the nine foot blanket of lake ice ahead of it, and this in turn crowded the river ice down upon the bridge. The movement at the camp site on the first day was only two inches, but that was sufficiently serious.

The onset of Gurdief at this time was, of course, unexpected, for no yard motion had ever been reported prior to the spring breakup. The action of the ice heretofore had been numbing, but now consternation spread. A panic swept the ranks of the builders, for this was no short lived phenomenon. This was the annual march of the glacier itself, which promised to continue indefinitely. A tremendous cutting edge, nine feet in thickness, like the blade of a carpenter's plane, was being driven against the bridge by an irresistible force.

Once again the endless thawing and chopping and gonging of ice began, but the more rapidly the encroaching edge was cut away the more swiftly did it bear down. The huge mass began to rumble; it "creaked," it split, it detonated, and, having finally loosened itself from its bed, it acquired increased momentum. As the men with chisels and steam-pumps became exhausted others took their places, but the structural gang clinging to its perch above, augmenting the din of riveters and the groning of blocks and tackle. Among the abashed men sleep now was out of the question, for the ice gained in spite of every effort. It was too late to remove the steel in the uncompleted span to a place of safety, for that would have required more time than to bridge the remaining gap.

Piling began to buckle and bend before that irresistible push. The whole nicely balanced mass of metal was in danger of being unseated. Mellen cursed the heavens in a black fury; Parker smiled through white lips; O'Neill ground his teeth and spurred his men on.

This feverish haste brought its penalty. On the evening of the 14th, when the span was more than three-quarters finished, a lower chord section fouled as it was lifted, and two loading beams at the tip of the traveler snapped.

On that day victory had been in sight. The driving of the last bolt had been but a question of hours, a race with the sliding ice. But with the hoisting apparatus out of use work halted. Swiftly, desperately, without loss of a moment's time, repairs began. No regrets were voiced, no effort was made to place the blame, for that would have caused delay, and every minute counted. Eleven hours later the broken beams were replaced and erection had recommenced.

But now for those above there was danger to life and limb. During the pause the ice had gained, and no effort could relieve the false work of its strain. All knew that if it gave way the workmen would be caught in a chaos of collapsing wood and steel.

From the morning of May 14 until midnight of the 16th the ironworkers clung to their tasks. They dropped their tools and ran to their meals; they gulped their food and fled back to their posts. The weaker ones gave out and staggered away, cursed and taunted by their companions. They were rough fellows and in their deep throated profanity was a prayer.

FORTY PEOPLE HURT IN WRECK

G. R. & I. TRAIN JUMPS TRACK NEAR WETZELL

Eleven Heavily Loaded Passenger Cars Go Into Ditch—No Deaths Occur.

Forty persons were injured, none fatally, late Saturday night when the Grand Rapids and Indiana resort flier, south bound from Mackinaw City, was derailed one mile northwest of Wetzell. The injured were rushed to nearby farmhouses, to Kalkaska, Manicelona and Cadillac. Some who were able to travel were brought to Grand Rapids, Sunday.

His Broken Rail.

The train, consisting of one day coach, eleven sleepers, engine and tender, was traveling at about 40 miles an hour when the day coach, which was directly behind the tender, hit a broken rail. The coach left the tracks and rolled down a 25 foot embankment, landing with its wheels in the air. The two sleepers following this coach left the track and stood at right angles to the rails. All the following coaches left the track, but none of the occupants was injured. Practically every window in the entire train was broken.

The train was filled to its capacity with northern resorters who were rushing home in fear of the threatened railroad strike. The day coach, especially, was crowded and the more seriously injured were in this car. These were taken to Kalkaska, residents near the scene of the wreck contributing their automobiles to hurry the sufferers to medical aid.

Conductor James T. Flaherty, of Grand Rapids, was among the injured.

The train in charge of Conductor Flaherty and Engineer Witkop, of Cadillac, was running one hour and fifteen minutes behind schedule. The train left Mackinaw City at 5 o'clock. A draw bar on the baggage car was broken shortly after the train left Mackinaw City and this car was sidetracked.

The wrecking train from Cadillac, carrying eleven Cadillac physicians, reached the scene shortly after the accident and a wrecking train left Grand Rapids at 10:20 Saturday night.

Special Train Reaches Scene.

Relief for the persons who were not removed in automobiles came at 2 o'clock Sunday morning when a special train from Cadillac reached the scene. Before that time a large bonfire had been made from scraps of wreckage.

CHARLEVOIX TEACHER REPORTED SERIOUSLY ILL

Forced to Undergo an Operation at Knoxville, Tennessee.

Word was received the last of the week concerning the serious illness of Miss Sophia Manson, teacher in the second and third grades of the Washington school, at Knoxville, Tennessee.

Miss Manson has been spending the summer at the home of Dr. J. B. Thielen in Knoxville. According to a letter from Dr. Thielen she is seriously ill with gastritis and other complications, and was taken to the hospital for an operation on Saturday.

Her condition is reported as very serious and it will be many weeks before she will be able to resume her duties in the schools here.

The information, coming at a late hour, will force the school board to hustle in their efforts to procure a substitute teacher to fill her place until she is able to resume her work.

FLEETING PROSPERITY IS FOOL'S PARADISE

Don't Let Smoke From Munition

PROTECTION, OUR BULWARK

Forget Not the Old Conditions Which Oppressed This Country Under the Democratic Free Trade Tariff Prior to the War—They Will Return to Plague and Hunger You Unless the Republicans Are Restored to Power.

"When we contemplate industrial and commercial conditions," says Mr. Hughes, "we see that we are living in a fool's paradise." This is the condition to which the administration and its supporters have deliberately closed their eyes. When the war cloud broke over Europe, this country was experiencing the most serious depression it had known since 1893, when the Democratic party and its policies were in full control of the United States.

Suddenly there came from over the sea a demand for munitions of war, clothing, food, supplies, everything needed by vast armies and by countries whose sons were taken from the field and the workshop, eager to return.

As a result our exports and the balance of trade in our favor have reached figures far surpassing any ever before known. Temporarily, especially in the East, there is no lack of work at high wages, for Europe must pay whatever price America asks. No thoughtful person would imagine that this condition is anything like real prosperity. How false it is, we in Oregon, who have the clearer vision, because not clouded by the smoke from munition factories, have fully felt and fully appreciated.

What the Republican candidate for president says about it the Democrats know to be true:

"Our opponents promised to reduce the cost of living. This they have failed to do, but did reduce the opportunities of making a living. Let us not forget the conditions that existed in this country under the new tariff prior to the war. Production had decreased; business was languishing; new enterprises were not undertaken; instead of expansion there was curtailment and our streets were filled with the unemployed."

The suspension of these conditions is not million-wide, only sectional, and depends upon the duration of the war. Those who think otherwise are, in deed, living in a fool's paradise.—Portland (Ore.) Telegram

MICHIGAN AS SEEN BY HUMORIST

SAYS PEOPLE ARE LOYAL TO THEIR STATE

Milwaukee Writer Describes State in Humorous But Truthful Manner.

Michigan is a large, water-cooled state, situated in, among and between the great lakes. It is split into two parts with no bridge between them, and has about 1,000 miles of lake coast, mostly occupied by summer hotels. The north part of Michigan is wild and rugged. It produces lumber, iron, copper and strong, rude characters in fiction. Farther south the state becomes milder and is exceedingly rich in automobiles, fruit and college students. Most of the automobiles in the world are made in Michigan, it being believed that any automobile which will travel through Michigan sand on the trial trip will never find roads to bother it elsewhere.

Michigan also makes furniture for most of the country. Grand Rapids is full of artists who can take a $10 tree and make five $100 dining tables out of it. Another product of which the state is justly proud is congressmen. The University of Michigan now turns out more representatives and senators than Yale or Harvard. Michigan is justly proud of its great university at Ann Arbor, where so many students are pursuing learning with whoops, yells, flags, cheers, megaphones and steam whistles.

Michigan was discovered by the French in 1634, but they prudently stuck to the lake and did not try to explore the interior in wagons. About 1800 the state became navigable and was settled rapidly by humorists who founded Kalamazoo, Ypsilanti and Paw Paw and other amusing places.

Michigan, being surrounded by a thousand feet of clear, cold drinking water, does not warm up early in the spring and the people usually put in their spring gardens with ear muffs on.

On the other hand, it stays cool all summer and the sweltering citizens of Illinois seek the state during July in search of chills. Northern Michigan is much used as a cure for hay fever, but farther south is afflicted with acute matrimony and hundreds of Chicago people who cross the lake to St. Joseph for a day's outing come back permanently married to their great chagrin.

Michigan people are loyal to their state, especially in the summer time, and live in hopes of speaking patronizingly to Ohio concerning Cleveland and general population statistics. The test of Michigan citizenship is the ability to pronounce Mackinac and Sault Ste. Marie correctly and to mention Lansing without referring to the history.

HOME OF AVERAGE MAN.

"But America is not simply a land for the man of special talent or of distinguished aptitude. This is the home of the average man, the ordinary man who is doing his best, whatever, by intent or aptitude and in our large industrial occupations where thousands are gathered together in one service, we want a recognition of human brotherhood in providing for the welfare of those who make the wealth of this great country."

"We want workingmen to be safeguarded from every injury that can be prevented. We want the health of the workmen looked after; every means provided which conduces to the proper standpoint of living; every means provided for proper recreation; appropriate means for education, for vocational training. In short the workingman who is on the job and expects to continue in that job ought to feel that he is doing something worth while for a community that appreciates it and gives him a fair chance to lead a happy and decent life.—From Mr. Hughes' speech at Detroit.

THE RIGHTS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS DO NOT STOP AT THE COAST LINE.

"When I say that I am an American citizen, I ought to say the proudest thing that any man can say in this world. But you can't have that pride if American citizenry is a cheap thing, if it is not worthy of protection this wide world over. There is no man who could successfully present to an American community the platform that an American citizen's rights stop at the coast line and that beyond that American life is to be the prey of any marauder who chooses to take it."—From a speech of Mr. Hughes in the West.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The fact that the Democratic campaign managers have booked Secretary Daniels for a speech in Maine seems to indicate that they have abandoned all hope of carrying the State and simply don't care what happens to the ticket in the September election.

Senator J. Ham Lewis, a spokesman for the administration, in attempting to apologize for the President's mollycoddle expression that we are "too proud to fight," explains that it is an old Latin quotation. But the people already know that it is out of date and the expression of a decadent nation.

"We don't want to maintain a political almshouse," remarked Mr. Hughes to the North Dakota farmers, and a nation applauds him. Americans are beginning to see a possibility in the near future of regaining their self-respect.

The administration seems to have sold everything it could, from the nation's honor down to the smallest rural postmaster's shop.

Secretary Daniels says this is no time for politics. And it's no time for Secretary Daniels, either.

Senator Lewis, defending the President on his "too proud to fight" expression, intimates that it was due solely to the ignorance of his audience that the popular interpretation that has been put upon it was evolved, and that anyway it didn't mean what it appeared to mean. The latter statement can be taken with some degree of confidence, as it is quite a well-known fact that most of the things the President says do not mean what they are supposed to mean.

Secretary Redfield has presented another of those living illustrations of the old adage that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread," with one important modification. The difference in the Secretary's case is that he walked right in and turned around and was kicked right out again.

The Democratic contingent in the Senate is all worked up over the fact that the terms of the treaty for the purchase of the Danish West Indies "leaked out." "Pitiless publicity," you understand, has been consigned to the scrap heap with a large assortment of various other Democratic policies and promises.

Of Mr. Wilson it may be said he meant well, but he now finds himself buried under the evidence of inefficiency that Mr. Hughes has brought forth.

Boston Woman Recommending It To Her Friends

Popular Boston Lady Says Tonaline Has Proven a Godsend to Her

It is always interesting to listen to the statements of our friends, and especially when you know they are sincere and honest in what they say. Added interest is created in a statement coming from one who has spent a lifetime in Boston, where she is well known socially.

Such a person is Annie Stewart, who resides in Boston, and is possessed of the respect and confidence of her associates, and is willing for anyone to call on her to verify the following signed testimonial.

"I have suffered with stomach trouble for the past seven years. It took the form of indigestion and dyspepsia. I had dizzy spells and headaches, and after I ate a little food it would ferment and cause gas to form in my stomach. I had pains all over my body, and was chronically constipated. My liver was torpid, and I felt generally miserable. I had doctored and had been in the hospital, but received no permanent relief. I was so nervous and restless that at night I could scarcely sleep. The gas pressing under my heart caused palpitation, and when I arose in the morning I was just as tired as when I retired. About two weeks ago I began to take toneline, and I can truthfully state that it has done wonders in my case. I am feeling like a new woman and can eat any kind of food. I sleep the night through and have no more aches or pains; in fact, it has cured me, and I am recommending it to all of my friends, as it has been a Godsend to me."

All druggists sell and guarantee toneline.

There are numerous symptoms of this trouble that toneline can relieve. In fact, any of the following may denote affections of the stomach: Indigestion, dyspepsia, belching of wind, bad breath, sick throbbing headache, poor circulation, night sweats, that tired feeling, costiveness, coated tongue or a poor complexion.

Caution:—As toneline is recommended as a flesh builder those not wishing to increase their weight 15 pounds or more should not take it continuously. Adv. 334

CANADA AS A COMMERCIAL COMPETITOR

Exports from Canada to the United States during our fiscal year 1916, were 28 per cent greater than for 1915, and 70 per cent greater than during the last fiscal year under the Republican tariff law, 1913. Notwithstanding the fact that Canada's exports to Great Britain during the Canadian fiscal year 1915-16 were more than double those of the two previous fiscal years.

For the 12 months ended last June the Dominion of Canada got into our market for $204,000,000 worth of her products, or at the rate of $17,000,000 monthly. For the same period 1915, we imported from Canada $159,570,000 worth of goods, and for 1913, $120,570,000 worth. The Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce reports that the total exports of Canada to Great Britain for the Canadian fiscal year 1915-16 were valued at $452,000,000, compared with $187,000,000 the year before. In addition to all this, Canada has contributed a generous sum to the expenses of the European war and in the upkeep of her fighting machine now battling for England. Had it not been for the war what would have prevented her from exporting a still greater volume of her products to the United States, with the kind assistance of the Democratic near-free-trade tariff law?

Eight states bordering on the Dominion are to elect United States senators this fall. The Republican party is confident that it will elect Charles Evans Hughes to the presidency, and gain control of the house by a handsome majority. One of the first acts looking to commercial preparedness is the revision of that wretched mess of misfit legislation, the Underwood tariff law. That law is an acknowledged failure as a revenue producer. Its sole defenders are the authors of its being. It has presented Canada with a splendid handicap in our domestic market without securing to us one iota of preference in the Canadian market. In 1913 (fiscal year) our exports to Canada totaled $415,000,000—peace products, all of them. In 1915, they had dropped to $300,000,000. In 1916 they rose to $467,000,000, but this was because Canada is leaning heavily on us for her supplies of manufactured war munitions.

It is imperative that the Republicans control the United States senate next year, if we are to have a tariff revision. The Democratic platform of 1916 unqualifiedly indorses the Underwood-Simmons tariff law, and the only platform promise ever kept by the Democratic party, with Woodrow Wilson's ring in its nose, proposes to continue the Underwood tariff law, if the party is continued in power. After-war conditions don't bother them. They are from the south.

But the products which we import from Canada in such volume, under the present tariff law, are those in the production of which our own border states are most particularly interested. While these greatly increased importations from Canada have an injurious effect on the whole country, on these border states the effect is especially disastrous. Our farmers and stock raisers may not have appreciated this during the past two years because the abnormal demand of Europe for their products, and the consequent high prices they have received, have distracted their attention from the real state of affairs. But the lumbermen are thoroughly alive to the situation. We cannot go on exporting our foodstuffs to Europe at the present rate, forever. When the war is over Europe will raise a share of her own food. We may be lucky to get back to our normal trade in foodstuffs with Europe, because the purchasing power of those peoples will be curtailed. But Canada can increase her hold on our market with little effort, under a Democratic law.

Therefore, regardless of consideration of the administrations' foreign policies, or the Mexican boggie, or the delightful personality of any particular Democratic candidate for the senate, it behooves every forward-looking farmer in these eight states to cast his vote for the senator who stands for the American protective policy, and America first, and that is not a Democrat.

The City Manager

(A series of articles on a new type of municipal government, which is spreading rapidly.)

Carr of Niagara Falls—a 400 Per Cent Investment.

Niagara Falls elects its commissioners on a partisan ballot. (In most of the commission-manager cities the non-partisan ballot prevails). For this reason it was feared in some quarters that the council would treat the city managership as a nice fat plum. But not so. The five councilors under the new plan realized their conspicuous accountability to the people for results and they could not take the political chances involved in hiring a local hack as their chief instrument.

Came from Cadillac.

So Ossian A. Carr was summoned there last January from the successful managership of the smaller city of Cadillac, Mich. In the latter place he had given some very interesting demonstrations of comparative efficiency. One of these concerned the sewer system, which had been installed about three years previous to his arrival in the city. It was fifteen inch calibre but was already choked by the infiltration of quicksand in which it was laid. In relaying it was found that in a section two hundred feet in length, four additional lengths of pipe were required.

After paying for the undoing of a few such costly mistakes, Carr saved the city in the first year of operation about $7,000 out of a budget of $78,000, or twice his salary.

On Business Basis.

At Niagara Falls Mr. Carr is again getting things down to a business basis. One of the recent improvements effected under his administration is a reorganization of the city's purchasing methods, which it is estimated will result in a saving of $10,000 per annum.

A new accounting system has been installed.

Abolish Offices.

Unnecessary offices carrying salaries amounting to $3,500 have been abolished.

When the city manager took up his work he promised to save the city $25,000 (five times his salary) in the first year, or quit. If Mr. Carr is making good the commissioners will realize four hundred per cent on their investment in his salary.

PERE MARQUETTE WILL BE REORGANIZED

Plan Offered for a Complete Change—Move Will Keep System Intact.

Plans for a complete reorganization of the Pere Marquette involving an issue of $105,000,000 in new securities to be exchanged with the stockholders for present securities totaling over $114,000,000 were approved Saturday by the state railroad commission. Under the plan, fixed interstate charges will be reduced from $4,000,000 to $1,500,000.

The purpose of the reorganization is to prevent a dismemberment of the various branches by warring factions among the stockholders. The plan provides for a bond issue of $36,000,000; preferred stock totaling $24,000,000 and common stock of $45,000,000. Of the new funds $16,000,000 will be used immediately to discharge receivers certificates and provide new equipment. The commission's decision is expected to result in the discharge of the receivers by the United States district court.

It has been announced that the Chevrolet Motor company has made a big cut in the price of their cars. Model 490 will sell complete with starter and lights, f. o. b. Flint for $490. DOUBLE WEDDING AT PETOSKEY

CHARLEVOIX CHAUFFEURS

Miss Edna Noble, Lloyd Watson, Sadie Ritchie and Elmer Smith Contracting Parties.

Saturday evening the friends of Lloyd Watson planned to give him a good start, when it became known that he was to wed Miss Edna Noble of this city. The couple planned to drive to Petoskey, and be quietly married by Rev. Harris, expecting to leave this city about 8:00 p. m.

Watson's chauffeur friends could not let a good tip pass by, so they proceeded to take charge of affairs. Watson's car stood in front of the hotel and the bunch let the air out of one tire and painted the car white. Then they proceeded to Petoskey to put on the finishing touches.

Watson and his bride-to-be had to clean up the car and change tires before they could get out of town. Upon arriving at Petoskey they were greeted by the bunch who took the car in hand. Tin cans, shoes, white paint, etc., were the appropriate decorations which followed.

After the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Harris at the parsonage, the couple was showered with rice and driven around Petoskey by the merry-makers. After a large crowd had congregated to witness their departure, the couple was allowed to enter their own car and proceed to Charlevoix. Reports from those who know claim they left nothing but dust clouds to mark their way out of Petoskey.

Mrs. Watson is the daughter of Mrs. Frank Blossat and has made Charlevoix her home all her life. She is an accomplished student in music and her host of friends extend hearty congratulations. Mr. Watson is a chauffeur who makes Charlevoix his headquarters every summer. The happy couple leave for Detroit about the 22nd, where Mr. Watson is employed. Later Mr. and Mrs. Watson will go to Georgetown, Kentucky, to visit with Mr. Watson's parents.

Elmer Smith and Sadie Ritchie were married in Petoskey Saturday evening by Rev. Harris, taking part in the double ceremony. Mr. Smith has been employed at the Michigan hotel during the summer season. Both Mr. and Mrs. Smith have the well wishes of their many friends.

Gebeau-Gordon.

Miss Alice Gordon, of Greenville, and Harry Gebeau, a well known young man of this city, were quietly married Monday evening, September 4, at the Baptist church, by Rev. Lloyd C. Vinyard. Their many friends extend hearty congratulations.

"The Plunderer."

"The Plunderer" affords for William Farnum a real "Farnum Part"—Big Bill Matthews of the Croix D'Or mine, a doughty, splendid steel-knit fellow, with a big warm heart and a punch in each hand. Bill and his partner are harassed by a secret enemy who imprisons them in a mine shaft, causes a strike of the workmen and blows up the reservoir upon which the power of the mine depends. These are only a few of the thrills that keep you breathless—hanging on the arms of your seat. The final climax where Big Bill and his partner discover their enemy is most stirring of all.

Then, too, there is a splendid double love-story which leaves a happy glow in the spectator's mind. In fact, "The Plunderer" is as perfect a photoplay as has yet been achieved. At the Majestic, Monday, September 11.

REPUBLICANS HOLD CONVENTION

TEN DELEGATES ELECTED TO STATE MEETING

Candidacy of Judge F. W. Mayne for Justice of Supreme Court Given a Big Boost

The Republicans of Charlevoix county held their county convention Tuesday in the court house, to elect delegates to the state Republican convention to be held in Saginaw, September 28.

The meeting was called to order and A. L. Fitch chosen to act as chairman and John Porter of East Jordan, secretary. Various committees were named and credentials of the delegates confirmed.

During the time occupied by committees preparing resolutions, etc., Judge Sullivan, who is holding court in the place of Judge Mayne, was called upon to address the convention. He spoke briefly, touching many subjects, which was thoroughly appreciated by the assembled delegates. Other prominent Republicans also gave short talks.

Delegates as follows were elected: W. J. Pearson, R. E. Newville, Will E. Hampton, E. N. Clink, F. P. Robbins, A. L. Fitch, W. J. Gallagher, Jacob E. Chew, John M. Harris and F. A. Kenyon.

Alternates: J. J. Porter, D. S. Payton, H. Lee Barnum, F. B. Wenzel, J. Niver, F. B. Thompson, Lisle Shanahan, R. W. Kane, R. W. Padlock and M. E. Silverstein.

The committee on resolution presented the following which was unanimously adopted by the convention: "The Republican party of Charlevoix county, in convention assembled, hereby again pledge ourselves, individually and as a party, to its principles, that it may be restored to full power in both nation and state."

"We hereby express confidence in our great leader, that eminent jurist and statesman, Charles E. Hughes, and note with pleasure the magnificent endorsement of his candidacy by our sister commonwealth, the state of Maine, and predict that the people of our great state of Michigan, under the able leadership of Albert E. Sleeper for governor and Luren G. Dickinson for lieutenant governor, knowing the good work accomplished by these leaders in positions of trust heretofore held by them, will return to full power the Republican party of our state."

"Charlevoix county presents to the Republicans of the state the name of Hon. Frederick W. Mayne, judge of the thirteenth judicial circuit, as a candidate for the office of justice of the supreme court. Judge Mayne has a wide and commendable experience on the bench and is well and favorably known throughout the entire state of Michigan. To those who may not have had the pleasure of his personal acquaintance we assure them of his eminent fitness to discharge the duties of this high office. In connection with his candidacy we call attention to the fact that this section of the state is without representation in our court of last resort the same being equally true as to all other elective state Republican offices."

"We therefore earnestly request the Republican electors of the state to place Judge Mayne in nomination for the office of justice of supreme court."

Dated September 12, 1916.

Respectfully submitted,

E. N. CLINK,
LISLE SHANAHAN,
FRED SHEPARD.

A committee of three was then named to ask "His Honor" to address the convention. The judge thanked the convention for the honor bestowed upon and dealt largely upon the support given him in what he termed as, "the fight for the ambition of his life." It might be stated here that Charlevoix's delegation will stand solid for Judge Mayne, and be a big majority of the votes in northern Michigan.

Chairman Fitch offered a resolution, extending the sympathy of the convention to Hon. W. J. Pearson, who is confined in the hospital at Petoskey and was unable to attend the convention.

HAD NARROW ESCAPE FROM ENRAGED BULL

Well Known Marion Township Farmer Painfully Bruised.

George Meggison had a narrow escape from death Tuesday on his place just south of town. He owns a large bull with a "bad" temper. While Mr. Meggison was in the field, the bull became enraged; charged him and knocked him down, trampling on him. Meggison managed to get to his feet, but the bull cornered him up against a fence and he owes his life to the fact that he was able to get hold of the nose ring and partially keep the animal off until help came.

Beyond a few bruises George is all right this morning but somewhat "shook up."

REPORT BIG BUSINESS

Many Visitors at Charlevoix Hotels During Past Week.

The proprietors of the Hotels Michigan and Charlevoix report that business last Sunday at both hotels was unusually large for this time of year. The Michigan, especially, which is now running on the European plan, is rapidly filling up and inquiries for accommodations are starting to come in again. Many who had left town during the last few weeks are figuring on returning. Evidently the rising temperature and the persistence of the prevailing epidemic have brought repentance for their scare over the recently projected railroad strike.

HARRIS-PURDY NUPTIALS THURSDAY

NEWLY WEDS WILL RESIDE AT LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Contracting Parties Well Known in City and Have Best Wishes of Host of Friends.

Simplicity and daintiness were the key notes of a quiet wedding which occurred Thursday afternoon of last week at the Meach cottage on Chicago avenue, when Miss Marion Harris, daughter of Judge E. R. Harris, of Ellsworth, and Mr. Lynn M. Purdy, of Los Angeles, California, were made man and wife.

A brief but impressive ring ceremony was used, after which a dainty and delicious luncheon was served. The bride was gown in a traveling suit of blue silk and wore a corsage bouquet of roses and phlox. Mrs. Purdy is one of Charlevoix's own girls, having spent a greater part of her life here, and her happy, sweet personality and winning ways have endeared her to a host of friends who wish her well.

Mr. Purdy is well known here, where he formerly held a position for many years in the store of his aunt, Mrs. Sarah Emrey. After leaving Charlevoix some two years ago he became identified in the hotel business in the west, where he now holds a responsible position with the Alexandria, Los Angeles' best hotel.

The happy couple left on the Manitou, Thursday evening, for Chicago, where they will spend a short time before going to their home in Los Angeles. They have the congratulations and best wishes of their host of Charlevoix friends for a long life of joy and happiness.

DIED FROM RESULT OF FALL

SHOCKING ACCIDENT OF LITTLE MARCIA BRANDOW

Fell Through Second Story Window
While Eating a Piece of Toast —Died Following Day.

Details of a shocking accident which resulted in the death of little Marcia Brandow on Wednesday of last week at Grand Rapids were received by Charlevoix friends the first of the week. The child was sitting on the window sill in a three-room apartment house, which was at that time occupied by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brandow, who formerly lived on what is known as the Nat Burns farm, south of this city.

Her mother did not miss her for several minutes after the fall, being busy engaged in her household work. The sound of moans attracted her attention, and it was then she noticed the child's sudden disappearance. Noticing the broken screen, she looked out and saw the child lying on the ground, two stories below. The child struck some stones and when picked up her head was part way under her body, and she was in a semi-unconscious condition.

The accident happened about five o'clock in the afternoon. Medical assistance was summoned and she was immediately taken to Butterworth hospital. The operation that followed showed that the inner lining of the skull had been pierced by some sharp object, and the brain had also been penetrated. The fracture was about four inches long and two wide. Seven stitches were necessary to close the wound. She came through the operation in apparent good shape. Later examination showed that her right leg was paralyzed, also a partial paralysis of her right arm. At one thirty a. m. Thursday a change came which resulted in her death about 15 minutes later.

The remains were taken to the home of Mrs. A. L. Disbrow, a former Charlevoix resident, from which place the funeral was held. The bereaved parents and relatives have the sincerest sympathy of their many Charlevoix friends.

NATIONAL PAY-UP WEEK OCT. 2-7

BEGIN TO MAKE YOUR PLANS FOR IT TODAY

Though Your Account May Be Small Cancel the Indebtedness With the Local Merchant.

October 2nd to 7th will be designated as National Pay-up Week in Charlevoix. During this time, all who owe accounts to local merchants are urged to pay them up, or at least pay something on them, and to lend their efforts to the success of the plan, both by deed and word.

This idea, which owes its inception to the Merchants Trade Journal, had its first successful try-out as a national movement in February, at which time hundreds of towns all over the United States reported an unprecedented stimulation of business, the collection of thousands of dollars of what had been considered "bad" debts and the rescue of many firms that had given credit "not wisely but too well" from the grave of bankruptcy. It was then demonstrated beyond question that such a plan was not merely feasible, but productive of such far-reaching benefits as to deserve a permanent place among our national institutions as a creator of sound commercial conditions and as a factor in promoting better understanding between those who have something to sell and those who buy and also a keener sense of their responsibility, one to the other.

Hand in hand with this went the plan, originating with the public-spirited bankers of Bemidji, Minn., of making short loans to responsible people, thus enabling them to clean up their small accounts and putting their indebtedness on a secured, interest-bearing basis, where every fair-minded man will agree that it should be.

It is up to us to make this second Pay-up Week an even greater success. Remember, the merchant has his bills to meet no less than you. Though your account may be small, yet, you are one of many on "his hooks and the little sums in the aggregate often spell ruin to the merchant who cannot collect them. Consider the old Scotch saying that "many a mickle makes a muckle."

Be sportsmanlike. Remember, your dealer is, in a way, at your mercy. He stakes his success, the comfort and happiness of his family and his business reputation upon your honesty and good faith. Don't let him be disappointed in you. Next to character, your credit is your greatest asset. Credit is the ladder by which in the business world climb back to success. See to it next month that all the rungs in your ladder are made sound. You may need to use it sooner than you think.

AND THE LITTLE OLD FORD RAMBLES RIGHT ALONG

Turns Completely Over in Accident
But Is Right on the Job Now.

A party of three in a Ford came to grief Wednesday morning between seven and seven thirty o'clock on the Mercer boulevard, between the Inn and the State road. A tire went flat, causing the car to turn completely over, plunging the occupants underneath. They managed, however, to extricate themselves with only a few bruises. Beyond a smash-up, the car was unhurt and came back home under its own steam.

Another triumph for "Lizzie." We suspect, however, that the principal cause of the accident was the diluted condition of the gasoline!

a Rampage.

A peculiar accident happened last Monday evening on Bridge street. Ben Yettaw started to back an Oakland, owned by Ise Dise, in order to turn from where he was standing in front of the Central Drug store, and got one foot mixed up with the accelerator. Result, after whizzing across Bridge street, climbing the curb and narrowly missing two trees the machine brought up at the fence between George Glados' place and the park, a distance of about 150 feet from where it started.

It is thought that Mr. Yettaw confused the driving gear of an Oakland with that of a "Lizzie," and naturally came to grief. Nobody hurt.

P. M. Discontinues Trains.

After September 24, the section from Charlevoix to Detroit and Toledo will end. Special trains will be run to Chicago and St. Louis on September 24, 26, 29 and October 1. A general revision of all running schedules will take effect on September 24.

SUICIDE AND AT- TEMPTED MURDER

BAY SHORE SQUAW MAN KILLS HIMSELF

Bohemian Laborer Mortally Wounded
His Wife in Insane Fit of Jealousy Sunday Night.

Alex. Alezbarth, a Bohemian laborer, shot and mortally wounded his wife Sunday night at their home near the Superior Lime Works, Bay Shore, where he was employed, and then turned the pistol upon himself with fatal effect.

He had been intensely jealous of his wife for some time and Sunday night, when she proposed attending church, he objected strenuously to her going, suspecting that she had made an appointment to meet some male admirer. An altercation followed, and he finally drew a thirty-two calibre revolver and shot her three times through the head as she stood holding her baby in her arms. He then ran into the front room and reloading the gun shot himself through the right temple, the bullet lodging in the brain and death resulting instantly.

The body was brought to Charlevoix and was buried by the county Monday. The woman was taken to the Petoskey hospital and at last report was partially paralyzed and had practically no chance for recovery. The baby was uninjured.

The coroner decided to hold no inquest in the case as the circumstances are sufficiently plain to reader such a procedure unnecessary.

The dead man was formerly a resident of Garden Island and owned some 80 acres of land on the Beavers. It is claimed by Mrs. Charles Hunt, who is a sister of Alezbarth's wife, that he had openly made threats to kill all the Indians on Garden Island.

The Ladies' Aid of the Barnard church will hold a chicken pie supper on Friday evening of this week. Supper 25 cents. Everyone invited. Adv. 371f

Correspondents Take Notice

In general correspondence for THE COURIER give us real news and plenty of it, but in some instances (Don't say it is NOT yourself until you have read this and thought it over) in some instances there are faults that ought to be corrected.

DON'T PIN your pages together but NUMBER them in order. Don't write about your own family EXCLUSIVELY, give your NEIGHBORS a chance, they, too, take THE COURIER, or ought to.

Don't write about the neighbor who lives in the same house or the next house or in the same neighborhood visiting yourself or another neighbor. That's not NEWS.

Don't make news, look it up, there is plenty of it. Don't neglect to mention a neighbor or a neighbor's visitor because you don't like him or her or your neighbors will think you small.

DON'T confine your news to personals ALONE. There are lots of things of public interest in your vicinity, marriages, deaths, accidents, sickness, births, road repairs, new houses, old houses built over or extensively repaired, visitors from a distance distinguished or otherwise, school beginning, a new teacher, people going on a long tour by auto or rail or returning from the same, picnics, school reunions, and a thousand other things, which are all real, live news. I have known a correspondent to have a dozen items about Mrs. S. visiting Mrs. X. who lived in the same house or Mrs. Y. visiting Mrs. Z. who lived within a stone's throw of each other, and not mention at all the fact that a whole family were overturned in the ditch by a careless auto driver and half of them killed, a state officer spent the day at his old home at this same Mrs. X's. A new gravel road was in progress of construction in front of correspondent's house, school is to begin next week with the experienced and successful Miss X. in charge, and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. had just been married to Mr. R. of Gnessville. Have a nose for news and know when you meet an item.

Don't write INCOMPLETE items, like this "Mr. S. was in town." Mr. S. of where, what "town," when, whom did he visit, and in some important cases of public concern, why?

Don't SCRATCH it off but write plainly, especially proper or technical names.

Don't wait until the last day in the afternoon but be sure your letter is mailed Monday morning.

By living up to these hints you will make yourself a reputation as a strong, capable correspondent, gain a reputation with your neighbors for fairness, avoid the charge of egotism, too much "I" and make yourself solid with the editor who will bear you in grateful remembrance.

vels, but we thought that perhaps you might be interested, so we have used in an illustrative way, this incident from a little boy's life—an incident which you can match in your own life—to lure you on to reading the answer to the question:

"Do we need good roads?"

"It should be unnecessary to ask a question like this in any community in the United States today. We should be so far ahead of that stage in community building, that to ask that question would at once mark our own position far back in the ranks of citizenship. However that may be, we must ask to be 'limbered up.' Our roads are the bolts and pulleys in this machinery. They transmit our social, educational and agricultural power. If these bolts and pulleys are 'gummed up' they pull slowly and irregularly, and our social, educational and agricultural life is 'gummed up' in like proportion. There is no escaping this truth.

"We know that travel educates, but too often we use the word travel in the sense that we must get away off yonder somewhere before the education begins to 'seep in,' when as a matter of fact the need for travel is right here at home. We need closed communication, need to know each other better; and there is nothing in this world which will more quickly break down the barriers of isolation and the monotony of the farm than easy and smooth traveling.

"We do need good roads.

"There is really no reason to argue on this subject among ourselves. This need is a fact—a fact as hard and as solid as a concrete road. But we do need to have impressed upon our minds the intensity of this need for better highways and to have this need impressed so deeply that we will act instead of talk, and thus put our community on the basis, as financiers would say, of a going concern. If we continue to talk without action, good roads in our community will be as indefinite and distant as the milky way.

"The history of man is the record of man's struggle against nature. Slowly he has loosed the bonds that have held him at the mercy of his foes. But we who are yet living on bad roads are bound hand and foot while the elements play about us. When the rains come we are stuck fast in the mud, blocked from the markets and from the profits which would be ours but for our own stupidity.

"If we are not going to build modern highways, get out of the mud and connect up with the outside world on hard-surface roads, we would display wisdom by turning back to cave days and 'hole up,' not for the winter, but for eternity, so far as our community life is concerned.

"But we started out, you say, to hang this discussion on this peg: 'Do we need good roads?'

"Yes, we do.

"We need good roads if we are going to add interest to life in this community. To add interest, make the most profit from our farms, and hold our young people, we must keep in line with other communities. This is not mere talk repeated so many times that you may throw it aside as amounting to nothing. It is important enough to warrant sending a corps of bell ringers through the skies, if we could, to wake up to a realization of the fact that our work on our particular patch of the earth's surface, is how to get the most out of life—social, educational and agricultural. And the only way to do that effectively is to build good roads.

"The evolution of highways parallels the evolution of the whole scheme of transportation. Early methods of transportation depended upon oxen, teams and horses. Better vehicles demanded better roads and the automobile has been the greatest factor in compelling the permanent paved highway. Both have made the office, store and factory so accessible to the rural home that people have moved still farther away from the congested districts of the city, necessitating still greater development of the rural highway.

"A hundred years have passed since the National Pike demonstrated that a better road is a stimulus to better fences, better barns, better houses, better people, and better land values along its course. Corresponding conditions rule today, even though modern traffic conditions have made it necessary to 'rehabilitate' the National Pike in part by the use of concrete pavement.

"Statistics show that at least 70 per cent of the automobiles manufactured recently have found their way to the country, hence the rural dweller has not only been given the opportunity, but developed a greater desire to travel today than ever before. Moreover, he has seen good roads and now appreciates the absolute necessity for them, and for their further extension in his community.

"One of the most recent proofs of why we should have better roads comes from Ohio, where highway enthusiasts point to the fact that those counties where roads have not been improved have lost population,

DO WE NEED GOOD ROADS?

ARE BEST ASSETS OF ANY COMMUNITY

Speech by Harry D. Boardman Made On Fair Grounds On Thursday of Last Week.

Good roads, especially those built of concrete, was given a great boost at the county fair last week, in a speech by Harry D. Boardman. Mr. Boardman was introduced by George H. Van Pelt, who said:

It has been my good fortune to have lived at Norwood in this county for 34 years. I have seen her fine forests of hardwood cut down and the land by degrees transformed into farms. When I was a boy I lived on a farm and have always had a soft spot in my heart for farm life and in a quiet way I have tried to make my farm friends see wherever they could better their conditions. When the clearings were small I showed them how they could insure their winter's supply by planting on the road sides—how they could improve their farms by keeping cattle and sheep, because we all know we can't always keep taking out from anything and have it make good, without we put something in. It is exactly the same with a farm as it is with a bank, but the greatest gain of all is in good roads. This, I have talked for 34 years, and with the auto's coming, we had better roads than any of the counties around us.

Now, the time has come for us to make them better still, because we have learned that the very best macadam roads that can be built will not stand the wear and tear of the big autos. They have utterly destroyed the value of the nine foot gravel roads that were built last year and this shows that it is a waste of money to build any more of our main roads with gravel. There is only one road that will stand this great strain and that is concrete and now it has to be and is admitted by all who use the roads either by auto or wagon.

So I have taken the liberty of inviting a young friend of mine to come up and speak to you these four days of our county fair. He was born on a good macadam road, but when arrived at years of maturity and began to fight the battle of life, he found many boulders, washouts and thank-you-marks in the road and he began to labor for himself and for his fellow men. He soon became a concrete "crank." Concrete is a good strong mix and conveys the idea of great strength—strength of character, strength to build on. Concretely, to be concrete, why, you have to be loyal to your concrete ideas—or his concrete ideas.

He will now express to you in better language than I can—but he don't understand the great benefit of concrete roads one bit better than I do—you soon learn that he is a concrete hustler from Hustleville, Hustle county.

Permit me to introduce to you Mr. Harry D. Boardman, who will now tell you much about concrete roads.

"Where Bobby climbed a tree in his back yard to get a glimpse of foreign lands beyond the hill, he unconsciously answered the call of the road. He wanted to travel. Later the lure of the road still pulling, he sallied forth like a valiant knight of old, riding a stick horse, made a gallant dash of many leagues across the pasture, took mental notes on the new land, put the lash to his steed, and was back to the kitchen door in time for supper, travel worn, and hungry. He tracked up the kitchen with his muddy boots and got spanked and thereby learned his first lesson on the advantages of traveling on a good road.

"Not every one of course is interested in Bobby and his earlier tra-while on the other hand counties that have modernized their roads have grown in population and land values have raised.

"The U. S. Department of Agriculture has found that in Spottsylvania county, Virginia, from an investment of $100,000 to improve 40 miles of road the results were most surprising. Two years after completing this road the railroad shipped from Fredericksburg, the county seat, during a period of twelve months, 71,000 tons of products of the soil, hauled over the improved highway to that town. Before the improvement had been made the total was only 29,000 tons annually—the result of a better highway to the railroad.

"Results equally as startling were shown in the quantity of dairy products. In 1909 these amounted to 114,815 pounds, in 1911 they had risen to 253,028 pounds—an increase of practically 130 per cent in two years.

"Summing up the answer to our question, a portion of a speech made not long ago by Governor Ralston of Indiana, may be quoted:

"Transportation means commerce; commerce means a better understanding between people, the more people trade with one another, the more they appreciate their interdependence upon one another and interdependence in the end breeds neighborhood and closer fellowship. People living ten miles apart without any means of transportation connecting their respective communities are strangers, though they are citizens of the same county, whereas, people living 25 miles apart with their respective localities by an easy means of transportation are friends, and by their personal contact with one another, each gives the other an impetus in life which minimizes selfishness and magnifies good will among men. And thus it is that highways and transportation no longer separate farms and neighbors, they connect them. A road is a tie that binds and the longer the road the more far-reaching is its binding and brother-making power."

"The time has come where we must have good roads whether we want them or not. If we do not want them we will be left far behind in the march of progress. The dilapidated looking farm with a good road passing it will soon be a thing of the past. Such farms will soon be found only in the back hills, remote from good roads."

Iron In the Ocean.

A piece of iron will sink to the bottom no matter how deep the water is, because water is only slightly compressible. If water were highly compressible, as air is, the water at a great depth would be much denser and therefore heavier, and an object would sink until it reached a point at which its weight would be less than that of the water which it displaced, and there it would float, as clouds float in the atmosphere. But a cubic foot of iron weighs more than a cubic foot of water at a depth of two miles, just as it does at the surface, and therefore continues sinking until it reaches the bottom.—Christian Herald.

PARTIES AND PARTISANSHIP

Political parties are a necessity. While independent voters have their uses in keeping the parties in balance, punishing them for their shortcomings or spurring them on to greater achievement, it is through political parties that all constructive legislation of whatever kind has been enacted and will continue to be enacted.

Political parties are the nucleus around which the voters of the United States gather. Citizens join that party which comes nearest to representing their ideas in national and state affairs and, while in county and town matters, they are governed to some extent by their likes or dislikes of candidates whom they know personally, yet, unless some candidate is especially objectionable, they vote in these matters as they do in national and state affairs and they are right in doing so.

The Courier certainly believes in that independence which will force both parties or all parties to put up their very best men who are available, but this having been done, is it common sense to vote for a man on another ticket unless he is decidedly better than your own candidate? As long as there is use for parties at all, and, in a republic, there always will be use for them, there should be party loyalty all along the line.

Whenever a majority of the people of any community, district, state or the nation are convinced that the principles advocated by any party better fit that party to rule, that it will pass laws which will bring more happiness and prosperity and better conditions generally than can be passed by any other party; where they are satisfied that from the character and experience of its candidates and the history of the party itself, it will adhere more closely to its party pledges and give a wiser, more honest, more equitable administration of our government than any other party, then in the opinion of The Courier, it becomes the absolute duty of every citizen to support that party. And this support should be extended, not only to the nation and state, but to the congressional and legislative districts who constitute the law making bodies of the nation and state, and can be maintained and public opinion made effective.

The above is not written in a partisan spirit. While as all its readers know, The Courier has decided opinions on party politics, we believe they are founded upon the above fundamental principles. We support the Republican party principles, not because the editor's father did, or his grandfather did, but because we believe that the best interests of the nation are promoted by that party. We of course concede to every person the right to the opposite belief.

The above is written because we have no sympathy with the non-partisan idea, and we repeat that there is not a piece of constructive legislation on the statute books today which was not put there by some political party. When a politician says he is not a partisan, watch out for him. He is posing—perhaps imposing on you.

O. B. FULLER, A CREDIT TO MICHIGAN

The Republican state convention this month will undoubtedly nominate the Hon. O. B. Fuller, of Delta county, as auditor general of Michigan.

There is a great deal of empty praise and political buncombe used in describing some candidates for office, and people take it all with a grain of salt. But in the case of Mr. Fuller there is no need for the press agent or the party windjammer.

Fuller has simply made good. His record in political office has been the same sort of record which would have brought him promotion in business employment or resulted in the turning over to him of great responsibilities upon the simple merit test.

The office of auditor general of Michigan should never be filled by a professional politician, for such a one might find great opportunity to exploit the people of the state without their finding it out until long afterwards. In the past some men have filled this office as a political enterprise, but Fuller has filled it as a conscientious public servant.

He has given an up-to-date efficiency to the system of the auditor's department, and his handling of the business of all the people of the state should insure him this office as long as he will consent to accept it. The salary of the auditor general is ridiculously small and his work is continuously growing, while the responsibilities of this office are reflected more or less in every department of the state government.

Mr. Fuller will be again nominated by his party, and the nomination accorded and carried in November by the people of all parties in every county of the state.

LOTS OF PEP!

This time of the year it is usual for people to feel sluggish. You can't get your mind to working, somehow, and you wonder what will become of you.

Let's blame it on summer. But let's also try to overcome it. Here's how: Begin in the morning by using cold water in washing and drinking a glass of it. Hum a tune while you're at it. When you are at work, think of it, be interested in it and—hum a tune while you're at it.

Returning home wear a smile and glint in your eyes; stay jolly while wife's preparing supper and—hum a tune while you're at it.

Whenever you are out walking, keep your head up, chin in, body erect. Don't slump. Walk with a springy step. Keep that glint in your eyes, that smile on your cheeks and a happy thought in your mind, and—hum a tune while you're at it. Soon you'll find yourself with the tune you hum, and you'll know then that you have overcome that summer sluggishness.

The next thing you'll find yourself doing will be HUMMING A TUNE IN SPITE OF TROUBLE-SOME THOUGHTS.

How would that be for pep?

When getting ready for that vacation, remember we are headquarters for trunks, suit cases, leather goods, cribs, etc. All kinds at reasonable prices. Benj. Brown. Adv. 35tf

HOG CHOLERA OUTBREAK CHECKED

VETERINARY FAILED TO RECOGNIZE DISEASE

Breezy Point Farm Suffers Loss of Twenty-one Hogs Before Outbreak is Checked.

Hog cholera was discovered among the swine on Breezy Point Farm at Ironton, July 14. The disease, which is very contagious, was introduced with two chester white gilts brought from Indianapolis. These hogs had been given the immunizing treatment but, in this case, the treatment failed to immunize for both died of the disease shortly after arrival. The veterinary who attended the sick animals failed to recognize the disease and it was only after other hogs began to die that the trouble was identified as cholera.

As soon as the truth was known the local board of health quarantined the premises. Anti-hog cholera serum was ordered, and the state live stock sanitary commission notified. A trained veterinary was sent from Lansing to investigate and he confirmed the hog cholera diagnosis. He also administered the serum to such hogs on the farm as were well enough to take the treatment and to some hogs in the neighborhood which had been exposed. None of the well hogs which were treated with the serum were lost, but 21, which were too sick to be treated, died. As a result of the quarantine and the other sanitary precautions the disease did not spread.

Hog cholera manifests itself by some one or all of several symptoms. These are loss of appetite, weakness of limbs, fever, dullness and inflammation of the eyes, rough coat, and in the final stages there may be red or purplish discolorations on the skin of the ears, nose and belly. There may be diarrhoea or constipation. The animal becomes thin, breathes with difficulty, and seeks a quiet place to lie down. In post-mortem examination the kidneys and lymph glands show small blood spots and there are other lesions which, to a trained observer, indicate the disease.

There is no remedy for hog cholera, but it may be prevented by immunizing healthy animals with serum or serum and virus. Isolation of infected animals, burning of dead

CHAPTER XXIII. Eliza's Feelings Change.

OF this dramatic struggle Eliza Appleton had watched every phase with intensest interest, but when at last she knew that the battle was won she experienced a peculiar revulsion of feeling. So long as O'Neill had been working against odds, with the prospect of ruin and failure forever imminent, she had felt an almost painful sympathy, but now that he had conquered she felt timid about congratulating him. He was no longer to be pitied and helped. He had attained his goal and the fame he longed for. His success would inevitably take him out of her life. She was very sorry that he needed her no longer.

She did not watch the last bridge member swing, but went to her room and tried to face the future. Spring was here; her book was falsified; there was the need to take up her life again. She was surprised when Murray came to find her.

"I missed you, Eliza," he said. "The others are all down at the river bank. I want you to congratulate me."

She saw, with a jealous twinge, that exultation over his victory had overcome his weariness, that his face was alight with a fire she had never before seen. He seemed young, vigorous and masterful once more.

"Of course," he went on, "the credit belongs to Parker, who worked the bridge out in cash detail—he's marvelous—and to Mellen, who actually built it, but I helped a little. Praise to me means praise to them."

"It is all over now, isn't it?" "Practically. Blaine has called New York that we've won. Strictly speaking, we haven't as yet, for there's still the breakup to face. But the bridge will come through it without a scratch. The ice may go out any minute now, and after that I can rest." He smiled at her gladly. "It will feel good to get rid of all this responsibility, won't it? I think you've suffered under it as much as I have."

A little wistfully she answered: "You're going to realize that dream you told me about the day of the storm at Kyak. You have conquered this great country—as you dreamed." He acquiesced eagerly, boyishly. "Yes. Whirling wheels, a current of traffic, a broad highway of steel—that's the sort of monument I want to leave."

"Some time I'll come back and see it all completed and tell myself that I had a little part in making it." "Come back?" he queried. "Why, you're going to stay till we're through, aren't you?"

"Oh, no! I'm going south with the spring flight—on the next boat perhaps."

His face fell; the exultant light gradually faded from his eyes.

"Why, I had no idea! Aren't you happy here?"

She nodded. "But I must try to make good in my work as you have in yours."

He was looking at her sorrowfully, almost as if she had deserted him.

"That's too bad, but—I suppose you must go. Yes, this is no place for you. I dare say other people need you to bring sunshine and joy to them just as we old fellows do, but—I've never thought about your leaving. It would not be right to ask you to stay here among such people as we are when you have so much ahead of you. Still, it will leave a gap. Yes, it certainly will—leave a gap."

She longed desperately to tell him how willingly she would stay if he only asked her, but the very thought shocked her into a deeper reserve.

"I'm going east to sell my book," she said stiltedly. "You've given me the climax of the story in this race with the seasons."

"Is it a love story?" he asked. Eliza flushed. "Yes. It's mostly love."

"You're not at all the girl I thought you were when we first met. You're very—different. I'm sure I won't recognize myself as the hero. Who—or what is the girl in the story?"

"Well, she's just the kind of girl that would appeal to a person like you. She's tall and dark and dashing, and, of course, she's remarkably beautiful. She's very feminine too."

go out. I want to see the last act of the drama."

When O'Neill left her he was vaguely perplexed, for something in her bearing did not seem quite natural. He was forlorn, too, at the prospect of losing her. He wondered if fathers suffered thus, or if a lover could be more deeply pained at a parting than he. Somehow he seemed to share the feelings of both.

Early on the following morning Eliza was awakened by a sound of shouting outside her window. She lay half dazed for a moment or two until the significance of the uproar made itself apparent; then she leaped from her bed.

Men were crying: "There she goes!" "She's going out!"

Doors were slamming, there was the rustle and scuff of flying feet, and in the next room Dan was evidently throwing himself into his clothes like a fireman. Eliza called to him, but he did not answer, and the next moment he had fled, upsetting some article of furniture in his haste. Drawing her curtains aside, the girl saw in the brightening dawn men pouring down the street, dressing as they went. They seemed half dazed. They were yelling at one another, but she could not gather from their words whether it was the ice which was moving or the bridge. The bridge! That possibility set her to dressing with tremulous fingers, her heart sick with fear. She called to Natalie, but scarcely recognized her own voice.

"I don't know," came the muffled reply to her question. "It sounds like something—terrible. I'm afraid I'll fall in or get hurt." The confusion in the street was growing. "Eliza!" Natalie's voice was tragic.

"What is it, dear?" "It's help me, quick!"

"How?" "I can't find my other shoe."

But Eliza was sitting on the floor, facing up her own stout boots, and an instant later she followed her brother, pursued by a wall of dismay from the adjoining chamber. Through the chill morning light she hurried, asking many questions, but receiving no coherent reply from the racing men.

Then, after endless moments of suspense, she saw with relief that the massive superstructure of the bridge was still standing. Above the shouting she heard another sound, indistinct, but insistent. It filled the air with a whistling movement; it was punctuated at intervals by a dull rumbling and grinding. She found the river bank black with forms, but like a cat she wormed her way through the crowd until the whole panorama lay before her.

The bridge stood as she had seen it on the yesterday—slender, strong, superb in the simplicity of its splendid outline, but beneath it and as far as her eyes could follow the river she saw, not the solid spread of white to which she had become accustomed, but a moving expanse of floes. At first the winter burden slipped past in huge masses, acres in extent, but soon these began to be rent apart; irregular black seams ran through them, opened, closed and threw up ridges of ice shavings as they ground together. The floes were rubbing against the banks, they came sliding out over the dry shore like tremendous sheets of cardboard manipulated by unseen hands, and not until their nine foot edges were exposed to view did the mind grasp the appalling significance of their movement. They swept down in phalanxes upon the wedgethe ice breakers which stood guard above the bridge piers, then they halted, separated, and the armored cutting edges sheared through them like blades.

A half mile below, where the Salmon hung itself headlong against the upper wing of Jackson glacier, the floating ice was checked by the narrowed passageway. There a jam was forming, and as the river heaved and tore at its growing burden a spectacular struggle went on. The sound of it came faintly but impressively to the watchers—a grinding and crushing of bergs, a roar of escaping waters. Fragments were upended, masses were rearing themselves edgewise into the air, were overturning and colliding. They were wedging themselves into every conceivable angle, and the crowding procession from above was adding to the barrier momentarily. As the passageway became blocked the waters rose; the river piled itself up so swiftly that the eye could note its rise along the banks.

But the attention of the crowd was divided between the jam and something far out on the bridge itself. At first glance Eliza did not comprehend; then she heard a man exclaiming:

"He was going out when we got here and now he won't come back."

The girl gasped, for she recognized the distant figure of a man, dwarfed to tiny proportions by the bulk of the structure in the mazes of which he stood. The man was O'Neill; he was perched upon one of the girders near the center of the longest span, where he could watch the attack upon the pyramidal ice breakers beneath him.

"He's a fool," said some one at Eliza's back. "That jam is getting bigger."

"He'd better let the bridge take care of itself."

She turned and began to force her way through the press of people between her and the south abutment. She arrived there, disheveled and panting, to find Slater, Mellen and Parker standing in the approach. In front of their extended long skeleton tunnel into which Murray had gone.

"Mr. O'Neill is out there!" she cried to Tom.

Slater turned and, reading the tragic appeal in her face, said reassuringly: "Sure! But he's all right."

"They say—there's danger."

Happy Tom's round visage puckered into a doubtful smile. "Oh, he'll take care of himself."

Mellen turned to the girl and said briefly:

"There's no danger whatever."

But Eliza's fear was not to be so easily quelled.

"Then why did he go out alone? What are you men doing here?"

"It's his orders," Tom told her. Mellen was staring at the jam below, over which the Salmon was hurling a flood of ice and foaming waters. The stream was swelling and rising steadily. Already it had nearly reached the level of the timber line on the left bank. The blockade was extending upstream almost to the bridge itself. Mellen said something to Parker, who shook his head silently.

Dan Appleton shouldered his way out of the crowd, with Natalie at his heels. She had dressed herself in haste. Her hair was loose; her jacket was buttoned awry. On one foot was a shoe, on the other a bedroom slipper, muddy and sodden. Her dark eyes were big with excitement.

"Why don't you make Murray come in?" Dan demanded sharply.

"He won't do it," muttered Slater. From the ranks of the workmen came a yell of triumph as an unusually heavy load was swept against the breakers and rent asunder. The funnel of the imprisoned waters below was growing louder every moment. Across the lake came a stentorian rumble as a huge mass was loosened from the front of Gartsfeld. The channel of the Salmon where the lookers stood was a heaving, churning cauldron over which the slim bridge hung itself defiantly.

Eliza plucked at her brother's sleeve imploringly, and he saw her for the first time.

"Hello, sis!" he cried. "How did you get here?"

"Is he in danger, Danny?" "Yes—no! Mellen says it's all right, so it must be, but—that dam!"

At that moment Natalie began to sob hysterically, and Dan turned his attention to her.

But his sister was not of the hysterical kind. Seizing Tom Slater by the arm, she tried to shake him, demanding fiercely:

"Suppose the jam doesn't give way! What will happen? Happy Tom stared at her uncomprehendingly. Her voice was shrill and insistent. "Suppose the water rises higher. Won't the ice sweep down on the bridge itself? Won't it wreck everything it it goes out suddenly? Tell me!"

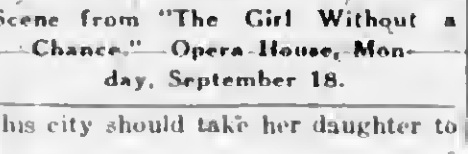

"It can't hold," Mellen says so."

Slater, like the others, found it impossible to keep his eyes from the river where those immeasurable forces were at play; then in his peculiar incoherent manner he complained: "I told 'em we was crazy to try this. It ain't a white man's country; it ain't a safe place for a bridge. There's just one God awful thing after another!" He broke into a shout, for Eliza had slipped past him and was speeding like a shadow out across the irregularly spaced ties upon which the bridge track was laid.

THEATRICAL

One of the essentials to genuine greatness is the ability to tell the truth, even about unpleasant subjects. Thousands of parents allow their daughters to go their way in ignorance suffering shame and degradation, simply for the lack of courage to tell them the exact truth. In writing "The Girl Without a Chance," the wonderful white slave play, which will be seen at the Charlevoix theatre, Wednesday, September 18, Whitney Collins, the author, has not hesitated to speak the plain truth. That is why every mother in Scene from "The Girl Without a Chance." Opera House, Monday, September 18.

see this play, the girl will learn a lesson there that no parent could teach her. She will be placed on her guard against one of the greatest evils she will ever have to face. It is the plain spoken story of a poor working girl trying to escape from the snares of the "White Slave Traffic."

It is an almost hopeless struggle, for they have the power of numbers, craft and cunning. Could your girl avoid this danger? At least, being forewarned is being forearmed and "The Girl Without a Chance" sounds its warning in no uncertain words.

"Mr. O'Neill is out there!" she cried to Tom.

Slater turned and, reading the tragic appeal in her face, said reassuringly: "Sure! But he's all right."

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank all those who ordered furnaces last week, also those who read my ad. It is some job to write an ad, and I always feel good when I am sure that it has been read. I also wish to state that I may have to discontinue the sale of PENINSULAR FURNACES as the coal dealers are making such a fuss. They all claim the sale of a Peninsular Furnace cuts down their output. However, I am determined to sell a few more, so get your order in quick if you need a furnace. Hoping you haven't got a furnace I beg to remain,

Yours truly,

SATISFY!

— what does that mean?

It means that NEW quality, in a cigarette, that does for your smoking exactly what a drink of cold water does for your thirst!

To satisfy, a cigarette must do far more than just "please" you—it must let you know you've been smoking.

That's what Chesterfields do—they satisfy! And yet they're MILD!

For the first time in the history of cigarettes, here's a cigarette that satisfies and yet is mild! Chesterfields!

Other cigarettes may be mild; but they don't satisfy.

BUT, Chesterfields satisfy—yet they're mild!

This is new enjoyment for a cigarette to give. It is something that no cigarette, except Chesterfields, can give you—regardless of price.

Why?

Because no cigarette maker can copy the Chesterfield blend!

Try Chesterfields—today!

NORTHERN MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS

Events of Interest to Courier Readers

Boy Had Narrow Escape.

A terrible accident was narrowly averted at Ballaure, Wednesday of last week, when Cecil Mills, eight years old, living on East River street, was knocked down and run over by Henry Richard's automobile. Cecil was playing in the street and was seen by Mr. Richard who attempted to miss him, at the same time slowing down his machine, but Cecil ran directly in front of the auto which was still moving sufficiently to push him down and pass over him before it could be stopped. He was directly under the car and was only touched when knocked down. He was taken to Dr. Dobson's office where it was discovered that he was uninjured.

No blame is attached to the driver of the car by Mr. Mills, who witnessed the incident and says that it will be a good lesson for the boy as well as some other boys in that neighborhood who intentionally run in front of machines.

Boot Legger Arrested.

William Lovelice, bartender at the New Cheboygan hotel, in Cheboygan, was arrested last week and taken to Petoskey where he admitted having sold 50 quarts of whiskey to Indians at an Indian dance in Harbor Springs. He was bound over to the Emmet county circuit court under bonds.

Lovelice drove to Harbor Springs with the whiskey in an automobile and had no trouble whatever in selling all he brought at a dollar a quart. Sheriff Purple has for some time been trying to discover who was furnishing the Indians of Emmet county with whiskey and after the dance questioned a number of the Indians who had purchased whiskey. None could tell the man's name who had taken their money but several declared he was a bartender from Cheboygan. A John Doe warrant was issued and as the description fitted Mr. Lovelice he was taken to Petoskey where he confessed.

Will Build Concrete Roads.

The streets leading into Petoskey from the south will be paved with concrete within a few months and will probably be completed not later than June or July of next year, if the present plans of the city council are carried out.

The council plans to pave from the city limits to Washington street on Buckley avenue and from Buckley avenue to Emmet street on Washington street, giving a paved roadway from the city limits south to the city limits north. Emmet street from the north end of the pavement to Mitchell street will be paved, completing the road through the city.

Work on this improvement in the fourth ward section will be started within a few days and several blocks of pavement completed this fall. As soon as danger from hard frosts is over, in the spring work will be resumed and continued until the pavement is completed.

This trial is the main entrance to that city from the south and the last half of the city's part of the Grand Rapids to Mackinaw section of the Dixie highway.

Ballooning Killed at Pellston.

One of the largest crowds which ever witnessed a balloon ascension at Pellston witnessed the balloonist, H. S. Martin, of Flint, meet instant death when he fell into the high tension wires of the electric service line in the south part of the village at about 6:30 o'clock Saturday evening. He was electrocuted and then fell 30 feet to the ground from the top wires of the line, his head and shoulders being badly crushed. Either the shock from the electric wires or the injuries received from the fall would have caused instant death as he was badly crushed about the head and shoulders and internally injured.

Mr. Martin was to have made the ascension Monday, September 4, at the Labor day celebration, but owing to the wind and rain did not go up. Saturday afternoon was made a sort of holiday at Pellston and Mr. Martin went into the air. He made a beautiful ascension as was ever seen in this region. He dropped almost straight down with his parachute after cutting loose from the balloon. As he neared the earth he noticed the wires and tried to swing away from them. Just before reaching the wire he cut himself loose from the parachute and threw himself to one side in his effort to escape. He struck on his back across the two top wires, one catching him across the back and others across the legs. After hanging in that position for a minute he doubled up and fell through the other wires to the earth. Medical aid was brought at once but nothing could be done for him.

Baby Killed in Runaway.

The nine-month-old baby of Mr. and Mrs. George Stumpf, of Resort township was instantly killed Friday of last week near Fife Lake, when it was thrown under the feet of a horse in a runaway accident, and Mrs. Stumpf is in serious condition from injuries received and from the shock.

Mr. and Mrs. Stumpf had gone to Fife Lake from Petoskey, Friday morning, to visit relatives. They were met at the train by their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. McQuay. They were taken into the buggy and started for the McQuay home but the horse became frightened at the train and ran away. Mrs. Stumpf and baby were thrown out and the baby kicked in the head by the frightened beast. Mr. McQuay was also thrown out and injured.

CHARM OF ODD NUMBERS.

Ancient Superstition That Lingers in Present Day Customs.

Odd numbers have always and everywhere been held in peculiar reverence, and if that is mere superstition, then it only proves that, despite our civilization, we are still superstitious.

A hen is always given an odd number of eggs to be hatched. Why? There is no reason at all except superstition. Salutes from warships, forts, etc., are always given in odd numbers, yet no valid reason can be adduced. It is a remnant of the old "odd numbers are lucky" superstition.

Virgil records all sorts of charms and spells practiced by old numbers—never even once. And we still, after two centuries, make another attempt and murmur hopefully, "Third time lucky!" The odd number again, and the old superstition!

Seven is the favorite Biblical number and odd divines taught that it held a mystical perfection. It's an odd number. Three is the number of the Trinity—an odd number again.

Fastest in the "Mersey Wires" is a story for the third time. He himself said, "They say there is a divinity in odd numbers" because of the old belief that the odd time would be lucky.

Physicians of other days always insisted that "bleedings" should be in odd numbers—one, three, five, etc., and never an even one.—Baltimore American.

COUGH THE RIGHT WAY.

It is Safer For Yourself, Your Lungs and Those About You.

The following directions as to how to cough are given by Dr. A. A. Pleyte in the Journal of the Outdoor Life:

Hold your handkerchief so that it is about five inches square. Place it flat in the right hand, if you are right handed, and with this hand hold it tightly over the mouth. Press the hand on the mouth, as to hold it loosely over the mouth will not accomplish the purpose. Now, instead of coughing and trying to muffle the sound in your throat or mouth, muffle it with your handkerchief. Practice it until a person ten feet away cannot hear you.

The sound made in coughing is due partly to air passing over the vocal cords, partly to air going through the bronchial tubes and trachea and partly to the resonance produced in the chambers above the trachea. This sound can be almost wholly avoided and the irritation to the lungs and air passages prevented by keeping the handkerchief open and letting your handkerchief do the muffling. Now, instead of expelling 120 cubic inches of air at each expiration, you will expel a smaller amount. With more comfort to your self and to those around you and with much less harm to your lungs.

Steam and the Home.

Steam heated industry out of the home as one shells peas, and put it in the factory. The family, father, mother and the children, tagged after, and home survived merely as a place to eat and sleep.

Applied to transportation, though, steam did even more. It dissolved the population which had caked and clotted in one parish for 1,000 years and made it find to run uphill about the earth, uphill from low income to a higher. Nobody lives now where he was born if he can get away. We're here only till something better somewhere else turns up. The attic under the ancestral shingles, full of horsehide trunks that hold the brocade sashes in which our great-grandmothers danced with Lafayette—you just read about them in the story books; they don't exist.—Eugene Wood in Century

Rev. Quinton Walker went to Laingsburg, Mich., on Monday, to conduct the funeral of the wife and son of Dr. A. E. Mulder, of that city, who were killed when the auto in which they were riding was struck by a train at Geddes, near Ann Arbor, on Friday last. Dr. Mulder and his daughter narrowly escaped death and are now in the hospital at Ann Arbor with serious injuries.

Says a Glass of Hot Water Every Morning Before Breakfast Will Take Off Fat If You Get More Fresh Air

Be Moderate in Your Diet and Reduce Your Weight with Tassco

Lack of fresh air weakens the oxygen-carrying power of the blood, the liver becomes sluggish, fat accumulates and the action of many of the vital organs are hindered thereby. The heart action becomes weak, work is an effort and the beauty of the figure is destroyed.

Fat put on by indoor life is unhealthy and if nature is not assisted in throwing it off by increasing the oxygen-carrying power of the blood, a serious case of obesity may result.

When you feel that you are getting too stout, take the matter in hand at once. Don't wait until your figure has become a joke and your health ruined through carrying around a burden of unsightly and unhealthy fat.

Spend as much time as you possibly can in the open air; breathe deeply and get from any druggist a box of tassco, take a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast then take tassco after each meal and at bedtime.

Weigh yourself every few days and keep up the treatment until you are down to normal. Tassco is absolutely harmless, is pleasant to take, helps the digestion and is designed to increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood.

Even a few days' treatment should show a noticeable reduction in weight. There is nothing better for obesity.

Mrs. D. Patterson will entertain the L. A. S. of the M. E. church Thursday afternoon of this week.

Miss Crawford is substituting at the Miles school for Dewitt Patterson until his release from the National Guard.

Mr. Black, of East Jordan, has been demonstrating and selling sewing machines to the farmers throughout the country.

The threatened railroad strike or the approaching fall weather has not yet served to drive away the summer visitors from Ellsworth, as many are still coming for the excellent fishing and restful atmosphere of our little village.

SCHOOL NOTES

We have started out with the largest enrollment which this school has ever boasted. The exact number is 107, of which there are 44 in the primary department, 40 in the intermediate department, and 23 in the high school school. More are expected and of course will be taken care of in the already crowded rooms.

A new course has been added to the high school curriculum for the ninth grade. It consists of one semester of general science. General science is somewhat a new study but is being taken up in the first year work of many of the small schools as well as larger ones. It teaches the rudimentary sciences and gives the pupil a start toward the more extensive fields. It also gives the boy or girl an insight into practical science so that if he or she does not complete high school they are better fitted for the world.

The teaching force consists as follows: Max A. Brall, principal.

Maude E. Best, intermediate room.

Lillian R. Patterson, primary room.

Miss Marjory DeMulpied was a visitor in the intermediate room Friday of last week.

The East Jordan fair was an attraction to a few of the pupils.

The school building has just recently been painted inside and out. It is greatly appreciated by all.

ECHO, DISTRICT NO. 4
School opened Monday with 18 pupils enrolled.

We spent the week reviewing the most of our subjects.

Miss Ethel Murray left Sunday for her school in the Bennett district.

There were 27 in attendance at Sunday school. Everyone is invited.

Frances Spence and Paul Somerville entered school Monday morning.

There was no school Thursday as several attended the East Jordan fair.

We have no sixth nor seventh grades this year and no chart class as yet.

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde McMillan are the proud parents of twin boys, born September 6th.

Everyone was pleased with the new porch and other improvements made during vacation.

A new teacher's desk has been ordered which will improve the appearance of the room greatly.

Mrs. Clarence Murray and children spent Sunday afternoon at the home of Duncan McMillan.

Mrs. Clifford Spence and children, of Grand Lodge, are spending a short time with Mr. and Mrs. Eber Dingman.

Some of the enthusiastic Epworth Leaguers from here attended league at the Vance school house Sunday evening.

It was voted at Sunday school not to start up the league again as there were so few to attend, the camps having moved.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom McCarry, who have been spending a few days at the home of Duncan McMillan, have moved to camp 31.

Miss Ruth Carpenter was entertained at the home of Peter Murray, Friday evening, and at the home of M. H. Dingman, Sunday.

Mrs. Jim Pickering visited school a few minutes Friday afternoon. We are glad to have the parents visit our school to see the work we are doing.

TELL HOW WOMEN VOTERS WILL CONTROL POLITICS

Congressional Union Leaders Explain the Movement in Opposition to President Wilson

Just how this decision of the woman's party to oppose President Wilson for re-election is expected to change the national political situation was explained in a statement by suffrage leaders at the headquarters of the Congressional Union for Woman's Suffrage at Washington.

It was pointed out that unless he wins the West the defeat of Mr. Wilson "seems inevitable."

Needed to Offset Loss of Ohio.
To counteract the loss of Ohio alone, which, judging from indications at the primaries, will go with its twenty-four electoral votes to the Republican camp, the Democrats will have to win in the West, California, with its thirteen electoral votes; Nevada, with three; Colorado, with six, and Arizona, with three, woman's party representatives here asserted.

"In Idaho the Progressive party is dissolved," they continue, "so that the Democrats will have to work hard to get any electoral votes there. Illinois is practically conceded to the Republicans, in the view of woman's party members, three-fourths or more of the Progressives there having returned to the Republican ranks."

Conditions in Other States.
"In Kansas the Progressives and Republicans are practically one again. In Montana there is great dissatisfaction over the proposed Democratic tax on copper. Oregon and Washington are expected to go Republican. These two states were hit hard by the Panama Canal tolls act and the Democratic tariff is seriously felt by the lumber industry there. Utah is considered safe by the Republicans. In Wyoming the Progressives and Republicans have joined hands."

Had Done Her Part.
The express was approaching a railway bridge that spanned a deep river, and a stout old lady in one of the compartments showed signs of nervousness. As the train went roaring across the structure she did not speak a word, but seemed to be holding her breath.

"There," said a gentleman in a neighboring seat, "we are over it safely." The old lady heaved an explosive sigh. "Well," she said, "if we had gone to the bottom I should have died with a clear conscience, for it wouldn't have been my weight that did it. I bore up so that I really made the train lighter than it would have been without me!" —Pittsburgh Press.

Gave Farewell Party.

Mr. and Mrs. L. K. Clark and Minnie B. Kelth, of Kelth Kroft farm, on Campbell's lake, one and a half miles east of Ellsworth, entertained at dinner Mrs. Dr. W. T. Resvea, who will move to Chicago next week to place her son, Fred-Alan, in a high school in that city.

Your correspondent attended the fair at East Jordan last week and in walking through the grounds and observing the various stands, counted seven which were nothing more nor less than lotteries. Such stands should be barred from this and all other fair grounds. Says Drink Water If You Wish To Grow Fat And Plump

THIN MEN AND WOMEN

Do You Want to Get Fat and Be Strong?

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract properly assimilates the food you eat. Drink a glass of cold water four or five times a day and take the following preparation known to reliable druggists almost everywhere, which seemingly embodies the missing elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This preparation is called tonoline, and much remarkable testimony is given as to its successful use in flesh building. Tonoline which comes in the form of a small non-injurious tablet, taken at meals and mixed with the digesting food, tends to prepare fat, flesh and muscle building elements so that the blood can readily accept and carry them to the starved portion of the body. You can readily picture the transformation that additional and previously lacking flesh, making material should bring to your cheeks, filling out hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappearing, and your taking on from 15 to 30 pounds of solid healthy flesh. Tonoline is harmless, inexpensive, efficient. All druggists have it and are authorized to refund your money if weight increase is not obtained as per the guarantee found in each large package.

Caution:—Tonoline is recommended only as a flesh builder and while excellent results in cases of nervous indigestion, etc., have been reported, care should be taken about using it unless a gain of weight is desired.

Will you perpetuate sectionalism, greed, ignorance, stupidity—general ineptitude in Congress?

ATTRACTS BUSINESS MEN.
Mr. Hughes has not tried to scare anybody, but has merely portrayed the errors of the present Administration and set forth certain principles on which the affairs of the country should be managed in the future.

There is a political logic in this portrayal, the culmination of which in the mind of the voter is expressed by the frequent remark:

"He is the kind of man we want to steer us through."

This has been said by many a business man. The qualities seen to Mr. Hughes are peace, a strong, sane mind, sincerity and a willingness to sacrifice life, physical or political, to the good of the country. Nor is there any question as to the quality of service to meet the emergencies of the four years beginning March 4, 1917.

ALCOHOL INSIDE RETARDS THOUGHT

THE MENTAL POWERS ARE MUCH CRIPPLED EVEN WHEN USED IN MODERATE DOSES.

EVILS OF BEER AND HIGHBALL

How Booze Really Affects One Who Drinks Moderately Is Startling To Those Who Think.

The Department of Health of the city of Chicago is a bulletin issued for June under the caption, "Booze and Brains," says:

The fellow with alcohol in his system is not a good witness as to his effects upon himself, for his mind as well as his body is bribed by the drug, and is as full of prejudice as his breath is full of fumes.

You had a glass of beer or three fingers of rye today, didn't you? You think that it puts snap in your wits and steam in your cylinders. You feel fine and think you are ready to tackle your job and meet any problem in sight with a clear head and a strong hand. But your feeling has deceived you. The fact is that the drink you took actually diminished your power to add numbers, to memorize, to associate ideas and to see, hear and think quickly.

Facts Have Been Proved.

This statement is not the result of guesswork or a question of anti-alcohol or anti-temperance grounds. It is based on experiments made by an eminent scientist, Professor Krapelin, of Vienna, who has developed a series of tests and applied them to many individuals, before and after they have taken alcoholic liquor. His findings have been duplicated by other scientific men.

In all cases the ability to add, to memorize and to think quickly were greatly reduced within a few minutes of taking the drink, and the handicap lasted for as long as three days. The more difficult the task, the greater was the handicap, and the more numerous were the mistakes made by the one tested.

Experiments upon four typewriters showed the results of drinking in every-day work. On the average the falling off in efficiency under alcohol amounted to over 15 per cent, as compared to normal conditions. These men were not drunk, but simply had a moderate drink, just like the one you had today.

Daily moderate drinkers are constantly under this harmful influence of alcohol, since the effects of one drink, as is clearly shown by these experiments, do not wear off before the drinkers observed imagined that he was doing work fully up to grade, while the tests showed it was far below par. These men were not conscious of their mental deficiency.

Think Before You Drink.

This should make you think before you order another stein; for while you may drink another fellow's health in it, you are hurting your own brain power. And who does not need all the mind he can muster to these days?

Schiller said, "Wine invents nothing; it only blots it out."

The great Helmholtz asserted that the slightest amount of alcohol destroyed his power of scientific insight. Goethe repeatedly declared that so-called stimulation by liquor "could produce only a forced, inferior creation" of ideas.

Happiness and contentment are said to spring from the numbing influence of alcohol upon the higher brain functions. Such happiness is false, such contentment bought at the expense of individual mental liberty.

John Stuart Mill put it right when he said, "Who would not be a human being, satisfied, rather than a pig satisfied?"

Think before you drink, for after a beer or highball you cannot think so well.

TO KEEP WELL--DON'T DRINK

Dr. W. A. Evans, Medical Editor of the Chicago Tribune, Says That Temperance Is a Health Matter.

Heading his article "Alcohol Versus Health," Dr. W. A. Evans, in the Chicago Tribune says:

"No health authority anywhere advocates the use of alcohol as a medicine, food, or beverage. Until a few years ago health departments were silent on the subject. At the present time a considerable minority of the health departments are actively campaigning against drinking. Among this minority are some of the best in the country."

The contents of the May Bulletin of the New York City Health Department in opposition to the beverage use of alcohol, Dr. Evans declares, "proves that it is bad from every standpoint." He cites the research work of insurance men as proof that "moderate" drinking has a distinctly bad effect upon life expectancy.

The man who was quarantined for smallpox lost his personal liberty for the public good.

CATHOLICS AND PROH.

The Magazine by that Name Discusses Personal Liberty.

Catholics and "Prohibition," a bi-monthly publication edited by Rev. Father George Zurcher, pastor of St. Vincent's Catholic church, North Evans, New York, prints the following article on the liquor traffic by Rev. Father J. M. Cleary:

"The most unreasonable fanatics I have encountered anywhere are prejudiced champions of anti-prohibition who raise the cry of personal liberty and exhibit the stomachs of Timothy to the frightened gaze of heresy-hunters whose stomachs don't need booze.

"I wonder if these alarmists ever stop to consider how much comfort and encouragement their unfair assertions give to the enemies of sobriety and Christian morality? The keeper of the lowest dive insists that he, too, believes in temperance and quotes the first miracle to justify his nefarious business. There are no extracts from Holy Scripture quoted so frequently as those concerning the stomach of Timothy and the good wine at the marriage feast.

"The authorized public judgment of the Catholic church in this country brands the business of selling intoxicating liquors as a 'dangerous business.'

"Heresy-hunters can find much more work to do among friends of the liquor traffic than they can do among its enemies. The saloon is the fruitful source of sin and misery. It is the occasion of sin for all. It is the direct cause of more sin, vice and irreligion than all other evil causes combined. It is not true that 'if you let the saloon alone it will let you alone.' The saddest victims of its pitiless power are women and children who never cross its slimy threshold."

W. C. T. U. HOLD AN INTERESTING MEETING

Program Was a Varied and Interesting One—New Members Added.

The meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union which met on Friday last with Mrs. Walker at the M. E. parsonage, was one of much interest. The meeting opened with the good old hymn, "How Firm a Foundation Ye Saints of the Lord."

Mrs. Anna E. McPherson, who had charge of the devotional exercises, in a preliminary talk, gave some reminiscences connected with the early days of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which were very interesting.

It was moved that a letter of sympathy in behalf of the Union be sent. Mrs. Connor and daughter, Vera Brandow, in the death of little Marcia Brandow, who fell from a second story window which resulted in her death.

It was decided that if arrangements can be made to have Mrs. Etta S. Shaw, state Evangelist of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, come to us for Saturday night and Sunday meetings early in October.

The program was in charge of Mrs. Campbell. "Storm the Fort for Prohibition" was sung. Mrs. Campbell gave some reminiscences, also Mrs. Alcox, Mrs. Geiken and Mrs. Crane, who was present, as a visitor. Mrs. Geiken read a sketch of Frances E. Willard. Mrs. Walker read a sketch of Lillian M. M. Stevens. Mrs. Burns reading "Does it Pay." Reading, "43 Reasons for State Prohibition," by Mrs. Welkel. "Story of the Dollars" by Mrs. Crum. A song by Mrs. Correll, "Mothers Voice," closed the program. One new name was secured as a member of the Union.

COMMUNITY BUILDING AND CHARACTER BUILDING

Through the Proper Use of Leisure Time—A National Need.

Our national need—to keep young people in the country—depends much upon making country life worth living and much toward this end can be accomplished through recreation.

The recreation movement is not for big cities only. Of 432 places having playgrounds and play leaders, 141 places have less than 10,000 inhabitants; 54 have less than 5,000. Any community, large or small, can be helped to develop a year-round system of wholesome recreation for old and young. This congress to be held at Grand Rapids, October 2nd to 6th, will give opportunity for all to bring their questions to be answered and their problems for discussion. Already nearly 500 questions have been submitted by recreation workers from all parts of America for discussion at the congress. Men of long experience in recreation work will answer these questions instead of attempting set addresses. There will be much time for free discussion.

Only a few of the speakers at the big general session meetings can be announced at this time.

Hon. Newton D. Baker, secretary of war.

Major-General Leonard A. Wood.

Hon. Woodbridge N. Ferris, governor of Michigan.

Thomas Mott Osborne, warden, Sing Sing prison.

William H. Wirt, superintendent of schools, Gary, Indiana.

Joseph Lee, president, Playground and Recreation Association of America.

This is a big opportunity and one which the people in Michigan, who can reach Grand Rapids without much expense, cannot afford to miss.

A printed list of the questions submitted for answer at the congress can be secured free by writing to Playground and Recreation Association of America, 1007 Michigan Trust building, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

"Get Right With Your Creditors" the Slogan of National Pay-Up Week—Everyone Interested

One lap closer to National Pay-Up Week! Right now, in Charlevoix, is the time when everybody, who ever has any money at all, has a lot more than he will have at any other season of the year. The reporters have gone and left a large chunk of their golden store with us and it is now that we have been promising to settle that old account, to make a payment on those tools or that wagon we bought in the spring and for which our good friend merchant kindly took a chance on us; or perhaps he staked us to our winter's groceries and tapped his slender bank balance to satisfy his own unsentimental creditors.

We always say, "money makes the wheels go round," and we usually think it takes a great deal of money, tremendous sums of it, to make these wheels go, but when you stop to think about it, a very small amount does a great deal of work. Just think for a moment. A small coin put into circulation will wipe out many debts and perchance he turned in to the man who first set it going. This is the idea back of National Pay-Up Week. For example, we will say that Mr. A, who is a merchant, owes Mr. B, a garage man, $5.00. B in turn owes Mr. C, the butcher, $5.00. Mr. C owes Mr. D, a farmer, $5.00 for a load of feed, and Mr. D, the farmer, owes Mr. A, $5.00 for groceries. A pays his bill to B, who passes it on to C, who in turn gives it to D, and D returns it to A. Four accounts are paid with the same $5.00, and it returns to A for use in payment of his account to the wholesale house which in turn pays its help and its places of supply, and so it goes. Any of the four men can start the ball rolling. The only thing necessary is for some one of them to pay his account to date and put the money in circulation. This, with an honest desire on the part of everyone to pay his debts, helps the entire community. The object of National Pay-Up Week is to wipe out all the accounts possible in this community. Everybody is in it and everyone will be helped. Every time a debt is paid, a load is lifted. Let's unload during National Pay-Up Week. Let's start the lazy dollar going. Men of every calling in life all over the United States, farmers, doctors, lawyers, merchants, bankers, working men, are attracted by the possibilities of National Pay-Up Week because it is not a bad debt collection device but a plan which results in the payment of good debts. Do you know which dollar it is that makes the most trouble for business? It is the dollar that is as good as "old wheat in the mill" but which does not move on when it is most needed. It is the debts people owe that they could easily pay but simply neglect to pay that cause the trouble. It is not the dead-end account that worries you or any other man.

When National Pay-Up Week publicity gets into action it focuses the attention of careless folks on the subject of community payment and gets them to realize that those few dollars that they owe to local people have an enormous number of idle brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts, nieces, nephews, cousins, and other near kin which might be doing a lot of good in business circles but are loafing around and not doing the community any good by circulating. It is the circulating dollars, the busy, rolling dollars, that make the life-blood of local business. That same rolling dollar may pass in one day through 15 or 20 different hands and pay off $15 or $20 in small debts. The problem is just to get it rolling.

National Pay-Up Week solves that problem. It impresses the perfectly good but indifferent, careless, forgetting debtor with the fact that he is imposing upon a man who has done him a favor when he persistently neglects to pay his small debts. Not only is he imposing upon one man, but he is imposing upon the community. He is imposing by keeping lazy dollars that should be doing useful, beneficial work by circulating. It makes them realize that if everybody gets in line and pays off that debt, or as much as he can, thousands of dollars are taken out of the lazy class and put into busy business at the same time. Everybody is benefited, directly or indirectly. Pay-Up Week comes in the time of year when business needs just a little added impulse to make it go faster than it ever did before. National Pay-Up Week gives every man a polite means of letting every other man know that he is indebted to him and that small favors are appreciated. All good people will take the hint and act upon it.

BAO WRECK SUNDAY ON PERE MARQUETTE

Twelve Coaches and Baggage Car Leave Track in Big Swamp.

An eye witness reports the accident which occurred on the Pere Marquette, Sunday morning near Baldwin, a bad one, although no lives were lost.

The train was a passenger, made up of 12 coaches and a baggage car, double headed, and was running fast to make up lost time out of Grand Rapids, when at 4 a. m., just about half way between White Cloud and Baldwin in the heart of the swamp lands, both engines left the rails, dragging the baggage car and four coaches with them.

The cars were badly piled up, the baggage car and smoker being almost entirely demolished. One of the brakemen wrenched his back badly and a passenger received severe contusions about the head.

A massive rod, supporting the frame of the smoker bent out and up by the force of the shock passed through a window where two of the passengers were reclining, trying to get a little sleep. Had they been sitting upright, one or possibly both, would have been killed outright.

WILL SOON ERECT FINE NEW GARAGE

WORK TO COMMENCE WITHIN A WEEK

New Building to Be 48x75 Feet, Two Story, Made of Brick and Steel Construction.

The wonderful growth in the automobile and garage business has forced one of our leading business men to enlarge his quarters to take care of his rapidly growing business.

In other words, the Ford garage, "home of the Henrys," owned and operated by Benjamin Brown, is inadequate and must be enlarged at once, the cause possibly being due to the recent changes made in the 1916-7 model cars.

In an interview with Mr. Brown, he stated that his business has more than doubled in the past two years, which has forced him to make the move contemplated. Recently he purchased the adjoining 48-foot frontage, lying south of his present holdings, of Mrs. A. Vought, and will immediately commence the erection of a two story garage and sales room of brick and steel construction.

The new building will be 48 feet wide by 75 feet in depth, and it is expected it will be completed in time to take care of the business of the 1917 season.

THREE WEDDINGS DURING PAST WEEK

LITTLE GOD OF LOVE RIGHT ON THE JOB

Well Known Local Young People Start Out On Long Life's Journey as Man and Wife.

A very pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Byers on State street, Tuesday evening, September 19, when their daughter, Nola B., was united in marriage to Earl J. Shapton.

The bride was tastefully gowned in white silk and was attended by her cousin, Mrs. Nida Fucose. James Leenhouts acted as best man.

As Miss Maud Shapton, sister of the groom played the wedding march, the bridal party took their places under the beautiful arch of flowers, where the Rev. Quinton Walker read the beautiful and impressive ring service of the Methodist church.

The young people were the recipients of many beautiful and useful presents. A dainty four course luncheon was served.

Nola was a member of last year's graduating class. She has been a teacher in the Methodist Sunday school and has filled a large place in the church and social life of the city. Earl is the popular president of the Epworth league, also assistant superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school and is held in high esteem by all who know him.

The young people left for a ten days' trip in the east. They will be at home to their numerous friends after October 5th on the Shapton place south of town.

LUCKY ESCAPE IN BAD RUNAWAY

DRIVER THROWN UNDER WHEELS OF FRIGHTENED TEAM

Severely Bruised and Cut About His Head in Miraculous Escape From Death.

Late Saturday afternoon a team of young grays, owned by the Charlevoix Wood and Coal Co., standing in the alley between Clinton street and Park avenue near the corner of Grant avenue, took fright and bolted down the alley towards State street, dragging a loaded wagon behind them.

The driver, Erv Nowland, was thrown from his seat down onto the whiffletree where he was caught and dragged for some distance before he fell to the ground, one of the wheels then passing over his body. While tangled in the whiffletree he was kicked severely in the head by one of the fear maddened animals, receiving a bad scalp wound.

Nowland was taken to Dr. Armstrong's office where it was found that except for a severe bruising and the cut on his head he was uninjured, no bones being broken. The team stopped just before they reached State street, the horses having become tangled in the harness and starting to pull in opposite directions against each other. Nowland is to be congratulated on his narrow escape from death.

There will be a dance at the Ironton Grange hall on Friday evening, September 29. Good music, every one invited. Adv. 381

CAMP LIFE IS GROWING TEDIOUS

COLD WEATHER CAUSES SUFFERING AMONG SOLDIERS

Troopers Growing Restless and Tired of Inactivity of Daily Camp Life.

(BY HAROLD W. USHER.)

Camp Ferris, Grayling, Sept. 18.—Life in Camp Ferris has become in many ways a misery instead of a pleasure. For the past two weeks the weather has been as cold as November or December. Fire must be kept in all the tents even during the day. A little snow has fallen and the blustery winds take the life out of everybody.

If some good Samaritan in Charlevoix county should happen to have a couple of old woolen under shirts to spare and would send them to us they would have Uncle Sam heat a mile as a clothes provider. Also a good pair of snow shoes would come in mighty handy.

Everybody is waiting anxiously for the word to go home which we expect to receive soon. When we enlisted we expected a little service, not trip to the north pole as we are now receiving. If the United States wants to keep us in reserve we had better care to be kept here in cold storage until time to use us.

Reports went around East Jordan that the officers had been using our mess fund for their own personal use. We wish to say that this is untrue and nobody but a knocker to the company would start such a story. Everything that the officers can do to make us comfortable is done.

Several fires have occurred in the tents lately. One happened in Co. I the other night and the men were forced to go out in the cold night air scantily clad.

Patrol work and sham battles have been the line of drill lately. All the drill now comes in the morning and nothing in the afternoon. If this kind of work will save the people of the border from Mexicans they are all safe.

HOSPITAL FUND ON INCREASE

OVER FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS SUBSCRIBED

Suitable Building Site Now Being Looked Up—Construction Expected to Begin This Fall.

According to the report of the board of directors of the Charlevoix Hospital association, everything points toward the completion of the raising of the necessary funds and it is expected that building operation will begin this fall.

To date over $5,000 has been subscribed, and enough has been pledged to assure the erection of a fine hospital building. Four hundred sixty-one dollars was raised by the young ladies and gentlemen of the Beach hotel at the recent entertainment given, besides other funds donated amounting to $500.

Dr. Louis A. Greensfelder was authorized by the board to submit plans for a building suitable for a city the size of Charlevoix. President Harry Nichols and Secretary Lisle Shanahan were also authorized to confer with the council relative to a site for the hospital. Mrs. J. S. Baker subscribed for the furnishing of one room in the hospital, which makes two that have been provided for in this manner.

During the meeting, Dr. Greensfelder assured the directors that sufficient money would be subscribed by summer visitors from the cities of Detroit, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans and other places to guarantee a fund in excess of $12,000 and it is expected that by the last of October the entire amount necessary for the building of the hospital will have been contributed and in the hands of the treasurer, and that the erection and construction of the hospital will begin this fall.

FORD JITNEY BUS TURNS BRIDGE CLIMBER

Rambles 'About Swing Bridge On Bridge Street—Too Many Lights.

A Ford car belonging to Henry Wood ran amuck on the swing bridge Thursday night, and after straddling the center string piece, bounded over on to the foot path and tried to climb one of the supports of the bridge. Not much damage was done to either car or driver as usual.

The driver claims that a large car with very brilliant lights was approaching from the other direction, and that, blinded by the lights, he shut his eyes and let the little old Ford ramble where she would. Being too much "lit up" is a dangerous thing and dimmers should be more the rule and less an exception.

PEARSON NAMED CHAIRMAN

Old Wheel-Horse of Republican Party Again Honored.

At a meeting of the Charlevoix county Republican nominees, at the court house in this city last week, W. J. Pearson, of Boyne Falls, was chosen as county chairman of the Republican committee.

"Bill" Pearson, better known as one of the old "wheel-horses" of the party, has held this position many times prior to the present appointment, and is known as one of the safest men that could be chosen for the position.

Charles H. Emrey was named as secretary of the committee for the next two years.

DOINGS IN THE CIRCUIT COURT

CHANCERY CASES NOW BEING DECIDED

Arnold Given Judgment of $200.00 Against H. H. Cummings—Wilkinson Case Heard.

The special session of court, Judge Sullivan sitting, still continues with a few chancery cases, the jury having been dismissed last week.

Among the cases of especial interest were that of Arnold vs. Cummings and Russell vs. Wilkinson. Harold A. Arnold, of East Jordan, secured judgment against Henry H. Cummings, of Boyne City, for $200. Cummings had shipped for Arnold a car load of potatoes out of East Jordan and on arrival at destination it was found that many of the potatoes were frozen, and in poor condition, so that the consignee would not accept the shipment and Arnold was thereby forced to dispose of same in small lots to hucksters and to get rid of them as best he might. Arnold contended that he had agreed with Cummings that the car should be loaded with a certain lot of potatoes which he, Arnold, knew to be A-1, but that Cummings loaded an inferior grade from his own ware house. He also claimed that Cummings had guaranteed the delivery of the shipment in good condition, on which guarantee the price paid was based. Both of these allegations were denied by Cummings, who said he had only agreed to put the car in good shape for the shipment and that he had loaded as many of the potatoes designated by the plaintiff as he could get on the car.

The damage suit brought against Dr. A. M. Wilkinson by Robert Russell, of this city, for alleged wrong treatment of the burned hands of his son, Otto, attracted considerable attention. From the time Wilkinson told his story of his treatment of his little patient, which had suffered a severe burn of the hands by falling into a bed of coals carelessly left by the father, until the jury brought in a verdict, after 20 minutes deliberation, "no cause of action," there was no doubt of the outcome of the suit. Local physicians as well as physicians from neighboring towns backed Dr. Wilkinson solidly in his contention that the little hands had been treated as well as any of them could have done with the same opportunity for treatment.

WILL VISIT CHARLEVOIX COUNTY

"HEALTH FIRST" COMMISSION HERE OCTOBER FIRST

Will Hold Free Examinations in Various Places in County—Watch for Announcement.

The state board of health tuberculosis commission, which closes a 15 weeks' survey in the upper peninsula this week, will begin a similar survey next week in the group of counties of which this is one. The counties to be visited by the "Health First" commission during the remainder of September and October are Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet, Cheboygan, Otsego, Montmorency, Presque Isle and Alpena. During that time free examination for tuberculosis will be held in each of these counties, one week being given to a county, according to Arnold Mulder, publicity agent of the state board of health, who was here last week to make some of the preliminary arrangements.

When the state health workers arrive here they will make arrangements for holding free examinations in three or four of the principal towns in the county. To these free clinics people from all sections of the county will be invited to come to be examined. There are twelve nurses in the party, several physicians, a speaker and a publicity agent. The week before the public free clinics are held nurses will come to the county to make all the necessary arrangements.

"We would like to reach every person in the county who is physically run down," said Mr. Mulder while here last week. "We would like to have them all come to the free examinations when they shall be held here. These examinations are not only for those who have tuberculosis or who think they have it. They are for all persons who are run down. The state board of health aims to prevent tuberculosis even more than cure it. And the time to attack the disease is either before it develops or in the very early stages. So if all the persons in the community who feel they are below par physically will begin to make up their minds now to attend one of these examinations the survey here cannot help but be of great benefit. And persons who are well themselves can help by urging friends and acquaintances who need the examination to go. The exact dates of the clinics will be announced the week before the examinations are held."

Rev. Emma Brown, Matron of Grand Rapids Rest Cottage.

Rev. This will be an opportunity to hear and learn something of the great work that is being carried forward by the church for the uplifting of those who in an unguarded moment stepped aside from the path of rectitude and fell. This home stands as a light house by the way pointing the unfortunate back to the path of rectitude. Come and bring your friends.

Correspondents Take Notice

In general correspondence for The COURIER give us real news and plenty of it, but in some instances (Don't say it is NOT yourself until you have read this and thought it over) in some instances there are faults that ought to be corrected.

DON'T PIN your pages together but NUMBER them in order. Don't write about your own family EXCLUSIVELY, give your NEIGHBORS a chance, they, too, take The COURIER, or ought to.

Don't write about the neighbor who lives in the same house or the next house or in the same neighborhood visiting yourself or another neighbor. That's not NEWS.

Don't make news, look it up, there is plenty of it. Don't neglect to mention a neighbor or a neighbor's visitor because you don't like him or her or your neighbors will think you small.

DON'T confine your news to persons ALONE. There are lots of things of public interest in your vicinity, marriages, deaths, accidents, sickness, births, road repairs, new houses, old houses built over or extensively repaired, visitors from a distance distinguished or otherwise, school beginning, a new teacher, people going on a long tour by auto or rail or returning from the same, picnics, school reunions, and a thousand other things, which are all real, live news. I have known a correspondent to have a dozen items about Mrs. S. visiting Mrs. X. who lived in the same house or Mrs. Y. visiting Mrs. Z. who lived within a stone's throw of each other, and not mention at all the fact that a whole family were overturned in the ditch by a careless auto driver and half of them killed, a state officer spent the day at his old home at this same Mrs. X's. A new gravel road was in progress of construction in front of correspondent's house, school is to begin next week with the experienced and successful Miss X. in charge, and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. had just been married to Mr. R. of Guessville. Have a nose for news and know when you meet an item.

Don't write INCOMPLETE items, like this "Mr. S. was in town." Mr. S. of where, what "town," when, whom did he visit, and in some important cases of public concern, why?

Don't SCRATCH it off but write plainly, especially proper or technical names.

Don't wait until the last day in the afternoon but be sure your letter is mailed Monday morning.

By living up to these hints you will make yourself a reputation as a strong, capable correspondent, gain a reputation with your neighbors for fairness, avoid the charge of egotism, too much "I" and make yourself solid with the editor who will bear you in grateful remembrance.

THEATRICAL

"The Natural Law." "The Natural Law" played to a fair house last Wednesday. From a dramatic stand point the play deserved a better crowd. Intense with interest, climax after climax, brought to light the struggle of a girl against the great social evil. Many plain spoken words depicted the seriousness of the struggle of our young men and women. Lawrence Williams as Dr. Ralph Webster clipped all others by his clever ability as an actor. Other members of the company did well.

"The Natural Law" deals with the immorality that is fast becoming the terror of the social world and points out the pitfalls so plainly that even the children who witness the play must learn the "truth." However the truth sometimes is bitter to learn but "The Natural Law" forces the bitterness out to such a degree that the audiences who witness the play must either concede its truth or shun the program.

DO IT NOW

Charlevoix People Should Not Wait Until It Is Too Late.

The appalling death-rate from kidney disease is due largely to the fact that the little kidney troubles are usually neglected until they become serious. The slight symptoms often give place to chronic disorders and the sufferer may slip gradually into some serious form of kidney complaint.

If you suffer from backache, headaches, dizzy spells; if the kidney secretions are irregular of passage and unnatural in appearance, do not delay. Help the kidneys at once.

Doan's Kidney Pills are especially for kidney disorders—they act where others fail. Over one hundred thousand people have recommended them. Here's a case at home:

Mrs. John Hull, 102 W. Lincoln Ave., Charlevoix, says: "About a year ago, I had a severe attack of lumbago. I suffered greatly and tried many remedies, but got no relief until I took Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store. Later I was again having trouble from weak kidneys and backache. I again took Doan's Kidney Pills and they acted promptly in bringing me relief."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Hull had. Foster-McBarn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

The City Manager

(A series of articles on a new type of municipal government, which is spreading rapidly.)

Dayton's Public Welfare Work.

The commission-manager plan is not all for card-index, unit cost business efficiency. It is just as human and sympathetic as the people of the city want their government to be.

The truth is best illustrated in Dayton, which is big enough to have real "city problems." The framers of the city charter saw the need of helping people to help themselves, not simply the "unfortunates," but all the citizens. They did not provide for a charity department, but they did provide for a department of public welfare, to take over charities, public health, recreation and correction.

Aids Health Work.

When the new city manager made the selection of his staff he selected as the head of this department, one of the most progressive ministers in town, Dr. D. Frank Garland. The "welfare" activities of the city have been made over. Just to illustrate.

Public health for the first time in the city has been put under the charge of a trained sanitarian who devotes himself exclusively to his public work. Health records and health services have been put on a sounder basis. Public health nursing has been reorganized, unsanitary dumping on vacant property has been stopped; laws against throwing garbage into the streets and alleys have been enforced; free clinics have been established.

Cites Infant Mortality.

A very prosy recital? Perhaps. But it has been responsible among other things, for cutting the infant mortality rate in half in the first six months under the new government, and a lot of little things like that.

The Welfare Department also established six community gardens, where hundreds of children cultivated vegetables under the direction of an expert gardener, and plowed and prepared several hundred vacant lots where poor families could raise vegetables.

Looks Into Jails.

The city also began to look more

ORIGIN OF THE DIXIE HIGHWAY

SYNOPSIS OF GOOD WORK ACCOMPLISHED

Dallas Bondeman Tells of Importance of Project and Urges Citizens to Co-Operate.

Charlevoix, September 14, 1916.
To the Editor of the Charlevoix Courier.

Dear Sir:

I have been requested to write you something in regards to the "Dixie Highway" which passes through Charlevoix county, and to explain briefly what this highway association is and what work has been done by it, and what is now going forward in the way of good road development.

This association was formed originally to lay out, or rather locate, a line of highway and assist in its building from the city of Miami, Florida, to a point at or near the city of Chicago, the same to be known as the "Dixie Highway." The organization was inaugurated through the appointment by the respective governors of the states of Florida, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, of two commissioners from each state who were considered as the organizers, and upon these selected commissioners was cast the burden of locating the road and of aiding in its construction.

Several thousand dollars were voluntarily contributed by men who were interested in the good road movement, and in this way a fund was created to look after the necessary expenses connected with organizing the work.

In May, 1915, a meeting was held at Chattanooga, Tennessee, of these commissioners for the purpose of fixing upon the line of this highway.

It will be seen that Michigan was not in the scheme at first, but the governor of Indiana, no doubt, seeing the practicability of extending this highway in Michigan, suggested to Governor Ferris that he should appoint two commissioners from this state to attend this Chattanooga conference, and do what they could to have our state included in the scheme and acting on this suggestion our governor appointed Phillip T. Colymn, of Hastings, (who is president of the Michigan Good Roads association) and Frank Hamilton, a prominent citizen of Traverse City, as the two Michigan commissioners. A few of the cities in the western part of the state appointed representatives to attend this meeting and being named by the city of Kalamazoo as one to attend this meeting I was present during the convention which lasted four days.

At this meeting there were present at least 5,000 people representing various parts of the country through which this highway might extend.

Special trains, automobile processions with bands playing and flags flying, were on hand from many cities, and one evening during the meeting there was an auto procession of 1,000 cars.

Men from all walks of life and of all grades of oratory were present to present the claims of their respective cities, counties or communities and to insist that their proposed route was the only practical one over which the highway should be built.

Outside of the two Michigan commissioners our state only had seven representatives and it is easily seen that we looked rather small in number in comparison with the great number from other states. Matters did not look very encouraging for this great Wolverine state, and the commissioners from the seven states before named doubted their authority to add any other state, or any other lines of highway than designated in their appointment, and there were strong reasons for this.

Our original plan was to endeavor to get the Dixie extended into our state from South Bend to Niles, thence northeasterly to Kalamazoo, northerly to Grand Rapids, thence northwesterly to Muskegon, and from there following the line of the West Michigan Pike to Mackinac City.

It would be too long a story for me to relate all the details and moves which became necessary before our work was completed; and it will be sufficient for me to say that before we were through we not only obtained the location of this highway over substantially the Michigan line above described (except it extended from Grand Rapids to Grand Haven instead of to Muskegon), but in the end the line was also continued from Mackinac City through to Alpena, Bay City, Saginaw, Port Huron, Flint and Detroit and thence to Toledo so that the Dixie Highway has now been located so that we have a great loop in the lower peninsula of this state covering in the neighborhood of 750 miles, being more in mileage than in any other state through which it passes, and from Toledo the loop is continued to Cincinnati, where the main line extends to Chattanooga and Miami.

Now your readers will want to know what this great enterprise means to us all.

First of all, it is now the longest established highway in the world, being some 400 miles longer than the great Lincoln Highway, which extends from New York city to San Francisco. Nearly every mile of the Dixie extends through the finest agricultural and fruit lands of the world and nearly all well cultivated. Its course is through the territory which has been made historically famous as the great battle field, in the conflict between the north and the south, and along it are some of the greatest cities of the middle west. This Dixie Highway is not to be constructed by this association. This organization is the grinding force. It makes the miles and provides how the highway is to be built and when completed there will be a marker located at every road crossing directing the traveler which way to go and where to turn, and on each side of this great thoroughfare will be planted shade trees 60 feet apart.

The work and expense of fitting the highway for travel rests with the townships, counties and cities through which it passes.

Almost every community in the south is working hard to finish its particular part of this road. Counties have voted the necessary bond issues, and nothing has ever created such enthusiasm in the southern states where the road is located as it has done.

The material used is of the best that can be obtained. Each state seems to be striving to make a better highway than its sister states. In the southern part of this state already a considerable work has been done and more has been planned. In Kalamazoo county the bulk, this year, of the highway fund is being put upon the "Dixie," and next year it is contemplated to put all our available funds into this enterprise. The coming of the Dixie into Michigan has inspired and developed other efforts in the same line. Several months ago the various counties near the southern line of the state formed an association to make a paved way from Detroit to Chicago, which will cover the line of the Dixie from Kalamazoo to Niles, the distance being substantially 50 miles.

Calhoun county is putting in this year as a starter two miles of the paved way and at the November election will vote upon the subject of bonding for $600,000 to finish this and other proposed good road projects of the county. At no distant date the matter of bonding in other counties for the same purposes will be voted upon. The day has come when "good roads" are known to be the best investment of any county. When the Dixie Highway has been fully completed it will add thousands of dollars to the value of all real estate situated upon, along or anywhere reasonably near it. It will form the trunk line into which all cross roads will be feeders. This improvement will, in the summer, bring thousands upon thousands of people, traveling by auto, from the south land into this greatest resort region of the world. Southern people cannot help but admire this country and will be anxious to invest in its real estate.

But this is not all. It is not for the pleasure traveler alone that this enterprise will be useful. It will be most valuable to the farmer to put his produce to market, and it is but a short time away from us when the farmer and fruit grower and gardener will, with his own auto truck, be bringing his products to the towns and cities and steam boat landings, the loads being three times as large and moved three times as quickly as with horses.

If a merchant, a breeder or farmer wants goods which can be bought at some other place within 50 miles distance they will not wait the slow freight train on the railroad, one day to put the goods to the train and perhaps many days to transport them, and then more time to bring them from the station, but he will leave with his truck in the morning and be back home with the desired goods in the evening.

The people of northern Michigan should wake up on this question of good roads. No better people live anywhere than right here in Charlevoix county. They do not want to be behind the times, and year after year come in increasing numbers the summer visitors who demand the best things that can be had and are willing to pay for them, but if they find that you are not keeping up with the procession in the building of safe and comfortable highways, you will find many who would otherwise come here will be locating in other communities where good highway accommodations can be found. We must all remember that the pure breezes blow across Lake Michigan all the way from Michigan City, Indiana, to Mackinac City, Michigan, and that place which fits itself to best take care of visitors will get the visitors, and the natural profits which follow their coming. I am glad to know that you have men in this community who see the necessity for work along this line. By the way, do not, under any circumstances, let George H. Van Pelt get away from you. If you find he thinks of going, bind him with ropes and chains and get out an injunction to prevent him from going out of the county. On this good highway proposition he is a host in himself. He has already done a great deal for this county in this line and his heart is in the right spot and he will do more. I don't mean to say that he is the only one who is thoroughly in earnest in this work, but I do mean to say that I would advise every one to stand by him and aid him and inside of four years Charlevoix county will be as noted as one of the best counties in the state for first class highways as it is already noted for being first class in a good many other good things.

We all think railroads are a good thing for a county, and we are much impressed with the thought of how helpless we would be without them. But good highways are just as essential as good railroads. Every pound of freight shipped on a railroad must be first shipped over a highway in order to reach a railroad, and over a highway after it has reached its destination on the railroad, and when you add to this that we are able to ship three or four times as much in the same time over a good highway as over a poor one we begin to realize how valuable good highways are for freight purposes and when we also add to that comfort and convenience and value of good highways for personal travel as well as for other business purposes, we cannot fail to see the value of good roads to a community.

IS IT WORTH WHILE?

Is the anti-tuberculosis propaganda that is being carried on in Michigan and in fact all over the world worth while? Does it bring real results?

In 1900 there were 2,102 deaths from tuberculosis for every million of population in the United States. In 1913 there were only 1,476 deaths for every million. On a basis of 100,000,000 population, the deaths in 1913 were 147,600. If the death rate had continued as in 1900 there would have been 201,200. This means a saving of the difference, or 53,600 lives annually.

That in cold figures is the answer to the question propounded above, "Is it worth while?" That is what has been done through active tuberculosis fighting propaganda in the United States in 13 years.

But if every man, woman and child in this country should observe a few simple health rules, safeguarding himself against the disease, the death rate could be cut down still very much more. For instance, if all would take the trouble to breathe with a large part of their lungs, instead of using only a small portion of them, the tuberculosis germ would have little chance. Most of us use only about one-eighth of our lung capacity in breathing. And it is a law of nature that a part of the body that is not used as it normally should be used deteriorates. With air all about us in such great abundance that it is inexhaustible we manage to get along on just enough to keep the machinery of the body going. And often even this is poisoned because it is breathed over and over again, when fresh, pure air might as well not be had by merely opening a window. Weak lungs are often the result of pure laziness in breathing.

And cleanliness is a great ally in the fight against tuberculosis. Sunlight is the natural enemy of the germ; and plenty of soap and water, plenty of clean air and of everything else that is clean and pure help greatly in this fight. In trains, in public places, on the street, many men have the habit of spitting unconcernedly. And the fact is that hundreds of thousands of people die every year because some one was careless enough to spit on a walk.

This is something to remember: It is from the sputum of consumptives, whether they know they have the disease or not, that the millions of germs come that float about in the air.

And there are many innocent habits that are far from cleanly. A smoker buys a pipe, and before finally selecting one he tries out a dozen or more, sucking each one to see if it suits him. That same pipe has been sucked by many before him. Suppose some of those were consumptives? Or children borrow gum of one another, or they allow others to have a bite off their apple—dangerous practices if one of the children happens to be a consumptive. Children also kiss promiscuously with no thought of danger, and grown-ups are fond of kissing children, especially very small babies. Many a child that could not defend itself has received the kiss of death from an adult consumptive.

DANIELS' DELAY

Josephus Daniels announced that, if the proposed increase to the navy received the approval of congress, he would be ready to ask for bids for the construction of the ships within a week after the bill had been signed by the president.

We are pleased to note this sudden burst of activity on Josephus' part. And in this connection we are prompted to inquire why he has not displayed a like celerity in connection with the two battleships which were authorized nearly 18 months ago, by the congress which passed out on the fourth of March, 1915. Not a stroke of work has been done on those ships, and nothing, even, has been done to prepare for building them in the government navy yards which Daniels has chosen for the work.

If Daniels had been ready, within a week after March 4, 1915, to ask for bids for those ships he would have found the private shipyards of the country in a condition to undertake the contracts and the ships themselves would be now well along in construction. Why did he delay? Was it because he then shared the president's then opinion that the question of the national defence was "merely academic," that only a few "nervous souls" were occupied with the problem, that the matter was "not new," and that it was best to "turn away" from it—as the president did?

And why, may we ask further, is he in such pressing haste now? Is it because he knows that the shipyards are crowded with work, that they cannot take the contracts which he will dangle before their eyes and that he can go to the country with a great, though empty, show of zeal in behalf of the navy?

TREAT THE EDITOR FAIR

There is probably no man engaged in the newspaper business in this state, who is not acquainted with a man whose excuse for discontinuing his subscription is that he "already has more papers than he can read." It is only an excuse offered to ameliorate the presumed lacerated condition of the editor's feelings. It has no such effect, for in the first place an editor never worries over the loss of a subscriber except when he leaves the country without paying up arrears. But why not be truthful and say to the honest newspaper man just what you feel in your heart. Go into his den, ask him how much you owe, pay the delinquency and tell him frankly that you don't want his disreputable, blackguard sheet any longer. Say to him in a sorrowful tone of voice that you deeply regret his inability to publish a newspaper worthy the name and advise him to sell his plant to some man with a thimble full of brains and seek some occupation which does not require much wear or tear of mind. Do this and then go away with the comforting assurance that the editor respects you for your candor and will cherish no hard feelings because you choose to borrow his paper instead of subscribing for it.

When you have read through this issue of the paper just take time enough to let one fact sink into your active brain. The paper on which this issue was printed has cost us approximately double what it cost us two years ago. The ink we used is away up in price. The oil that keeps the press revolving is up in price. The power that moves the machinery is sky high. In fact, every item of expense is up in the clouds and many are away above them, and every dollar of expense means just that amount of money right out of our pocket. A number of subscribers are in arrears on subscription, and we need that money in order to meet the rapidly increasing cost of producing this paper. It is simply thoughtlessness on your part, we know, but our own creditors do not recognize that word. It don't go with them for an instant. Do we get "ours," brother?

Despite the fact that they are beautifully trimmed in Maine and lost a United States senator, a governor and a congressman, there are some democrats who are trying to delude themselves into the belief that Monday's election in Maine presages a democratic victory in November. Champ Clark, speaker of the house of representatives, is not one of the number, however. "We got whipped, and I guess that is all I will say about the Maine election," said Mr. Clark. "We got beaten good and plenty."

Mr. Wilson is so close to the 400,000 trainmen that he can't see the vast army of stockholders and bondholders, and has adopted as his motto a 1916 version of the historic old slogan, "the public be damned."

Speaking about placing the blame for the war, why not make Angola the goat?

Quiet little tip to the Kaiser: Never start anything you cannot finish.

Mr. Wilson's new Golden Rule: "He has done Mexico as he would do us."

On November 7 the "silent vote" is the big noise.

ROAD BUILDERS HOLD MEETING

MAKE RECOMMENDATIONS TO BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

Boyer City to Have Twenty-two Foot Concrete Road—Loop About Completed.

At the regular monthly meeting of the county road commissioners the following was recommended to the board of supervisors to be next on the road program: Completing the road between this city and Charlevoix, Completing the road between East Jordan and Charlevoix, One mile between this city and Boyne Falls, One mile on the Norwood road and two miles on the State road between Boyne City and East Jordan. Other recommendations were made to the board which concern this city; The road starting at the city limits on the Boyne Falls road and passing through this city and out to the city limits on the State street road and the same to be built by the city for the State award. This of course means no expense to the county, the city will do all the work and will receive as pay only the award offered by the state for this kind of highway. The road will likely be built of concrete 22 feet in width and will be built under the direction of the state highway department.

East Jordan and Charlevoix will also have roads of the same character built through their city to connect trunk line highways the same as will most likely be done here. Also it is planned to connect the Charlevoix road and the Boyne Falls road which at the same time will connect the Deer Lake route to East Jordan. When these proposed roads are completed it will mean much to this city and to the county in general. A complete road with the exception of a short piece on the Boyne City-East Jordan road will then be had all the way around Pine Lake. This year has been a good year in the advance of roads but next year promises to outstrip it by considerable if present plans go through and there seems to be no reason why they should not.—Boyer City Bee.

VAN PELT'S TOURING DAIRY NO. 1

We left Charlevoix the Beautiful, Thursday, September 14th, 1916, at nine a. m., made a short stop at my dear old home in Norwood with the sad thought that I'd never make it my home again. I fixed up a few little necessary things for the benefit of the next occupant and left for Manistee, 126 miles from Charlevoix, and at Traverse City, 12:30 p. m., had dinner and left at 2:00 p. m. Passed through Benzonia 3:45, Bear Lake 4:45 and at Manistee 5:45 when we found reasonably comfortable quarters at the cosy little Briny-linn.

The worst roads we struck were between Charlevoix and Norwood, except some short stretches between Eastport and Torch Lake and between Interlochen and Benzonia. If some gravel could now be placed in the low places on the stretch from Lou See's corner and Porter's on the Norwood road, this stretch would last a year or two longer, but as it is now going it will soon go to the bad. On account of the very poor work done on the Norwood road this year—the poorest I ever saw, I advise that no more money be spent on this road until the new county road is built, as it is growing worse and worse every year.

I wish to call the attention of the public to a very dangerous place on this stretch of road. It is at the crossing of the brook at Henry Van Dusen's, about half way from Charlevoix to Norwood. The attention of the town officials was called to this last summer when they were working on the road, to make it as impassable as they know how. It seems that last year the Pathmaster used tile to convey the water instead of building a bridge, but they were short about eight or ten feet in order to make the road as wide as it ought to be. It is now filled in on top of this tile so high that some day after a heavy rain, some big car going at ordinary speed will cause the earth to slide off and away goes Mr. Car. I speak for myself because I came near sliding off myself. Unless soon fixed, the town of Norwood will have a bill of damages to pay in my opinion. Fool luck may save us, as it has many times.

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank all those who ordered furnaces last week, also those who read my ad. It is some job to write an ad, and I always feel good when I am sure that it has been read. I also wish to state that I may have to discontinue the sale of PENINSULAR FURNACES as the coal dealers are making such a fuss. They all claim the sale of a Peninsular Furnace cuts down their output. However, I am determined to sell a few more, so get your order in quick if you need a furnace. Hoping you haven't got a furnace I beg to remain,

SCHOOL COMMISSIONER'S NOTES

The Walker school is to receive its standard plate on Saturday, September 23rd. There is to be a fine program and refreshments in the evening with a general good time for all. Superintendent MacIntosh, of Boyne City, will deliver the address of the evening and Miss Lorraine, of East Jordan, has consented to sing. This district has worked hard and faithfully during the past summer and has spent considerable cash in remodeling the little old school house which their children had inhabited for years and it is a big day in the history of the district. Everyone should turn out.

Advance has adopted and built on a woodshed same as those required in the Superior school in Illinois and the Wildwood school has done the same thing including therein a new well and well house.

The Johnson school reports a new floor and freshly tinted walls. Also they are minus a platform. Delighted that the platform has walked away.

The fair exhibit proved very good particularly for so early in the year. Many of the country schools had not yet opened so there was no leader to send in the exhibit prepared by last year's teacher. Pleasant Valley won first prize in the rural school exhibits, Walloon primary room the second prize and Walker school third. There were a number of individual prizes granted to some happy boys and girls all over the county. We are very sorry that space does not permit publishing the names in this column.

Among the city exhibits Boyne City won first place, East Jordan public schools second and the St. Joseph school of East Jordan third. East Jordan had a better rounded out exhibit than ever before with an added woodwork display, and a very well balanced agricultural exhibit. Boyne City's art was wonderful and the furniture made by her high school boys aroused the admiration of all.

Three of the rural school are figuring on hot noon lunches; that is, one hot drink of soup every noon to go with the dinner the child brings from home.

St. James Hurber school is coming to the front. New windows, freshly tinted walls and seats reset. They have done away with the old trap door and have covered the fire escape.

The Snyder school reports that last spring a new book case walked into the room, a new set of maps appeared and a new dictionary found arrived; also a new drinking fountain is bubbling over with fresh spring water.

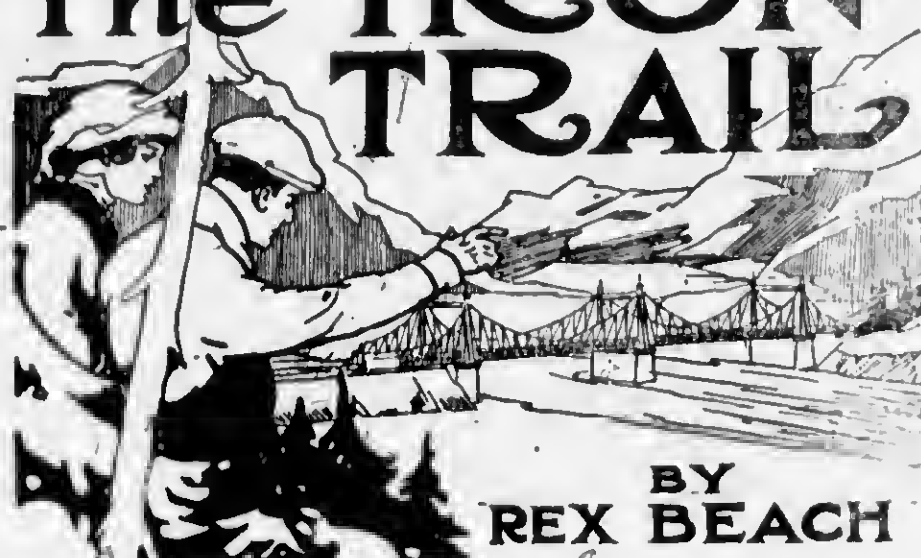

Boyne Falls has added a fourth teacher to the list. They are teaching the entire 11 grades. Things are stirring with pep this year.

The dictionary has come, The globe's here, too, Fountain on the way, Walls tinted, too; This from the German school on the hill, And everything done with a right good will.

Every parent should strive to manage the farm work during school hours without allowing the children to get behind or to lose a single day. The crops are heavy and help is scarce but every school day lesson learned is worth a $10 bill to your boy or your girl. It would be easier to send the boy without it being necessary for the truant officer to bring him.

CHAPTER XXIV.

How a Dream Came True.

MELLEN whirled, the cry and music after her, but he might as well have tried to catch the wind. As she ran she heard her brother shout in sudden alarm and Natalie's voice raised in entreaty, but she sped on under an impulse as irresistible as panic fear. Down through the openings beneath her feet she saw, as in a nightmare, the weeping flood, burdened with plunging ice chunks and decked with foam. She seemed to be suspended above it, yet she was running at reckless speed, dimly aware of the consequences of a misjudged footstep, but fearful only of being overtaken. Suddenly she hated her companions. Her mind was in a furious revolt at their cowardice, their indecision or what ever it was that held them like a group of wooden figures safe on shore while the man whose life was worth all theirs put together exposed himself to needless peril. That he was really in danger she felt sure. She knew that Murray was up to lose himself in his dreams. Perhaps some visionary mood had blinded him to the menace of that mounting ice ridge in front of the glacier. Or had he madly chosen to stand or fall with this structure that meant so much to him? She would make him yield to her own terror, drag him ashore, if necessary, with her own hands.

She stumbled, but saved herself from a fall, then gathered her skirts more closely and rushed on, measuring with instinctive wile the length of every stride. It was not an easy path over which she dashed, for the fies were unevenly spaced. Gaping apertures gave terrible glimpses of the river below, and across these ghastly abysses she had to leap.

The hoarse bursts of shouting from the shore ceased as the gorking he held her flitting out along the steel causeway. They watched her in dumb amazement.

All at once O'Neil saw her and hurried to meet her. "Eliza," he cried, "be careful! What possessed you to do this?" "Come away!" she gasped. "It's dangerous! The jam—look!" She pointed down the channel.

He shook his head impatiently. "Yes," she pleaded. "Yes! Please! They wouldn't come to warn you—they tried to stop me. You must go ashore." The frightened entreaty in her clear, wide open eyes, the disorder that her haste had made affected O'Neil strangely. He stared at her, bewildered, doubtful; then steeled her and groped with his free hand for support. He could feel her trembling wretchedly.

"There's no danger, none whatever," he said soothingly. "Nothing can happen."

"You don't know. The bridge has never been tried. The ice is lurching at it and that jam—if it doesn't burst."

"But it will. It can't last much longer."

"It's rising!"

"To be sure, but the river will overflow the bank."

"Please!" she urged. "You can do no good here. I'm afraid."

He stared at her in the same incredulous bewilderment; some impulse deep within him was struggling for expression, but he could not find words to frame it. His eyes were oddly bright as he smiled at her.

"Won't you go ashore?" she begged. "I'll take you back, of course, but I want to stay and see."

"Then—I'll stay."

heart throbbing and her thoughts seething. She clasped a huge, cold bolt head and clung to it desperately. For the upheaval in her soul rivaled that which had just passed before her eyes. The bridge, the river, the valley itself were gyrating slowly, dizzily.

"Eliza!" She did not answer. "Child!" O'Neil's voice was shaking. "Why did you come to me? Why did you do this mad thing? I saw something in your face that I can't believe—that I can't think possible. It—it gives me courage. If I don't speak quickly I'll never dare. Is it true? Dear girl, can it be? I'm so old—such a poor thing! You couldn't possibly care, and yet why did you come?" The words were torn from him. He was gripped and shaken by a powerful emotion.

She tried to answer, but her lips were numbless. She closed her eyes, and Murray saw that she was wilder than the foam far beneath. He started into the colorless face returned to his until her eyelids fluttered open, and she managed to voice the words that clung in her throat.

"I've always—loved you like this!" He gave a cry like that of a starving man. She felt herself drawn against him. But now he, too, was speechless. "Couldn't you see?" she asked breathlessly.

He shook his head. "I'm such a dreamer. I'm afraid it—can't be true. I'm afraid you'll go away and—leave me. You won't ever—will you, Eliza? I couldn't stand that." Then fresh realization of the truth swept over him. They clung to each other, drunk with ecstasy.

"I thought you cared for Natalie," she said softly after awhile. "It was always you."

"Always?"

"Always!"

She turned her lips to his and lifted her entwining arms.

The breakfast gong had called the men away before the two figures far out upon the bridge picked their way slowly to the shore. The Salmon was still flooded with hurrying masses of ice, as it would continue to be for several days, but it was running free. The channel in front of the glacier was open.

"It was always you."

Blaine was the first to shake O'Neil's hand, for the members of Murray's crew held aloof in some embarrassment.

"It's a perfect piece of work," said he. "I congratulate you."

The others echoed his sentiments faintly, hesitatingly, for they were abashed at what they saw in their chief's face and realized that words were weak and meaningless.

Dan dared not trust himself to speak. He had many things to say to his sister, but his throat ached miserably. Natalie restrained herself only by the greatest effort.

It was Tom Slater who ended the awkward pause by grinning sarcastically. "If all the young lovers are safely ashore, maybe us old men who built the bridge can go and get something to eat."

Murray smiled at the girl beside him. "I'm afraid they've guessed our secret, don't you?"

"Secret?" Slater rolled his eyes. "There isn't over a couple thousand people beside us that saw you put the bridge on. I guess she was out of breath and couldn't say no."

Eliza gasped and died to her brother's arms.

"Slut! Poor little Slut!" Dan cried, and two tears stole down his brown cheeks. "Isn't this—just great?" Then the others burst into a noisy expression of their gladness.

Happy Tom reminded them all peacefully. "I feel bound to warn you," he said at length. "That marriage is an awful gamble. It isn't what it seems."

"It is!" Natalie declared. "It's better, and you know it."

"It turned out all right for me," Tom acknowledged. "Because I got the best woman in the world. But"—he eyed his chief uneasily—"I went about it in a modest way. I didn't humiliate her in public."

He turned impatiently upon his companions, still pouring out their babble of congratulations.

"Come, along, can't you?" he cried. "and leave 'em alone? I'm a dyspeptic old married man, but I used to be young and affectionate. Like Murray. After breakfast I'm going to ruble Mrs. Slater to come and bring the kids with her and watch her hobnobbing, twaddling husband build the rest of this railroad. I'm getting chuck full of romance."

"It has been a tremendous morning for me," said Murray after a time. "and the greatest miracle is you, dear."

"This is just the way the story ended in my book," Eliza told him happily. "our book."

He pressed her closer. "Yes, our book, our bridge, our everything, Eliza."

She hid her blushing face against his shoulder, then with thumb and finger drew his ear down to her lips. Summoning her courage, she whispered: "Murray, dear, won't you call me—Violet?"

Booze Causes Another Cripple for Life.

The demon drink has added another name to the already million-long list of unfortunates who will be crippled for the balance of their lives. Another dependent added to the burden of citizenship.

One day last week John Soudusky, a lumberman employed by the B. C. Lumber Co. at Camp 10, attempted to alight from a moving train at Boyne Falls. He was in an intoxicated condition and fell beneath the wheels. One leg was crushed and a foot mutilated. He was brought to the Boyne City hospital where he is resting.

With almost daily incidents recounted in the papers where booze has been the cause of serious accidents, some newspapers, supposedly consecrated to the uplift, protection and moral development of mankind, will prostitute their advertising columns by accepting "wet" advertising.

Held back from fighting editorially, for the wet regime through fear or acknowledgement that the saloon is a menace to civilization, they will yet sell the principles of the paper for the paucity dollar.

The time is not far distant when this will prove unprofitable for clean advertisers are beginning to demand that their messages to the people be not associated with the unclean attempts of that ring which will wreck homes, crush hearts, debauch minds and cripple bodies to gain blood-money over the bar. Business men and private citizens are awaking to the fact that in supporting such publications, through advertising or subscriptions, they are indirectly assisting the brewers and distillers to wage war for votes—Are furnishing the enemy with ammunition, as it were.—Boyne Citizen.

Death of Pioneer Farmer.

Henry Bacon, one of the best known pioneer farmers of Resort township, and who has been a resident there for more than 37 years, died at his home Wednesday of last week from heart failure and pneumonia of one leg.

Mr. Bacon was born at Hamilton, Ont., October 11, 1839, and was married to Miss Elizabeth Couch, at Walkerton, Ont., January 27, 1863.

They moved to Petoskey 37 years ago this summer and took up their home on a farm on Walloon Lake. There they made their home during all their years of residence in Resort township.

Mrs. Bacon died there 12 weeks ago. Mr. Bacon was the youngest of a family of 11 children, all of whom are dead.

Mr. Bacon is survived by eight children, Albert and Joseph Bacon and Mrs. Lillie Wheaton, of Boyne City; Mrs. Jennie Morford, of Huston; Mrs. Missie Bacon, of Mrs. Emma Pagel and Mrs. Lucy Wheaton, all of Resort township.

The funeral was held at 10:30 o'clock Thursday from the Resort M. E. church.

Serious Runaway Accident.

Saturday afternoon at Harbor Springs, James Perry's team ran away and came down the west hill at break neck speed, narrowly missing several autos and other rigs. They were unable to make the turn at the foot of the west hill and as a result plunged headlong against the side of the Burrows feed barn with such force that it actually broke off the studding and stove in the side of the barn. Mr. Perry was thrown out and rendered unconscious and one of the horses was so badly injured that there is little hope of its recovery.

Indian Girl Lost in Woods.

Mary Sabm, of Burt Lake, employed at the Buckeye House, at Pellston, disappeared Saturday evening of last week while on her way home from the hotel, a distance of about a mile. Searching parties were out Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night without success. Monday morning about one o'clock she wandered into the home of Joseph Allen, four miles south of Burt Lake school house, her clothing torn into shreds and her mind a blank in regard to her wanderings. She is suffering from pains in her head, and it is thought she fell, the injury causing her to lose her mind.

Lifts Ton of Ingots.

More than a ton of iron is lifted at a time by a huge magnet at the Boyne City Chemical company's foundry. The magnet is operated on a huge crane and when it swings down into a pile of ingots the electricity is turned on. After the metal has been lifted into the car the electricity is turned off and the magnet releases its load. In an hour a car can thus be loaded, saving the work of many men each day.

Escapes Through Window.

William McDonald, of 814 Michigan street, Petoskey, was compelled to crawl through a window of his residence early Tuesday morning of last week when fire spreading through the lower floor rooms cut off all other avenues of escape.

Mr. McDonald had built a fire at about five o'clock in the stove, and then returned to his room again. He was awakened by the flames but found the doorway blocked. The fire practically destroyed the residence. The firemen were called but the flames had spread to all parts of the house.

Runaway Horses Cause Broken Leg.

W. A. Mundy, on R. F. D. 4, Boyne City, is nursing a broken leg resulting from injuries received when his team of horses ran away.

Mr. Mundy was hauling water in barrels when the accident occurred. He had placed one barrel on the wagon and returned for another when the barrel rolled off, striking the heels of the horses. The frightened animals bolted, before the driver could control them.

Both bones of the leg were broken just above the ankle. The wagon and harness were badly damaged.

Trunks, suit cases, leather bags, grips—everything in this line. Benj. Brown. Adv. 356f

A Mean Advantage.

In a breach of promise case the bar-ter, who held the brief for injured beauty, arranged that his fair client should be so placed that her charms should be well under the observation of the jury. He began a most pathetic appeal by directing their attention to her beauty and calling for justice upon the head of him who could wound the heart and betray the confidence of one so fair, concluding with a peroration of such pathos as to melt the court to tears. The counsel for the defendant then rose, and after paying the lady the compliment of admitting that it was impossible not to assent to the eulogiums lavished upon her face he added that nevertheless he felt bound to ask the jury not to forget that she wore a wooden leg. Then he sat down. The important fact, of which the fair plaintiff's counsel was unaware, was presently established, and the jury, feeling rather sheepish at their tears, assessed damages at the smallest amount.

Coffee made in the Universal Percolator

Loses no aroma in steam

The best coffee pot is the one which automatically completes the process before the water boils, and the "Universal" is the only one that fills this requirement. This is the perfection of the drip process, circulating six to ten times as much water as any other percolator, consequently extracting a greater amount of the aromatic properties of the coffee.

CLEAN FLUES BEFORE FIRING UP

FIRE MARSHALL GIVES CITIZENS GOOD ADVICE

Fears Many Homes May Be Damaged or Destroyed Unless Precautions Are Taken.

With the first cold blasts of autumn here Fire Marshall John T. Winship fears that damage to homes will follow the first attempt to start the furnace or stove unless the householder takes due precautions. He therefore has sent out the following special bulletin:

"It is now but a short time until you will start your stoves and furnaces. Has the chimney been cleaned and are you absolutely sure that it is safe, no cracks or defects? Is the stove in first class condition? Is there a metal board underneath the stove and is all woodwork protected from a hot fire in the stove? Is the stovepipe in good condition, well put up and wired? Just a little common sense and safety measures now may prevent your home from being destroyed by fire and the lives of your family sacrificed.

"Reports coming from the state fire marshal from different sections of the state show an unusually large number of fires and thousands of dollars of farm property destroyed by sparks from threshing machine engines. Entire crops and all farm buildings have been destroyed in many instances. A reasonable amount of care and precaution will prevent these fires. Every threshing engine should have a good spark arrester and the outfit should be so placed that the wind will not carry sparks toward the barns or stacks. Smoking in or around the barns or near the stacks of grain should be absolutely prohibited. A few barrels and pails of water or several chemical fire extinguishers should be kept handy in case of accident."

Look into this

Several days ago we received a letter from a customer. In this letter was a short story regarding an old resident of West Virginia who had never seen a railroad train.

Some friends drove him thirty miles to a railroad station, arriving just in time to see the New York-Chicago Limited load and unload its human cargo. Uncle Silas looked the train over, and said, "Fellers they'll never start her."

Just then the train pulled out, and went thundering down the Monongahela Valley. Old Silas stood silent, watching and said, "Fellers, they'll never stop her."

This story reminded us of the attitude of some people toward home flour. That others use it, that thousands of barrels are manufactured and sold each year, does not convince them that by using it they are getting a better bread, whiter, better tasting and cheaper.

It costs in car lots 37c to pay the freight on a barrel of flour from Minneapolis here.

It costs some of the companies there 25c per barrel advertising.

It cost 10c per barrel to get the wheat to Minneapolis to grind.

These costs are saved on home wheat and flour.

Try and be convinced.

KEPT US OUT OF WHAT WAR?

IS QUESTION ASKED ABOUT STATEMENT MADE

No Act of President Wilson Prevented Participation in Present European Conflict.

Sometimes you hear men, sensible men, too, say, "I'm going to vote for Wilson this year because he kept us out of war."

Ask such men a short question. Ask them, "Out of what war?"

Did Mr. Wilson keep us out of the European war? No. He has himself in a formal address to congress spoken of the European war as "a war with which we have nothing to do, a war whose causes do not touch us." How could Mr. Wilson keep us out of a war with which we have nothing to do and whose causes do not touch us?

Did he keep the rest of the western hemisphere out of the European war? No independent nation on this side of the world is involved in it; the only people in it are the colonies of European powers and they had no voice in their fate, for they were automatically at war when their mother governments went to war. Who kept Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, out of the European war? Did Mr. Wilson?

Did Mr. Wilson keep us out of war with Mexico? No. In his term more Americans have been killed by Mexicans and more American property has been destroyed by Mexicans than by Spaniards during the whole Spanish war. In his term we have seized a Mexican port and have sent our entire regular army and militia to fight Mexicans. In his term Mexican armed forces have invaded American soil and fought battles against our people within our boundaries.

President Taft went through two Mexican revolutions during his term, the revolution against Diaz and the revolution against Madero. American lives were safe in Mexico during that time. No Mexican cities were seized by Americans and no armed Mexicans invaded the United States while Mr. Taft was in the White House. Yet Mr. Taft never thought of asking the American people to vote for him because he kept us out of war with Mexico. He put an embargo on arms so that American weapons would not be sent across the boundary, and he refused to interfere in Mexican affairs. When he left office Mexicans liked Americans and Americans were safe in Mexico. Since he left office Mexicans hate Americans and Americans dare not remain in Mexico. Did Mr. Wilson keep us out of war with Mexico? Not if words mean anything.

Mr. Wilson did not keep us out of the European war and he did not keep us out of war with Mexico.

Out of what war, then?—Detroit Free Press.

MEET IT DOLLAR FOR DOLLAR

FEDERAL AID ROAD LAW AND ITS REQUIREMENTS

Wonderful Opportunity for Charlevoix County to Obtain Financial Assistance in Road Building.

The Federal Aid Road Law, recently enacted by congress, apportions to Michigan during the next five years $2,186,755.80. This money can be obtained only by meeting it dollar for dollar, thus insuring the spending of at least $4,373,511.60 on federal aided roads during that period.

What an opportune time for Charlevoix county to get in line and receive the benefit of a goodly portion of this vast sum. Think what it means. For instance, if Charlevoix county should bond, say for $200,000 for road building, the same amount would be added from the above fund making a total of $400,000, to be expended on our roads.

Just figure for a minute or two, and estimate the mileage, or in other words, the number of miles of roads that could be built for this sum? The average cost of concrete roads per mile is estimated at near $7,000. With a modern equipment, this cost can be greatly reduced. With $400,000 available cash for use based on the above figures, 67 miles of concrete road could be built. Imagine if you can, what the result would be—the increase in land values, the hundreds of summer tourists called here by the resulting beautiful drives, the general prosperous condition of the entire community.

The past season has plainly demonstrated how popular Charlevoix and surrounding country has become as a place to spend the summer months. It has been the biggest season experienced here in years and indications are that each succeeding year will see a proportionate increase. With the building of a number of miles of good roads, can you imagine the result?

The apportionment of this vast sum of money for road building in Michigan is not a dream, but an

Says a Glass of Hot Water Every Morning Before Breakfast Will Take Off Fat If You Get More Fresh Air

Be Moderate in Your Diet and Reduce Your Weight with Tassco

Lack of fresh air weakens the oxygen-carrying power of the blood, the liver becomes sluggish, fat accumulates and the action of many of the vital organs are hindered thereby. The heart action becomes weak, work is an effort and the beauty of the figure is destroyed.

Fat put on by indoor life is unhealthy and if nature is not assisted in throwing it off by increasing the oxygen-carrying power of the blood, a serious case of obesity may result. When you feel that you are getting too stout, take the matter in hand at once. Don't wait until your figure has become a joke and your health ruined through carrying around a burden of unsightly and unhealthy fat.

Spend as much time as you possibly can in the open air; breathe deeply and get from any druggist a box of tassco, take a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast then take tassco after each meal and at bedtime.

Weigh yourself every few days and keep up the treatment until you are down to normal. Tassco is absolutely harmless, is pleasant to take, helps the digestion and is designed to increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood.

Even a few days' treatment should show a noticeable reduction in weight. There is nothing better for obesity.

actual fact. And to be sure, there will be a scramble throughout the state for a portion of it, but regardless of this, Charlevoix county, with her wonderful resources and road building material, can, with but little effort get a liberal slice of this huge plum.

Think it over seriously, tax payers and land owners, and get busy at once. Agitate the question of bonding the county for at least $200,000 or even more, if desired, and thus give Charlevoix county the reputation of having the best roads of any county in northern Michigan. The result will be the best investment ever made.

Plans for the distribution of this money will be discussed at a meeting of all county road commissioners in the state, to be held at Lansing, Wednesday, September 27. Charlevoix will be represented by Commissioner O. D. Hammond, as well as representative men from other section of this territory. New legislation may be necessary, and if so, this will be discussed at the meeting.

Interview the commissioners, assure them of your support in a movement for good roads, and make it a point that Charlevoix county will be in line for her share of Michigan's appropriation.

ABOLITION OF THE SALOO

Read the Proposed Amendment and Learn the True Facts.

For the benefit of thousands of voters who heretofore have not been prohibitionists or total abstainers. It is stated that the present Michigan dry campaign has only one aim: "Abolition of the licensed saloon as a commercialized institution," according to a dry leader at Lansing.

Even in Kansas if a man wants to drink a barrel of booze a day he may do so under the law. The same will be true of Michigan, if the state wide amendment is adopted.

This statement is made in reply to questions coming from several counties. Campaign workers find citizens who wish to vote for state-wide prohibition, provided the amendment is limited to the saloon as an institution. They do not favor absolute curtailment of the liberty of the individual.

The Webb-Kenyon law has been construed by the United States Supreme Court to regulate interstate shipments only. This law in every case recognizes the law of the state into which liquor is to be shipped. The proposed amendment to the Michigan constitution provides as follows:

Article XVI, Section 11. The manufacture, sale, keeping for sale, giving away, bartering or furnishing of any vicious, malt, brewed, fermented, spirituous or intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, scientific or sacramental purposes, shall be after April 30, 1918, prohibited in the state forever. The Legislature shall by law provide regulations for the sale of such liquors for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, scientific and sacramental purposes.

Hence it will be seen that the liquor forces are contradicting themselves when in the same breath they demand personal liberty rather than prohibition and also declare that "prohibition leaks" because it permits individuals to ship liquor on their own responsibility into a dry state or county.

A London writer says that the name Quaker "sprang from the lips of a local Justice Shallow." This name was one Bennett of Derby. Says Drink Water If You Wish To Grow Fat And Plump

THIN MEN AND WOMEN

Do You Want to Get Fat and Be Strong?

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract properly assimilates the food you eat. Drink a glass of cold water four or five times a day and take the following preparation known to reliable druggists almost everywhere, which seemingly embodies the missing elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This preparation is called TONOLINE, and much remarkable testimony is given as to its successful use in flesh building. TONOLINE which comes in the form of a small non-injurious tablet, taken at meals and mixed with the digesting food, tends to prepare fat, flesh and muscle building elements so that the blood can readily accept and carry them to the starved portion of the body. You can readily picture the transformation that additional and previously lacking flesh making material should bring to your cheeks, filling out hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappearing, and your taking on from 15 to 30 pounds of solid healthy flesh. TONOLINE is harmless, inexpensive, efficient. All druggists have it and are authorized to refund your money if weight increase is not obtained as per the guarantee found in each large package.

Caution:—TONOLINE is recommended only as a flesh builder and while excellent results in cases of nervous indigestion, etc., have been reported, care should be taken about using it unless a gain of weight is desired.

W PROHIBITION WORKS

Some Very Interesting Facts Gathered By a Michigan Editor.

Port Huron, Mich.—Louis A. Well, editor of the Port Huron Times-Herald, returned recently from a trip to the Pacific coast, bringing several interesting incidents which show that prohibition is taken very seriously in Oregon.

"They told me," said Mr. Well, "that few people in Oregon believe the lumber camps could be run without booze, on account of the wild and irresponsible nature of the workmen. Since January 1 it has been proved that a lumber camp in Oregon not only can retain its full force of men under prohibition methods, but that much greater efficiency and general content is the result of saloon abolition."

"A striking incident in Portland came to my attention from the social welfare department. A day nursery was established some time ago in which mothers could leave their babies while they went out to work. Since prohibition went into effect this nursery has practically lost its patronage. The mothers do not have to work because the husbands now have jobs."

"The pleasures of a people are not unimportant. In Seattle I found one of the leading hotels managed by a man who fought prohibition hard. He had been conducting dances for the public and of course there were convivial features to connection. When I stopped at the hotel the people were dancing in the evening and having a thorough good time, though without the attendant inspiration of alcoholic beverages and without the other objectionable results which frequently follow public dances. "Altogether the dry regime seemed to be thoroughly welcome wherever I went in Washington and Oregon."

ANALYZING WET STATEMENTS

Liquor Withdrawn From Bond Not Wholly For Drink.

Some advocates of prohibition he come discouraged when they read in the public prints that notwithstanding the facts that prohibition has become effective in seven states since July 1, 1915, the internal revenue office reports an increase in revenue from distilled spirits of ten million dollars, and an increase of about seven and one-half million gallons of liquors distilled between January 1, 1915, and June 3, 1916.

The liquor journals are loudly proclaiming that this means an increased consumption of liquor despite the prohibition victories. But these figures need to be explained and the explanation falls to prove the liquor traffic's contention, says the American Issue.

First. The Internal Revenue department admits that at least one-half of this increase in revenue is due to increased efficiency in collecting.

Second. This revenue is collected by the government when the liquor is withdrawn from the bonded warehouses, and much has been withdrawn during the past year because the time limit for storage of these bonded warehouses had expired.

Third. Withdrawal from bond and the payment of the government tax is never proof that the liquor has been consumed. It is often withdrawn because of time expiration and placed in private warehouses, much of it is shipped abroad, much is used in the arts and sciences. The National Liquor Dealers' Journal of July 12, 1916, on page 8, says: "Withdrawal from bond may not mean increased consumption."

Fourth. The fact must also be borne in mind that since the opening of the European War many of our distilleries have been kept busy distilling spirits to be used in making high explosives. Tons of thousands of barrels have been shipped to Europe and blown into the air, and not consumed here as a beverage. This increased production the liquor traffic would have us believe means an increased consumption. Do not be deceived.

Fifth. Mida's Criterion, the great distillers' organ, recently sent out a blind ballot to the distillers, asking a vote as to whether or not they believed in a curtailment of the amount of liquor to be distilled during the next year and 100 voted for producing a smaller amount and 21 voted against it; thus 81 per cent of the distillers believe it is poor business policy not to curtail the production of distilled liquors.

Would these distillers favor a smaller output if the demand for their goods were keeping pace with the past production, or if the consumption were really increasing?

No one knows as well as the makers of liquor how the demand for liquor in this country is decreasing, and how the amount consumed is largely diminished.

A perusal of the liquor journals of the nation reveals the fact that the liquor trade is bad and growing worse, and liquor stock is low. Prohibition is really prohibiting and rapidly lessening the amount of liquor consumed.

BROME GRASS CORRECT NAME

IN GRASS CONTEST AT COUNTY FAIR

Name Guessed Correctly by Four People—Make a Fine Forage Crop.

In the exhibit of the agricultural department of the East Jordan high school at the Charlevoix county fair, a premium of $1.00 was offered for the correct name of the grass exhibited there. The correct name of this is Brome Grass, which was guessed correctly by four people: William Severance, Leonard Hite, C. J. Malpass, William Kenny.

This grass drew considerable attention, and a description of it is given, herewith:

Brome grass is a native of Europe, from which country it was introduced into the United States at a comparatively recent date. It is a deep-rooting, stoloniferous grass, with an abundance of root leaves and a good supply of stem leaves. The stems are erect, from 2 1-2 to 4 feet tall, bearing a spreading head from 6 to 10 inches long. The grain or seed is about one-fourth of an inch in length and is brown in color.

Brome grass is of such recent introduction into this country that its value is not yet well understood. It seems to be unquestionably the best tame pasture grass for the great plains region and the Pacific northwest, and it is of more or less value throughout the north central and northeastern states. Its numerous deep roots enable it to withstand drouth better than any of our other cultivated grasses, which explains its value in the great plains and intermountain districts. It has been cultivated for many centuries in southern and central Russia, in a climate very similar to our great plains region.

The method of seeding is not different from that which is common with timothy. It does much better on loam or clay soils than on those of a sandy nature. It grows fairly well on sandy soils, however, when once established, the difficulty being to prevent injury from blowing sands until a sod is formed. The usual rate of seeding is from 15 to 20 pounds to the acre when sown alone; when sown in mixtures, six to ten pounds are sufficient.

The best use of Brome grass is for the production of pasturage in the great plains and Rocky Mountain states. It is useful there also as a hay grass, particularly for the first two years after seeding, for it produces an abundance of hay until it becomes sodbound. It is one of the most palatable of grasses, cattle eating it in preference to blue grass.

It is also of value in improving worn-out lands, since it produces a large quantity of stems and roots and adds materially to the vegetable matter in the soil.

In permanent Brome grass meadows, the sodbound condition which is likely to develop may be prevented by thorough disking without plowing at intervals of a year or two. Pastures will also be improved by disking.

In sowing Brome grass care should be taken to obtain seed which is free from quack grass. Seed samples may be sent for analysis to the agricultural department at the Michigan Agricultural college.

At this time will occur the dedication of the Elephant Butte dam, the greatest irrigation reservoir in the world. Commissioner Hammond named the following men to represent the county: William Withers, Marion township; Robert W. Paddock, Charlevoix; D. S. Payton; East Jordan; E. E. Stroud, Hayes township, and E. Nearer Together Than Ever

That tells the story of the relations existing between this store and its customers. It is not an idle statement. It is a fact, evidenced by the constantly increasing volume of our business from month to month, of the steady stream of new customers who are finding their way to our doors who are telling others of the splendid values we are giving six days in the week.

Just now we are placing before you some very attractive offerings for the summer trade. They have been carefully selected with a view to meeting every possible requirement, and we invite you to see them.
